‡A. B. C. April 1st, 1919.

New England is a great Market for bonds and good securities and for books and periodicals that are advertised in the Daily newspapers.

Many of the leading periodicals and most of the first sellers in fiction have the newspapers to credit with their basic growth, to say nothing of the intervals when publicity of that sort was an Essential and a Recourse.

One issue of the Daily newspapers of New England amounts to nearly double the circulation, in New England, of all the leading magazines, and the rate is small, comparatively. To use a magazine to advertise New England, you must advertise to all the balance of the United States at the same time and pay for one small page about what five big pages would cost in all the New England E. L. Dailies—A whole year's advertising as against one shot!

In New England papers you can cover all New England and know what it has cost you for New England, and you can do it section by section, intensely, and close work the trade at the same time.

Fancy a big local advertiser missing a CHANCE to advertise in his daily paper! Why he figures such advertising as essential and necessary, quite as much so as his rent.

Land Here

No equal area is enjoying more substantial prosperity than Cleveland and Northern Ohio.

In this territory are some of the country's most important manufacturing centers—some of its richest farm land. A dozen live cities like Akron (160,000 population), Youngstown (130,000), Canton (85,000), scores of live towns like Zanesville (32,000), Sandusky (26,500) and Ashtabula (23,000), are within a hundred miles of Cleveland, and this 2,800,000 population territory can all be covered by one newspaper—THE CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER. No other paper reaches so many first class homes in Cleveland and Northern Ohio. You can land this market through THE PLAIN DEALER alone.

MOVE IN CONGRESS TO CREATE FEDERAL BUREAU TO CONDUCT ADVERTISING AND PUBLICITY

Senator Cummins' Bill Provides for Expert Direction and Cabinet Member Board—Paid Advertising for Departmental Enterprises—Would Promote Foreign Relations Through Advertising—Means to Enforce Honest Advertising

By Robert T. Barry.
(Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, June 3.—Senator Albert S. Cummins, of Iowa, president pro tem. of the Senate, has made a definite move looking to the creation of a special Government bureau to scientifically apply advertising methods to the enterprises of the various federal departments, thus giving tangible expression to a policy which has long been advocated by Editor and Publisher and leading advertising men who hold that State advertising, as has so remarkably been demonstrated abroad, is the short, economical and effective route to certain public understanding of governmental policies and purposes—basis of a true democracy.

Senator Cummins is determined to urge the passage of a bill which he says would mean a greatly to be desired system of bringing the Government's publicity ventures to a distinctively business basis, coupling economy with efficiency.

Will Get Action

By reason of his influence in the Senate and the general agreement in Congress that some steps are necessary to co-ordinate the publicity activities of the various departments, Senator Cummins is in a position to get action on his bill. It has been referred to the Committee on Commerce, which will take it up at an early date.

The Cummins bill is important, first because it recognizes publicity by direct statute as a definite function of the Government and not a temporary war measure nor something dependent upon the individual viewpoint of department heads or bureau chiefs. It recognizes paid advertising as an essential part of the Government's publicity and proposes a systematic administration of the matter.

The Cummins bill provides for the creation of a Bureau of Publicity in the Department of Commerce. The very next sentence then reads:

"That a director of suitable knowledge and experience in the business or profession of advertising be appointed by the President to administer the affairs of the Bureau of Publicity under the general direction of the Secretary of Commerce."

An Advisory Board

Senator Cummins would have an advisory board composed of all members of the Cabinet to be known as the Publicity Conference Board, its purpose being to give "instructions, information and suggestions" to the Director of Publicity.

SENATOR A. B. CUMMINS

Not only would paid advertising campaigns be conducted by this bureau in behalf of the War and Navy Departments in the matter of obtaining enlistments, the Interior Department on all public land openings and other questions requiring public interest, the Agriculture Department in connection with farming, marketing and other bulletins, the Treasury Department "for the disposal of United States bonds and other purposes, but certain other definite functions related to development of foreign trade through dissemination of advertising information for American commercial interests would be delegated to the bureau. Commercial information forwarded to Washington by American consuls throughout the world would be published by the Government through the medium of publicity and advertising for the benefit of American business. Advertising campaigns would be conducted in foreign countries to "promote prestige and public favor for American colleges, institutions and merchandise."

To Coordinate Effort

There appears to be small room to doubt that the Cummins bill will receive consideration at an early date as part of the general program of Congress to inquire into the various publicity activities of the Government which at present are regarded as involving too heavy expenditures, duplication of effort and in some instances a lack of appreciation on the part of the men in charge of what constitutes legitimate publicity by the Federal departments.

The Senate Committee on Printing, headed by Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, a newspaper man of many years' experience, is in favor of some steps to co-ordinate the various publicity agencies and to establish a definite policy of publicity and advertising.

The text of the Cummins bill follows:

Bill's Full Text

"A BILL"

"To establish a Bureau of Publicity in the Department of Commerce to have charge of all the advertising of the Federal Government; to secure greater publicity for information intended for the general public and coming from the various departments of the Government; to advise and counsel with all private interests regarding foreign advertising; and to co-operate with organized advertising interests of the Nation in promoting and in securing legislation to compel adherence to honesty and reliability in the advertising of all firms and individuals throughout the Nation.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and is hereby, created a Bureau of Publicity in the Department of Commerce.

"Sec. 2. That a director of suitable knowledge and experience in the business or profession of advertising be appointed by the President to administer the affairs of the Bureau of Publicity under the general direction of the Secretary of Commerce. The compensation for the Director of the Bureau of Publicity shall be $6,000 per annum.

VICTORY IN SIGHT AFTER A LONG FIGHT!

IN the issue dated April 21, 1917, EDITOR & PUBLISHER printed an editorial suggesting a Department of Advertising for the Government. The vital need of the nation for an advertising policy and program directed by the ablest man to be found for the work, was pointed out.

For more than a year previous to that time EDITOR & PUBLISHER had been urging upon the Government a paid advertising policy. It was early in 1916 that a committee had waited upon the President to assure him that the newspapers and periodicals of the country would donate $50,000,000 worth of advertising space for use in promoting the mobilization of the nation's industries for possible war tasks.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER at that time opposed vigorously the proposition to donate advertising space to the Government—opposed it on principle, and because it served to classify advertising space as a thing of doubtful value, not a service-creating force to be purchased on the same business basis governing the purchase of other things needed by the Government.

Throughout the period of the war EDITOR & PUBLISHER continued to urge upon the Washington Government the adoption of a sane and sensible policy of paid advertising—through which the great bond sales might have been conducted in a business-like way, without waste or duplication of effort and without unjustly taxing the generosity of individuals.

The prospect, now bright, for the creation of a Department of Advertising, or—failing in that—the adoption of definite and adequate advertising policies by the various Departments of the Government, is particularly gratifying to this journal as illustrating the victory of common sense over intrenched precedents.

individuals, institutions, and firms at all times free of charge, except where the gathering of such information and data involves considerable expense, as in the case of costly printed matter or books, in which latter case a reasonable charge may be made, the same to be regulated at the discretion of the Director of the Bureau of Publicity.

Foreign Service

"(b) It shall be the duty of the Bureau of Publicity to have in its employ assistants who have acquired expert knowledge of advertising in foreign countries, and it shall be the duty of the expert assistants to give counsel free of charge at any time concerning these matters to private firms and individuals who desire to promote their trade or service in foreign countries.

"SEC. 9. That the Bureau of Publicity shall employ such advertising or publicity as may promise to be most effective to disseminate among the United States valuable information and data supplied by American consuls in foreign countries as to opportunities existing in those countries for the extension of American commercial or other interests. A special appropriation shall be estimated and requested for this purpose by the Director of the Bureau of Publicity and included in the general appropriation allowed annually by Congress for the administration of the bureau, and subject to the approval of the Publicity Conference Board.

To Promote Honesty

"SEC. 10. That, subject to the approval and direction of the Publicity Conference Board, the Bureau of Publicity shall study means for and suggest and conduct advertising or publicity campaigns in various foreign countries to promote proper and public favor in said various foreign countries for American colleges, institutions, merchandise, and service of all kinds which it may deem to promote abroad. A special appropriation shall be estimated and requested for this purpose by the Director of the Bureau of Publicity and included in the general annual appropriation allowed by Congress for the work of the bureau and subject to the approval of the Publicity Conference Board.

"SEC. 11. That the Bureau of Publicity shall co-operate with all organized advertising interests in promoting and in securing legislation to compel honesty and reliability in both the domestic and foreign advertising of all firms, individuals, and institutions, and is authorized to employ counsel or experts in the furtherance of this work, subject to the approval of the Publicity Conference Board.

"SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage."

PREDICT A BIG A. B. C. ATTENDANCE

Arrangements Rapidly Being Finished Motion Will Be Made to Have A. B. C. Show Net Amount of Circulation Money Derived by Publishers.

CHICAGO, June 4.—Plans are rapidly maturing for the sixth annual convention of the members of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, to be held in the Hotel La Salle, June 19 and 20, a record-breaking attendance being forecasted. The fifth anniversary of the founding of this institution, which has proved itself of such vital importance to the advertising and publishing industry, is to be celebrated on this occasion.

June 19 will be devoted to divisional meetings, whereat various classes of publishers and advertising interests will discuss their various interests. The convention really will open at 10 o'clock on June 20.

Among the more important topics to be considered will be change of the by-laws, revisions having been suggested by legal advisers after months of study. These have been endorsed by a majority vote of the Class A members and come up at the convention for final ratification.

Among the motions which it is expected will be made from the floor is one demanding that the A. B. C. show the net amount of money derived by publishers from subscriptions.

The William Weld Company, Limited, London, Can., has filed notice that at the meeting it will move that the following resolution be inserted in Publishers' Statements and Auditors' Reports:

"What have been your total cash receipts from subscriptions for the period covered by this statement or report?

"Were these cash receipts banked regularly for verification?"

There will also be a motion concerning the increase of newspaper members on the Board of Directors.

The annual dinner promises to be a big event. Four speakers of national fame will be on the program. The new Chicago Advertising Council will be the hosts. Every minute of the dinner will be worth while, socially as well as educationally. It promises to be the big advertising and publishing event of the year in Chicago.

Taylor With Nichols Agency

CHICAGO, June 4.—A. B. Taylor, formerly sales manager and assistant to the president of the Gossard Company, Inc., has joined the Charles F. W. Nichols Agency organization. He will serve as a vice-president and devote his time to merchandising problems. J. B. Kerrott, late of Nichols, Mitchell & Faust, has been added to the copy staff, and D. E. Caesar, arriving this week from France, returns to the copy department. The following plans have been chosen for the agency: President, Charles F. W. Nichols; vice-presidents, A. B. Taylor and Frank L. Blake; secretary-manager, Wallace Meyer.

PRINTING CAPACITY OF NATION'S NEWSPAPERS TAXED BY UNPRECEDENTED ADVERTISING

Volume of Business Breaking All Records—National Advertising Leads the Lineage Gains Everywhere—Basic Trade Conditions Soundly Support Prediction of Most Prosperous Summer and Fall—Big Demand for Machinery and Supplies

By Marlen Pew

REPORTS from all sections of the United States agree that the great post-war advertising bulge is continuing without sign of abatement, newspaper lineage records being broken in all principal cities.

There is every indication, according to most conservative and best informed agency men and publishers, that the summer of 1919 will see publication of the largest volume of space advertising ever experienced while far-sighted men are looking for a phenomenal fall volume and are making preparations now to meet the emergency.

The flood which began to sweep immediately the armistice was signed has increased until many newspapers have reached the limit of their advertising capacity and are rejecting business. Eight and ten page newspapers have jumped to 16 to 20 pages on three and four days of the week. Newspapers with immense circulation and publishing at 2 cents the copy have leaped to 32 pages to 40 pages several times a week. That which is true of evening papers is equally true of morning newspapers and the Sunday issues of nearly the entire list of American cities have scarcely ever been equalled for size and never for volume of regular advertising carried.

National Business Leads

The biggest gain is in national advertising. Lineage reports which have been analyzed by Editor & Publisher show that in the month of April, 1919, many newspapers increased their national advertising business from 20 to 50 per cent over the corresponding month last year. The average gain must be in the neighborhood of 35 to 40 per cent among all of the newspapers of the country, judging by reports from typical cities.

Lineage statistics from all sections of the country for May are not yet available, but advertising in individual newspapers, as checked up by Editor & Publisher indicates that May registered the high-water mark in all history for volume.

New York City figures are fairly typical of the general condition and the striking fact is that the total lineage of the sixteen dailies reporting to the New York Evening Post Bureau of Statistics for April, 1919, was 12,300,608, a gain of a trifle more than 2,000,000 lines over April, 1918, and a gain of about 34 per cent over the pre-war economizing, April, 1913. In April, 1914, these newspapers carried only 8,687,315 lines of advertising, and thus it is seen that the gain in 1919 just passed represents more than a per cent over the April figures in e first year of the European war.

Astonishing gains have been made by dividual newspapers in numerous ties. The so-called "Million Agate ine Club" of American newspapers has own remarkably in membership dur- the past three months, with many w hovering around 800,000 to 900,000 arks.

The March prediction of Editor & Publisher that national advertising in newspaper space this year will exceed the hitherto unheard of total of $130,000,000, doubling the record for 1918, is now generally conceded.

Released Ambitions

The amazing variety of big space that continues to pour out from all quarters is an interesting phase of the general situation. The "drive" idea continues for the accomplishment of public or semi-public purposes. Today attractive page advertising appears for the Salvation Army fund; tomorrow the U. S. Army is to advertise for recruits; yesterday it was a whirl-wind campaign for Victory bonds. The Roman Catholic Church uses page advertising to raise a huge fund for the erection of a sacred temple in Washington to keep fresh in memory the human sacrifices of the war. There is to be advertising conducted, if not paid for, by the state in the interest of securing employment for former soldiers. The Government of the United States is learning the great secret of business that the advertising columns of the daily press form the quick route to public understanding and are available at the minimum cost.

The nation-wide drives for the Methodist Episcopal Centenary and the Episcopal church have yielded heavy copy in many cities, with some notable instances where enthusiastic publishers have produced special editions or supplements. All this runs to swell the rising tide.

But, of course, the bulk of advertising now flooding the press represents normal business. It bespeaks the ambitions of men to do business and also the power of the people, despite the war drain, to sustain personal comfort and advance culturally and materially.

East and west, north and south, the reports seem almost identical as to the remarkable movement of merchandise through all of the channels of trade from producer to consumer. All industry has been quickened and there has finally been consummated the tremendous transfer of buying by the people rather than the concentrated buying by the Government for war purposes.

One of the healthy economic signs of the times is the prosperity of those engaged in the textile and wearing apparel industries and heavy buying by the retail interests of the great cities gives proof of the statement that the average American was a conservative consumer of clothing during the war and is now in process of restocking family requirements. Returning soldiers and sailors have given a vast trade to clothier interests. An unusual flow of department store and specialty shop advertising is looked for throughout the summer months even in the larger cities where the "vacation period" usually produces a serious slump of such trade.

Automobile and accessory advertising is large, and now that production is well under way and the demand for both pleasure and business vehicles exceedingly sharp, specialists in this class of advertising are sanguine of the greatest year in history. Manufacturers who, in the war rush, permitted their advertising to lapse, are feeling the need of re-established "good will" with the public.

Luxuries that were suspended by the war are being extensively advertised for dealer and consumer demand. Never were the advertising columns of newspapers more interesting for the variety of merchandise offered.

The prospect of a "dry" nation has resulted in vast plans for the advertisement of beverages to substitute for alcoholic liquors and much of this is scheduled to run in summer months. This business includes some extensive plans in the interest of tea and coffee producers, as previously announced in Editor & Publisher.

Basic Conditions Sound

All crop information continues favorable and unless some great tragedy occurs, America will produce her bumper in 1919, with ample supply for all mouths here and for the hundreds of thousands of hungry people of Europe.

The boom in the stock market proceeds as a further indication of the basic prosperity of the country, new high levels having been registered last week for most of the railroad security issues as well as for nearly all of the great industrials. Admitting that the stock market is now highly speculative, the gains which now run as high as 100 points for the fiscal year are not to be discounted, in a general survey of economic conditions.

Nor should sight be lost of the striking signs of vast export business for the United States. European buyers are here in great numbers and the prospects for trade are reported as limited only by credit considerations. Europe's need for our goods in her process of rehabilitation is now a literal fact, well known to every manufacturer.

Expect Big Summer

With these substantial evidences of prosperity ahead and with no cloud on the horizon save the limited doubt as to the final peace and the outcome of negotiations looking to world understanding, advertising men close to the nation's greatest industries say that there will be only slight cessation of present activities during the summer.

This means only a modified and summer lull and the smashing of advertising records for June, July, August and September. The newspapers are preparing for it. The slogan in national advertising circles now is "Why slump in summer?"

Why, indeed? Indications are that the space demands of the fall will exceed present lineage. The summer is therefore the time to create publicity values if not to actually move merchandise. National advertisers are more and more seeing the advantage of taking up space in the less crowded week-day newspaper. There is a healthy growth of Saturday afternoon advertising in several cities. In Philadelphia the great six-day afternoon Bulletin is receiving now on Saturday

HIGH SPOT FACTS IN THE GREAT NATIONAL ADVERTISING BOOM

APRIL lineage reports from newspapers in cities of the East, New England, Middle Atlantic Seaboard, South, Middle West, Pacific Northwest and Pacific Southwest, as analyzed by Editor & Publisher, show (1) total lineage increases ranging from 15 to more than 50 per cent in April, 1919, over April, 1918, (2) the principal increase is in national advertising, though local advertising is very strong, (3) gains on national space carried in a few conspicuous cases run as high as 70 per cent over April, 1918, and instances of such gains up to 40 per cent are common, (4) there seems to be no sectional or geographical limits to the newspaper advertising bulge, all parts of the country sharing on about equal terms.

During the past three months many newspapers have gained eligibility to the "Million-agate-lines Club."

Best informed advertising men tell Editor & Publisher that the present record-breaking boom will continue through the summer, with only slight cessation in the hottest period, due to the desire of many advertisers to keep abreast trade conditions and reestablish good will asset.

Paper manufacturers predict that there will not be a paper shortage.

Great press manufacturers are unable to fill orders of publishers; bookings for presses are months in advance of possible delivery. There is a sharp demand for all sorts of newspaper equipment and supplies. The Mergenthaler Linotype Company is managing to fill orders promptly enough to satisfy the trade and is planning for increased business. Intertype reports all sales records broken.

Basic industry and trade, according to all sources of information, soundly supports the great advertising campaign now in progress.

heavy business from a department store the former policy of which was not to run in Saturday evening newspapers, and the experiment has been tested out successfully. That which applies to the local dealer who is seeking direct results surely doubly applies to any national advertiser who is in quest of general publicity values.

In Washington five of the largest department stores divide two-thirds of their advertising in the Star equally between Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday issues each week. In doing this they earn the best rate granted by the paper, and find the plan highly beneficial in effecting a more even balance in store trade throughout the week.

In New York John Wanamaker uses space in Saturday issues to advertise today sales.

There are many such instances to contain this as a general tendency.

A. N. P. A. Bureau

The Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association reports that never before were so many demands made on it by advertisers and advertising agencies for data regarding recent newspaper advertising successes. These questioners wish to assure themselves that certain wares which never have been advertised in newspapers can be advertised successfully and are willing to follow a good example when it is pointed out to them.

Even manufacturers of semi-technical or wholly technical products, whose advertising heretofore has been confined to trade papers, are investigating the possibilities of lifting the sales by passing to the many through newspaper advertising.

"The enormous flood of national advertising recently has stirred up the retail buyer and he is buying now as never before," said William A. Thomson, director of the Bureau. "This is encouraging national advertisers to continue advertising through the summer. Some of the big retail stores report phenominal business in April and May. One retail store, to my knowledge, did a business in April that was $750,000 greater than ever before in its history."

The Bureau has received reports that many manufacturers who formerly used magazine space exclusively in order to "get the goods on the dealer's counter" will start using newspaper space this summer to get the same goods off the counter.

Great Demand Now for Paper, Presses and All Plant Equipment

If a good volume of advertising is to be maintained through the summer there must be paper to print it on and the ruling opinion among paper manufacturers, interviewed this week, seems to be that the demand will be supplied, the one doubt hanging on labor troubles.

Monthly figures given out by the News Print Service Bureau of the paper manufacturers, covering approximately 90 per cent of the total output of news print in the United States and Canada, show that the average daily production during April was equal to the average daily output during the three months of greatest production in 1918. Therefore production is being well sustained.

Production by the United States mills, according to figures in the same report, during the first four months of this year was 11 per cent greater than during the same months in 1918. Canadian production during this period exceeded that during the same period last year by 9 per cent.

Production promise throughout the country, which is expected to continue throughout the summer, is reflected not only in an increased demand for paper, but for all other supplies that are needed in the printing of papers. Presses are in big demand and publishers who delayed their orders are in sore straits because of the limited output.

Demand for Supplies

"After the armistice was declared, English publishers realized what was going to happen in the newspaper business as American publishers didn't, and they came into this market and practically bought up the output of printing machinery," said R. C. Seymour, manager of the New York City office of the Goss Printing Press Company.

"We can't fill orders now for a long time ahead. There has been an advance of from 90 to 100 per cent in the price of presses since two years ago, and an advance of 15 per cent since the armistice was signed. We had to raise wages two weeks ago and may have to do it again. We can't get as much labor as we need. What we have is working double time.

"American publishers made a mistake in thinking that they could afford to wait for supplies until prices came down. As a result we have forty orders now for presses that we can't fill.

Presses

R. Hoe & Co. report that the demand with them has been unprecedented and that they have booked since the first of the year more than a good year's business. In this they report the following large orders:

Three 5-roll Decuple machines for the Baltimore Sun; three Superspeed Octuples for the Cincinnati Enquirer; one Pittsburgh Post; a Superspeed Octuple for the Toronto Telegram, which makes two ordered for that office; a Color Octuple for the Toronto Globe; two Superspeed Sextuples for the Boston Globe; two Superspeed Octuples for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, together with three 5-roll machines for the same office; an Octuple Color Press for the Columbus Dispatch; a Superspeed Octuple for the Augusta Journal; Sextuples for the Jacksonville Times-Union and the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, and a Quadruple for the Pontiac Press.

Walter Scott

Walter Scott & Co. have all the orders for presses, large and small, they can take care of for months to come, and still the orders are pouring in from newspaper publishers, according to James Carothers, manager of the New York office. The big plant of the company at Plainfield, N. J., has been working to capacity ever since the armistice was signed and a good many of the presses now being completed are going to publishers abroad and in South America, who were quick to place their orders for additional equipment as soon as peace seemed certain.

"I prophesied that peace would mean big things for the newspapers and for the press manufacturers likewise, and I now see my prophecy fulfilled," said Mr Carothers.

Incidentally, La Nacion of Buenos Ayres has ordered a five-deck press and two octuple presses of the Scott Company and El Mundo of Havana, Cuba, has contracted with the same company for a large sextuple color press. .

Duplex Company

The present plant capacity of the Duplex Printing Press Company, at Battle Creek, Mich., is reported to be taxed with orders for presses until January or February, 1920. The company has in course of construction an additional plant which, it is expected, will begin operations in the fall. To relieve the present demand, 20 flat-bed Duplex presses are being manufactured in a Chicago plant, and during the war time the manufacture of material for the War Department.

The demand for second-hand presses of all types is sharp and press machinery which, it had been believed, had outlived its usefulness, is being hauled out and repaired and placed pending the delivery of new presses. In various ways publishers are contriving means to meet the advertising demand.

Reports from stereotype supply houses also reflected the heavy demand from all sections of the country and the general difficulty to make immediate shipment.

Mergenthaler Machines

The Mergenthaler Linotype Company reports that it is managing to fill its orders promptly enough to satisfy the trade, and is laying plans to continue to do so in the face of continued increases.

"We haven't far to look for the great underlying reason to which this increased business is due," reads a letter addressed from the company's office to Editor & Publisher.

"The business of war has given way to the resumption of the business of peace. The world's biggest reconstruction period awaits us. Everything is wanted by newspapers as well as by other consumers. Undoubtedly the prospects are for an era of good business, the like of which has not been seen before."

Intertype Machines

"There is only one answer to the question asked by Editor & Publisher as to the present Intertype business and the future outlook," said H. W. Cozzens, general sales manager of Intertype Corporation.

"Both the present business and the outlook for the balance of the year are entirely beyond our most sanguine expectations.

"Orders have been coming to us in increasing numbers since the first of the year, and March, with orders entered for 122 machines, April with orders entered for 102, and May, with orders entered for 127, are record-breaking months.

"Every effort possible is being made to increase our factory facilities and output to take care not only of our present business, but of that which we see ahead of us next fall both in the United States and Europe.

"One reason for this splendid support which the trade is giving the Intertype lies, we believe, in the great volume of advertising which we have been able to be shared generally by newspapers in all parts of the United States, and the fact that perhaps a large number of papers postponed the purchase of new machinery during the war period."

The Position of the Four A's On Full Season Advertising Told by O'Shaughnessy

In the encouragement of all-the-year-round advertising for newspapers, publishers will have the hearty co-operation of the American Association of Advertising Agencies. Concerning this, Mr. James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the Association, writes Editor & Publisher:

"The idea of seasonal selling is differentiated from seasonal promotion. The store should be kept open all the year and the business built up through all of the 12 months, and why interrupt the advertising, which is promotion? The advertising must run ahead of the sale. That being so, then how far ahead? The most inexperienced advertiser knows the danger of not putting it far enough ahead. The publication date question is to advertise far enough ahead so that the promotion will be as thorough as it was planned.

"With this powerful modern thought applied to advertising, newspaper publishers can look forward to a leveling of advertising over the entire year. This means much to the national volume in the year's business, but all of it would be more profitable because of its free-

U. S. ARMY ADVERTISING STARTS

Seaman to Place Copy in All Newspapers in Cities Where Recruiting Stations Exist

As exclusively announced in Editor & Publisher, the United States Government will become a direct advertiser in newspapers during the month of June, the purpose being to aid recruiting for the army, which needs men for the regular service to relieve the host of men who will be retired under the law four months after the final signing of peace.

This advertising will be handled by Frank Seaman, Inc., New York, and will be placed at regular card rates. There is to be no price-cutting and the whole system of placing the business responds to ethical advertising standards.

The business will run in generous space in every English language newspaper in cities where the army maintains recruiting stations, and the copy will be localized to send applicants directly to the headquarters of recruiting officers.

Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, under an existing statute, signed the order calling for the expenditure for this purpose of June 30 of the sum of $185,000. Plans army officers had made up, for the expenditure of about $100,000, for poster, circular and other forms of advertising, have been suspended for the present, until newspaper advertising is given a fair test. If results from it are up to expectations, it will be formally adopted for a further campaign.

James O'Shaughnessy, executive secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, said:

"This is a great triumph for the American newspaper. It is a clean recognition by the Government of the value of newspaper advertising columns. The initial schedule is not so big, but if the newspapers rise to the situation, and make the campaign an unqualified success, a very heavy advertising campaign will follow from the War Department. Results are wanted and results only will count.

"It has cost the Government about $9 per recruit, and the War Department does not object to that cost if there is real efficiency shown in the method. Inasmuch as present plans call for the recruiting of about half a million men for the army, there is a possibility of advertising to run into as much as $45,000,000 for this purpose. The newspapermen of the country should get behind this advertising with full force for patriotic, as well as for professional reasons."

Elaborate Plans Are Complete for the Twenty-first Annual Convention—Will Draw Circulators from All Over U. S. and Canada—Propose to Change By-Laws

PROSPECTS for a record breaking meeting at the 21st annual convention of the International Circulation Managers' Association, in Buffalo, N. Y., June 10, 11 and 12, are splendid, according to the reports of the officers and those in charge of the arrangements.

The Convention Bulletin of the association, just issued, calls the coming Buffalo meeting "The Million Dollar Convention," for the following reasons:

Vital Subjects Will Be Discussed

"Not since the large attendance at the Grand Rapids (before the war) convention has the interest become apparent until the approaching Buffalo (after the war) convention.

"Circulation is slipping,' says one, and 'it's coming mighty hard,' says another, and all of these boys are going to get together at Buffalo and talk things over. Such topics as 'Maintaining the Increased Price,' 'Return of the Baseball Extra,' 'Use of Premiums,' 'Best Features in Peace Time,' 'Readers' Interest in War Stories and Features,' 'Contest of Free Trips to Europe,' 'Postoffice Department,' 'Delivery by Air Service,' and probably one or two on your mind that is not mentioned above will be completely talked over at the million dollar convention of the I. C. M. A.

"Yes, sir, the ideas exchanged at the Buffalo convention will be worth more than a million dollars. The publications represented will run into billions of dollars invested and all were made as the result of ideas.

A Working Convention

"A convention of the I. C. M. A. is a working convention. The program is just one case after case of 'How we did it,' 'Why we did it,' and the results.

"It is a place to exchange ideas and get the advice of others in reference to any problem.

"What was done in El Paso may be just the the thing to do in Toronto and the accomplishments in Richmond, Va., may not do in El Paso or Toronto, but is just right for Fort Worth, Texas."

President Joseph R. Taylor, of the Grand Rapids Press, yesterday said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"In reviewing the prepared plans for the 1919 convention in Buffalo, one is impressed with the many new problems that now confront the daily publisher and his circulation manager.

President Taylor's Message

"Revised methods, including many economies, have proved their worth during the past year and a half, and the tendency of the circulation manager of today is to continue along conservative and saving lines, repudiating many of the old principles of giving away their newspapers for nothing.

"If, as a circulation manager, you are in favor of continuing your business along safe and sane lines, refusing returns, free copies, and circulation at cut rates, then it is your duty to attend the Buffalo convention to lend your support favoring better business methods for the future. Under Government control during the war all newspapers were compelled to eliminate bad circulation practices—a direct benefit to the publishers.

"Already certain circulation managers are returning to the old habits of a lifetime. These men, hard to convince, lacking new ideas, are simply creating old conditions for which there is no excuse, and in their blindness will drag down their local competitors to the same level.

"All of this, and many more difficult problems, are emphasized in the prepared program of the coming convention.

Old Habits Returning

"The circulation manager—whether a member of the I. C. M. A. or not—who does not plan to attend the Buffalo convention is missing one of the opportunities of his life; the publisher who does not insist on his circulation manager attending the convention, is very shortsighted as to the needs of his paper along circulation lines. It has taken the world centuries to find out that a League of Nations is the modern economic plan of the world.

"Reduced armies and armaments, which means in return a reduction of taxes, is part of the plan of a League of Nations.

"The I. C. M. A. is simply a League of Circulation Managers of the United States and Canada. In existence 21 years, growing from a very small group of ten progressive men to over 600, embracing all of the leading evening and morning newspapers of this country, there is no question as to its membership value to the individual circulation manager, and in return for the publisher who employs the circulation manager.

"Your best investment for 1919 is to attend the Buffalo convention, June 10-11-12."

From James McKernan

James McKernan, of the New York World, first vice-president of the I. C. M. A. and the probable next president, gives the following message to EDITOR & PUBLISHER to impress upon its circulator-readers the importance of attending the Buffalo gathering.

"The circulation managers throughout the country have had a very trying period during the past few years. They have proven themselves equal to the emergency, having passed through the crisis of placing the papers on a non-returnable basis and increasing the selling prices, together with inadequate service caused by the withdrawing of so many men into the service of Uncle Sam and the munition factories.

"Having passed through this crisis, they are now faced with the problems of the reconstruction period. This, together with the increased cost of labor and material in the handling of circulation, will give the I. C. M. A. a sufficient number of subjects to keep it busy.

"The association is composed of circulation managers from practically every state in the Union, also Canada, Cuba and Australia; and anyone attending these conventions can rest assured that he has heard the last word in up-to-date methods and ideas.

"Many of the largest publishers and owners of newspapers who have attended these meetings, speak in the highest praise of the good work done by this association.

"The program committee has issued a very interesting folder giving a list of the papers that will be read and the subjects to be discussed, together with the names of those whom the papers have been assigned to. A glance at this list would indicate that the circulators will have three very busy and important days.

"The delegation from New York and vicinity will leave on the Empire State Limited in a special car on Monday, June 9. They will be joined en route by members from Albany and the Eastern cities.

"Every circulation manager who is a member of this organization owes it to himself and the paper he represents to attend this convention. Many of the members bring along their wives and families, who are taken care of by the local entertainment committee while the convention is in session.

"Buffalo presents splendid opportunities for automobile trips. Niagara Falls, only an hour's ride from the city, is always an interesting place to visit.

"Invitations have been received and accepted from the Chamber of Commerce to entertain the association and their guests at luncheon and a banquet has been arranged for by the local publishers.

"The convention will open with an address of welcome by George S. Buck, Mayor of Buffalo.

"The U. S. Railway Mail Service is sending a representative, J. D. Hardy, chief clerk of District No. 9, who will talk to the members on United States Mail Service, how to reduce complaints to a minimum. This is a subject that every newspaper is vitally interested in, and Mr. Hardy's talk will no doubt be received with close attention.

"The other subjects chosen for discussion are equally important. Circulation managers and business managers who are not members of this organization are invited to attend this convention and join the association."

JOSEPH R. TAYLOR
President International Circulation Managers' Association

Transportation Arrangements

J. R. Henderson, business manager of the Montreal Gazette, chairman of the transportation committee, reports:

"The transportation committee has been successful in getting exchange transportation from Detroit to Cleveland over the D. & C. line, and I would suggest that all members wishing to take advantage of this transportation advise E. R. Hatton of the Detroit Free Press direct. He has very kindly offered to secure all tickets and make the necessary reservation for staterooms.

"I also expect to make a similar arrangement with the C. & B. line between Cleveland and Buffalo, and Mr. Hatton will also handle the tickets and reservations.

PROBLEM OF "LIGHT" AND "HEAVY" ADVERTISING DAYS A VITAL ONE

Habit of Merchants in Concentrating on Certain Issues Leads to Abnormal Pressure on Advertising Columns—No Advantage in Policy.

ONE of the most vital problems facing newspapers, under present conditions, is that of eliminating "off-days" in advertising and of educating merchants to use a more evenly balanced schedule of copy every day of the week.

In spite of enlarged issues, particularly on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, newspapers find it almost impossible to properly care for the great volume of advertising offered for publication on those days. This growing habit of advertisers of concentrating on certain issues places upon the newspapers an abnormal pressure for space on heavy days and leaves them "light" for the remainder of the week

New Policy a Success in Washington

EDITOR & PUBLISHER of May 15 told of the experience of the Washington Star in changing the advertising and shopping habits of the capital city. Two-thirds of the advertising of the five largest department stores of Washington now runs on an equalized schedule on five days of the week. Extra space is still used on the heavy days, but not to the extent formerly practiced. The Star's rate card provides for a slight concession in rates to advertisers using the five-days-a-week schedule. The result has been not only gratifying to that newspaper but the merchants of Washington find that it pays to encourage daily buying rather than a two or three day rush each week.

As EDITOR & PUBLISHER has pointed out in this connection, the shopping habits of the people accord with the advertising habits of the merchants. Light advertising spells light days in the stores, and vice versa. The farsighted merchants should be quick to realize the importance of easing the pressure of the heavy days by bringing about normal shopping habits among the people.

With a majority of newspapers "the Saturday problem" has long been a vexing one. Publishers know that the Saturday issue has special value to the advertisers, but here long habit intervenes to prevent a normal volume of Saturday business.

Finds Saturday Advertising Pays

The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin has succeeded in breaking down to an extent the prejudice of merchants against using a Saturday issue. For some time the firm of Strawbridge & Clothier has been using five column displays in the Saturday issue of the Evening Bulletin. In a recent issue this concern prefaced its Saturday advertising with this note:

"This Saturday evening news is of unique significance. We always have a page of carefully compiled news of bright, new merchandise in the Monday morning newspapers and, while we urge upon our customers the importance of our Monday morning announcements, we find that our Bulletin readers like to read and discuss our news in the evening at home, and our special Saturday evening announcements have already proved a great success. . . . It will pay you to read this announcement and take advantage of these exceptional values on Monday."

William Simpson, business manager of the Evening Bulletin, in a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, says:

"I was very much interested in the editorial in EDITOR & PUBLISHER for May 22 entitled, 'To End Off-Days in Advertising.' as I never could quite understand why retail advertisers refrained from advertising on certain days, particularly when it is to be considered that they keep their stores open daily and, as you say in your editorial, 'it is obviously greatly to be desired that the stores should do a big volume of business every business day rather than a small volume half the week and an immanageable volume during the other half. The same principle applies to the newspapers in carrying the advertising.'

"For some inexplicable reason many advertisers have failed to take full advantage of the Saturday editions of the newspapers, but Strawbridge & Clothier, one of the best known department stores in Philadelphia, have made it a point to regularly advertise each Saturday in the Bulletin special attractions for Monday.

"A definite campaign by you along these lines would be of decided value to all of your readers, because newspapers all over the country would benefit by the general adoption of a policy of daily announcements by advertisers instead of ballooning their advertisements on certain days, which creates abnormal pressure on the newspaper columns, necessitates the leaving out of other advertisements and creates delay and confusion in the delivery and circulation departments, and at the same time reacts against the stores by causing store congestion on so-called heavy days, brought about by heavy advertising concentration on those days, and comparatively empty stores on other days."

EDITOR & PUBLISHER would welcome expressions of views and experiences of other publishers who have found ways and means for correcting this policy of concentration followed by a majority of merchants.

Dimon Goes to Portland

PORTLAND, Me., June 2.—William B. Dimon, of the Philadelphia Record, has assumed the duties of assistant manager of the Portland (Me.) Express-Advertiser, succeeding F. K. Bates, formerly of Montreal. Mr. Dimon has for the past 15 years been connected with the Record. He has been connected with the office of General Manager M. F. Hanson.

Capt. Smith Home from War

MONTREAL, June 3.—Capt. J. E. Smith, formerly of the Sherbrooke Daily Record, has just returned from the front. He went over with the 117th Battalion in 1916 and has been in the thick of the fighting ever since.

Lawder Joins Erwin & Wasey

CHICAGO, June 2.—Donald Lawder has been appointed to the Erwin & Wasey Agency's staff. He is from Collier's Weekly.

25 HAVE SERVED "P. D." OVER 20 YEARS

"A Good Sheet to Stick to, Because It Sticks to You, If You Make Good," Says Cleveland Plain Dealer "Boys," Old and Young

The Cleveland Plain Dealer, whose management endeavors to "care for those who care for themselves," has 25 employees who have been with the paper 20 years and over.

Seven men have served the paper 34 years each. They are George R. Agate, treasurer of the Plain Dealer Publishing Company; F. E. Hoffman and W.

GEORGE R. AGATE

S. Wanner, assistant foremen of the composing room; Louis Rasch, F. W. McKearney and F. J. Sharpe, printers.

Mr. Agate has handled the payroll of the "P. D." for so long he knows by name all of the main office employees and the hundreds of correspondents scattered throughout the country. Always affable, painstaking and accommodating, every employee has a good word for him.

V. C. Post, assistant foreman, has served 32 years.

Rose Its Editorial Dean

The "dean" of the editorial staff is W. R. Rose, associate editor, short story contributor and author of an editorial page daily feature entitled "All in a Day's Work." He has served the "P. D." continuously for 23 years and is yet "young in action, quick in thought" and one of the most popular members of the staff.

W. S. Parr, market editor, who has been ill for several weeks, entered the paper's employ 26 years ago, but "skipped" a few years, so his actual length of service does not go beyond that of Mr. Rose.

George M. Rogers, assistant general manager, entered the service of the paper 21 years ago and does not look as though he had spent two decades and a half in building up one of the best daily newspapers in America.

U. W. Hird, credit manager, has been with the paper 23 years.

Dora J. Cavan, a proofreader, is the only woman employee who has seen over 20 years of continuous service. She entered the paper's employ 24 years ago.

There are five "27-year service men." These are J. W. Mills, A. J. Craig, F. D. Cass, assistant foremen, and C. E. Scheckler, Theodore Hays and H. W. Longsdorf, printers.

H. D. Ashby, a foreman, is also a 24-year man.

Mort Moeder, foreman of the "ad alley," and C. C. Sharpe, a printer, are 22-year employees, while Hugo Hoffman, foreman of the press room, and A. G. Chipchase, a printer, have served the paper 21 years.

John J. Kirk, circulation manager, has spent exactly two decades with the "P. D," the other 20-year employee being John Hoffman, stereotyper.

The "veteran of them all," Samuel Johnson, has been on the payroll for 53 years. He was printer and proofreader and when his half century period of service came around he was retired on a pension for life. His duties now consist in looking after sick employees who are members of the Plain Dealer Beneficial Association.

All Have Worked Up

"Big Ben." F. Allen, the chief of the Washington bureau, has spent more than 20 years with the paper.

Henry S. Edwards, called "dean of America's baseball writers," entered the paper's employ about 17 years ago, while

W. R. ROSE

W. G. Vorpe, in charge of the Sunday feature department and acting managing editor in the absence of Erie C. Hopkwood, editorial chief, went to the paper 18 years ago and climbed all the way from a reporter through the telegraph, news and night editorial jobs.

Erie C. Hopgwood, managing editor, started as a reporter about 17 years ago.

George R. Callahan, marine editor, and Carl Robertson, editorial writer, each began work for the paper about 19 years ago.

Dozens of "P. D." employees have been with the paper 10 and 15 years each.

"A good sheet to stick to because it sticks to you, if you make good." This is what the "boys," old and young say.

Paper Co. Launches Steamship

PORTLAND, Me., June 2.—The freight steamer Ripogenus, built at a cost of $900,000 for the Great Northern Paper Company, whose mills are located at Millinocket, was launched at Rockland, May 26. She will be used in carrying paper from the terminal of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad at Stockton Springs to New York and Philadelphia. On her return trips coal will be carried from Norfolk to Searsport.

Allen Agency Reorganizes

A reorganization of the Allen Advertising Agency, New York, has been effected by the election of the following new officers: President, Frederick Jeanson; vice-presidents, Theodore J. Goe and Edmund Bartlett; treasurer, F. A. Callaway.

THIS SYSTEM ELIMINATES WASTE IN MAILING CHECKING COPIES

Plan of the Late John W. Jewell Simplifies Work of Publishers and Advertising Agencies—Now Offered for Free Use of All.

THE Springfield (Mo.) Leader has been using for nearly two years a system for mailing checking copies to advertisers which has eliminated almost entirely the traditional difficulties surrounding this detail of office management.

The system was devised by the late John W. Jewell, associate owner and publisher of the Leader, who lost his life at Camp Funston on January 11, 1918, while serving as editor of "Trench and Camp." His father, H. S. Jewell, has found the system to be so practicable and useful that he has brought it to the attention of the leading advertising agencies of the country, and has received many letters of endorsement.

For Free Use of All Publishers

Mr. Jewell now authorizes Enton & Pubishers to make public the details of the plan, and to assure all publishers that it is open to their use without charge. He also generously offers to mail on request a copy of a booklet describing it and a sample of the daily record sheet—all that is needed for installing the system, except a small loose-leaf book for entering the names of agencies and advertisers, purchasable anywhere.

In the booklet referred to, which was copyrighted by the late John W. Jewell, the system is outlined as follows:

In an ordinary 75-sheet loose-leaf book (Figure 1) are arranged the following MEMORICAL orders:

FIRST—The names and addresses of all AGENCIES.

SECOND—The names and addresses of all COMPANIES to whom are to be sent checking copies. It is not always necessary to send checking copies to the company as only those companies are listed which demand copies of the publication carrying their advertising.

THIRD—The names of the PRODUCTS which are being advertised, in ALPHABETICAL order.

ADVERTISING AGENCIES and COMPANIES are listed numerically, and the names of the PRODUCTS advertised are listed alphabetically by index. For instance: The PRODUCT Cocoalis is run in the issue being checked. Run down the alphabetical index to "N" and find Nestles listed with number 1 in the column for Agencies and number 3 in the column for Companies. This tells you that number 1 agency and number 3 company should be sent issues of the paper. As the numbers are numerically, it is easy to turn to No. 1 and No. 3 and find that the paper for this product goes to Erwin & Wasey, agency, and to Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., company.

When installing this system, the names of the advertising agencies can be gotten from your ACTIVE foreign advertising ledger. Those having no foreign advertising accounts can note the requirements in regard to sending checking copies.

This book should be large enough to hold only about 50 pages and costs like figure 2.

If you have no book suitable, you can find one which contains suitable loose-leaf paper at any large office supply shop.

The printed list is the middle of the first page used by The Springfield Leader, showing the advertised articles placed by foreign advertising companies. The purpose of the numbers is explained elsewhere.

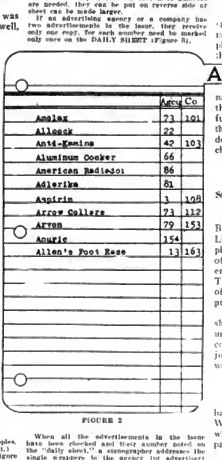
For each PRODUCT in the book (Figure 1) is set down the NUMBER of the advertising agency that receives the checking copies WHEN THE PRODUCT IS ADVERTISED, in case the AGENCY and the COMPANY both want copies, the number of each is placed by the product.) e. g.: In the small book under A (see Figure 2) appear the following:

	Agcy.	Co.
Acetos	73	101
Alcock	22
Ace

The product Amolax is checked by both Roberts & MacArthur, 30 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. (who-se number is 73 in the book, Figure 1) and by "the Amolax Co., Youngstown, Ohio (whose number is 101 in the book, Figure 1).

Alcock (lasters are checked only by E. S. Erickett, whose number in the book is 22. The Alcock Mfg. Company do not check the laster copies.

A daily Sheet having numbers from one to "necessary" (according to the number of agencies and companies) arranged in rows so that they are easily found. One sheet is used each day and filed away. (Figure 3.) It will be necessary to have some of these sheets printed and labled—the cost is small.



To Send Out Copies Each Day

From the newspaper each day the ads are checked—their number (or numbers) are easily found in the book under their index (Figure 2) and the numbers are marked on the DAILY SHEET (Figure 3).

NOTE: In case you don't want to check from the issue, the names of the products can easily be gotten each day from your compositing room order or from the report given your bookkeeping department, which is used to check the insertions of all advertisements which should appear on the particular day.

The above is a reproduction of the daily sheet with numbers up to 175. In case more numbers are needed, they can be put on reverse side or sheet can be made larger.

If an advertising agency or a company has two advertisements in the issue, they receive only one copy, for each number need be marked only once on the DAILY SHEET (Figure 3).

	Agcy	Co
Amolax	73	101
Alcock	22
Anti-Kamo	42	103
Aluminum Cooker	66
American Radiator	86
Adlerika	81
Aspirin		108
Arrow Collars	73	132
Acme	29	153
Acmetic	154

When all the advertisements in the issue have been checked and their number noted on the "daily sheet," a stenographer addresses the single wrappers to the agency (or advertiser) whose number is checked on the "daily sheet" by reference to the list of agencies and companies in the front of the book.

When the single wraps are addressed, copies can be wrapped and sent out from the office or sent to the mail room to go out in your single-wrap lots as second class mail, or the addressed wrappers can be sent to the mail room where the issue may be enclosed and sent out.

Return copies can be used as well as any other by holding the addressed wrappers until the following day.

The Mailing System

1—Saves money in paper and postage.

2—Saves work in mailing room, as all advertisers and agencies are taken off the mailing lists.

3—Saves setting up names and correcting addresses in the compositing room.

4—Convenient and dependable way to send out copies—little chance for errors.

5—Automatically keeps a record of every copy sent out every day.

6—Prevents better deliveries to addresses, thereby cutting down calls for extra checking copies.

7—It is so simple that anyone can send out the checking copies each day. Your office boy can do it.

1—Can be installed easily in any size news paper or magazine.

2—By sterling new records each year, it will show the number of accounts carried.

10—It is efficient.

Mr. Jewell has demonstrated a net saving of $300 per year for his own newspaper through the use of this simple system. One of its strong points is that it assures the mailing to advertisers or agents ONLY copies of the paper which contain the advertisements to be checked. This not only eliminates waste of postage and of copies of the paper, but does away with the confusion resulting in an agency office from the necessity of examining papers which do not contain the insertions to be checked.

NO LINOTYPE TIE-UP

Strike of Factory Employes Fails to Hinder Operations

Despite a strike of workmen at the Brooklyn plant of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company last Friday the plant continued operations, the places of the strikers being filled during several succeeding days without difficulty. The company reported that a number of the men who struck had asked to be put back to work.

The strikers are asking for a closed shop, that no man not a member of the union shall be in the employ of the company more than ten days without joining the union, a forty-four-hour week, and increased wages.

MUST BUY THEIR PAPER FROM BRITISH MILLS

Regulations Passed by Board of Trade Limits Imports from Outside United Kingdom to 25 Per Cent—Protecting Home Industry

The British Board of Trade has passed regulations covering the licensing of paper imports into the United Kingdom, becoming effective from May 1.

Briefly, the Board of Trade recognizes the remarkable skill the British mills and is endeavoring to support the home industry by stopping imports of paper which can just as well be secured within the British Empire.

As far as news print paper is concerned, the regulations provide that not more than 25 per cent of paper purchased by a consumer or dealer may come from sources outside of the British Empire. That is, if a publisher in Great Britain bought 1,000 tons of paper, either from a home mill or from a mill in Canada, he might have a license to import 250 tons additional from Scandinavia or United States mills.

The regulations on higher grades of paper are more severe, and it will be necessary for the importer to convince the Board of Trade that the paper which he wishes to import from sources outside the Empire cannot be secured within the Empire, or cannot be bought at a fair price and reasonable price. One paragraph of the regulations gives the British mills on their "best behavior" in respect of prices, and it is provided that if the home mills are willing to make reasonable prices, the Board of Trade may, in its judgment, let down the bars against foreign papers.

The effects of the regulations on the United States market will be very slight, as practically no United States news print has been going to Britain of late years.

There may be an indirect effect on this market in view of the stimulus to Canadian trade with Great Britain which these regulations will bring about.

Also, the Scandinavian mills, shut out of the British market, will have to seek other fields, and this may result in some of their paper coming to the United States, although this is unlikely for the present owing to very high costs in Sweden and Norway ,and high freights to America.

"30" FOR STARS & STRIPES JULY 4

Army Paper at One Time Reached 550,000 Circulation at 10c

It is expected to bring the notable career of the Stars & Stripes, the famous A. E. F. soldier paper in Paris, to a close with a big souvenir edition on July 4, according to Hopkins Ross, its last managing editor; Alexander Woollcott, J. T. Winterich and C. Leroy Baldridge, who served on the New York from France on Monday. All the men were members of the executive council of the paper.

The paper's greatest period of prosperity came after the armistice, and early in this year, when it reached a circulation of 550,000 copies, sold at 10 cents a copy. The main purpose of continuing the "S. & S." until July 4 is to cover the Olympic games in France.

Big "Victory Edition"

The Beaver (Pa.) Times issued last week a "Victory Edition" consisting of 122 pages. This represents a wonderful achievement for a so-called small city daily. It is well edited and contains much matter of permanent local historical value.

PRACTICAL METHODS FOR TESTING NEWSPAPER PRINTING INKS

Scales Are All-Important Factor—Also Be Certain that Papers Used Are of Uniform Standard—Useful Formula for Checking Results

By J. W. Barnhart,
Purchasing Agent, Chicago Tribune.
(Copyright, 1919, by John W. Barnhart.)

In buying printing inks the first consideration is the quality of work which has been set as the standard of production. The economical ink to use obviously is the one which will produce the largest number of printed sheets of the given standard of quality at the lowest cost. Lowest cost does not necessarily mean lowest price, as frequently higher priced inks will be cheaper in the long run on account of greater strength of color, thus enabling the pressman to produce work of the standard quality with a less quantity of ink.

The most important test is that which determines the "covering" qualities of the various inks under consideration. For news inks a careful record should be kept of the total number of pounds of ink used and the total number of pages printed during the test of each sample. From these figures the average number of pounds required to print one thousand eight-page papers and the cost for each lot may be calculated. Such tests should be long enough to represent average conditions, say a week or more (for each sample) for daily newspapers.

Quality of Paper Must Be Kept Uniform

In larger plants where there are several presses printing the same pages, a better plan is to make the test of one ink at one fountain on a press and test the other samples in the corresponding fountains on other presses, so that the same matter is printed with each ink.

In making these tests the quality of paper used should be kept as nearly uniform as possible, as variations in the paper affect the results to a certain extent.

During these tests the running qualities of the various inks should be noted, and the time required for washing rollers and plates should be considered in determining the relative costs. There is a great difference in the way different inks pick up and retain the paper fluff and dust, or pass it on.

In testing colored inks for newspaper use it is necessary that the various samples be tested on identical pages, as the printing surfaces of the various color plates may vary greatly from one issue to another.

If the length of the run permits, the quantity of each sample required to print 10,000 papers should be determined—20,000 will be better, as the significance of slight errors in weighing will be minimized. The fountains should be scraped out and wiped clean, and the number of pounds and ounces of ink required for the run should be noted.

A simple way to do this is to weigh the various sample inks in the original containers and record the gross weights of each before filling the fountains. Then fill up the fountains and print 10,000 papers, after which the ink remaining in fountains should be scraped out and returned to the containers, and again weighed.

A Simple Way

The difference represents the net weight of ink used. The scales used for this purpose should be accurate to the half ounce, in order to obtain correct results. Scales of fifty pounds' capacity, similar to those used by grocers, are well adapted to this purpose.

After ascertaining the quantities required from each lot of samples the results should be tabulated for comparison. The following table shows a suitable form for this purpose, the figures shown being hypothetical:

"A"	Total					5.92
"B"	Total					6.54
"C"	Total					6.17
"D"	Total					7.87

After samples have been tested for covering capacity and quality of work and the selection of the ink to be purchased has been made, small samples should be taken and carefully marked for subsequent identification. A memorandum should be made showing the identifying numbers or marks on the containers, manufacturer's name, and such other details as are required.

The memorandum should be signed by two, or preferably three persons, in whose presence the samples were taken, who may be called later on as witnesses to identify the samples in the event of controversy as to variations in the quality of subsequent deliveries.

In addition to these samples, the purchaser should take another set of samples for use in checking the quality of later deliveries. The quantity so set aside should be based on the number of tests to be made: if the contract is for one year and tests are to be made each week, one or two pounds of each kind of ink will be sufficient.

In testing inks, a slight variation in the strength of color may be detected readily by taking a small quantity of each ink and reducing it to a tint by mixing it with white ink. By comparing the resulting tints with one another the variations in tinctorial strength are made strikingly apparent, whereas it would be impossible to measure the difference by comparing the rub-outs of the inks themselves.

Importance of Scales

For testing printing inks an accurate set of scales should be used. The best type is the precision balance used by chemists, as illustrated, but, if this is not available, a balance such as used by storekeepers may be used, but in such cases larger quantities of ink must be tested than are required when a balance of the proper type is used, in order to reduce the percentage of error.

Illustration of Balances for Testing Printing Inks.

The metric system of weights is the most convenient for these tests, as the results are reduced to percentages, which are more easily calculated from the metric weights than from other systems of weights.

The weighings are also performed with the balance enclosed in like manner, in order to avoid error from the effect of air-currents upon the beam. The beam should be removed from the center support, when not in use, in order to avoid rolling the delicate knife-edges, upon which the sensitiveness of the balance depends.

The beam should be removed in this manner when putting the material to be weighed in the pans, also when changing the weights, in order to avoid giving the least shock to the knife-edges.

Before proceeding to weigh an article, the balance must be tested to see that it is in equilibrium with the pans empty. The beam should then be removed from the center support and weights of 50 grams put in each pan. The balance should be in equilibrium; if not, small weights should be added to one side until it balances, and the number of milligrams required to balance it should be noted carefully. Then the weights should be changed from one pan to the other and balanced again as before.

In Case of Trouble

If the balance is in equilibrium in both weighings, it is correct and may be depended upon for accurate results, provided the weights are correct.

If, however, in each weighing additional weights must be placed in the same pan, the arms of the balance are not of equal length and accurate results cannot be obtained until the balance is adjusted.

Such adjustments should be made only by an expert skilled in this line of work, as the balance may be ruined beyond repair if adjustments are attempted by anyone without the necessary skill and experience.

In the event it is impracticable to have the balance repaired, it may be used by weighing the article twice, first in one pan and then in the other. The true weight is the geometric mean between the two weights, and is derived by extracting the square root from the product of the two weights.

In practice the sums of a good balance are so nearly equal that the simple arithmetic mean of the two weights is a sufficiently close approximation to the geometric mean required by theory. The arithmetic mean is derived by adding the two weights and dividing by 2.

If in the two test weighings, the extra weights must be added to different pans, the weights are inaccurate and should be corrected by comparison with accurate weights or new weights obtained. The weights must be accurate to a degree of the sensitiveness of the balance; in this case they must be within 1 milligram of absolute accuracy.

When the balance and weights have been tested and found correct, the test of the printing inks may be proceeded with.

Testing Tints

A supply of small sheets of good quality or bond paper should be provided, about three or four inches square. One sheet should be placed in each pan of the balances, and the scales balanced.

Weigh out on one sheet a given quantity of mixing white ink, say twenty grams; then weigh a given quantity of the original sample ink, say one per cent of the white, or two hundred milligrams.

These two lots of ink should then be scraped from the paper and put on a plate glass mixing slab and thoroughly mixed with an ink knife until the mass is of uniform color throughout.

In the same way exactly the same quantities of mixing white and the ink to be tested should be weighed and thor-

TO TURN BACK HANDS OF TIME FOR A. A. C. W.

New Orleans Will Portray 100-Year Development of South and of Advertising for September Meeting—Plans Disclosed at Conference

(BY TELEGRAPH TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

NEW ORLEANS, June 3.—Members of the executive board of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World left today for their homes after completing general plans for what promises to be the greatest convention in the organization's annals, here September 21-25.

Their final action before departure was to give enthusiastic approval to a program of entertainment arranged by the local convention board, this program made public tonight, comprises a series of spectacles which in immensity and novel conception promise to rival the mardi gras carnivals, which have done so much to spread the fame of the Crescent City.

Monday night, September 22, the Vieux Carre—the historic French and Spanish section of the city—will step backwards more than 100 years, and will live again as it lived then, pulsating with the life and customs of 1803.

Good Old Days on Mississippi

Tuesday night, September 23, the Mississippi River—father of waters—once more will come into its own; not with the chugging gasoline-driven barges and machine-efficient commerce facilities of today, but with the carriers of the good old days in late fifties, when the "Robert E. Lee" raced up and down the river, when the mighty stream hummed with the commerce of the steamboat and when the levee scenes with their picturesque background formed the heart of the romance and the literature of Dixie.

For those two nights New Orleans is going to turn back the hands of time.

But the reconstruction of the old life in the French section and the renaissance of life on the river as it existed before the war will not complete the series of spectacles that will feature the entertainment program.

The third will be "New Orleans in 1919"—the Metropolis of the South—battling its way to a high plane among the great, progressive, useful cities of the world.

And the third spectacle will be no less interesting than the other two. It will be staged on the wide grounds of the New Orleans Country Club. Airplanes, naval dirigibles, wireless telegraphy and countless other markers of present day progress will be brought into play to present a true picture of New Orleans today.

Get Acquainted Events

Entertainment actually will start on Sunday night, by which time it is expected that thousands of visitors will have arrived. Sunday night's program will be a glad-hand, get-acquainted series of events. A band will be stationed on every corner of Canal street, and it is on that thoroughfare that other features for the night will be held.

On Monday night, it is planned to throw open the entire French section, just as it was in 1803, the year of the Louisiana Purchase. French, Italian and Spanish societies will be invited to participate.

The famous French market will be open, with everything just as it was in 1803. Men and women prominent in history of those days will be impersonated.

NEW YORK CIRCULATION MANAGERS IN THE CATSKILLS

The Circulation Managers' Association of Greater New York and vicinity paid tribute to one of the greatest of American summer resorts in their annual outing, May 26-28, in the Catskill Mountains. A series of business talks was interspersed with several social events, including a banquet. James McKernan, of the World, chairman of the New York Association, and Richard Barrett, publicity director of the Catskills, were in charge of the party. Newspapermen from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Massachusetts attended. Among those present follow:

J. M. Annenberg, circulation manager, Albany Knickerbocker Press; Frank Appleby, ex-mayor, Asbury Park, N. J.; R. S. Barrett, director publicity, the Catskills, Catskill; W. Braun, American News Company, New York City; H. Braelow, Newsdealers' Supply Company, Newark; J. Bannon, Newsdealers' Supply Company, Newark; L. Brick, New York Tribune; B. C. Block, New York; M. J. Burke, circulation manager, Brooklyn Daily Eagle; Howard Connelly, superintendent, newspaper and periodical division, railway mail service; New York Postoffice, New York; Frank A. Collier, Nassau News Company, New York; W. A. Cottell, New York American; Dr. M. D. Cronin, Albany.

W. J. Dempsey, the World; Edward Falk, New York American; J. Gross, New York; M. L. Goodman, the Scrantonian, Scranton; M. Ginsburg, Publishers' representative, Mount Vernon; Ralph Gerth, Shatfield News Company; W. Hoffman, circulation manager, Staats Zeitung; C. Hitzig, Metropolitan News Company, New York; F. Holweg, the World; H. Huess, the World; Alex Hesse, New York; Walter Hesse, New York; Julius Hesse, New York; William Henry, New York American; Peter Haigney, manager, Eagle Information Bureau, Brooklyn; J. Kelly, New York Herald; Andrew Kelly, New York; H. P. Koppleman, publishers' representative, Hartford; W. Kessler, the Scrantonian, Wilkes-Barre; H. Kirchner, New York.

E. Laing, publishers' representative, Plainfield; James McKernan, circulation manager, the World; Frank McCabe, classified advertising manager, the World; Charles Monaghan, the World; Frank O. Raw, Tribune; W. J. Powers, Utica Press, Ilion; A. H. Pratt, the World; A. C. Ruchdaschel, American News Company, New York; Victor Ryberg, circulation manager, Morning Telegraph; W. Rague, the World; S. Rachles, publishers' representative, Passaic; L. W. Schmidt, the Tribune; C. M. Stott, circulation manager, Courier News, Plainfield; J. M. Scott, the World; J. A. Savadel, Fourth Estate; S. Samuels, World; F. Schlosser, World; Ernest A. Scholz, circulation manager, Crowell Publishing Company; H. W. Shuck, Asbury Park; L. Weinstock, Metropolitan News Company; E. Weisman, World; S. Wolfe, Utica; J. Wimmer, Scranton Scrantonian.

AWAIT FORD'S ADVENT ON WITNESS STAND

Preliminary Testimony for Plaintiff in Case Against Chicago Tribune Deals with Company's Attitude Toward Enlisted Men.

The suit of Henry Ford against the Chicago Tribune for $1,000,000 libel damages goes forward slowly at Mt. Clemens, Mich. As the plaintiff's case has not yet been fully presented—Mr. Ford himself not yet having taken the stand—and as the case of the defense promises to require weeks for presentation, the contest may be prolonged well into the vacation season.

During the past week many witnesses have testified concerning Mr. Ford's policy toward employees who had enlisted for military service. On Tuesday the wives of three employees who had entered the service testified to having told Ford investigators that they were not in need of what were called "gratuities" in the Ford Educational Department. They admitted that, later, when trying to secure the discharge of their husbands from military duty, they had made affidavits certifying that they were dependent upon their husbands for support.

The Solomon News Company, of Detroit, a distributor of the Tribune, and offered immunity from damages by the Ford counsel, insists upon remaining in the case as a co-defendant, and of assuming full responsibility before the law for circulating the alleged libelous matter.

It is anticipated that the testimony of Mr. Ford will prove highly interesting, and that his cross-examination will consume a good deal of time.

EVENING SUN NEW AD HEADS

Colburn and Apgar Have Succeeded De Lisser and Hamilton.

L. A. N. De Lisser, who recently resigned as advertising manager of the New York Evening Sun to organize Hamilton-De Lisser, Inc., publishers' representatives, with J. R. Hamilton, who resigned as foreign advertising manager of the Sun, has been succeeded on the Evening Sun by C. F. C. Colburn, advertising accountant for that paper.

Mr. Colburn was for many years advertising accountant for the New York Press and went with the Evening Sun when the Press was merged with the Sun publications. He began his newspaper career as an office boy on the Press.

Mr. Hamilton is succeeded as foreign advertising manager of the Sun by P. L. Apgar, who recently returned from war service abroad.

Stone to Address Telegraphers

Melville Stone, president of the Associated Press, who returned recently from France, where he had supervision of A. P. news of the peace conference, will not return to France this year. It is likely that he will make a trip west this month, visiting a number of cities, including Peoria, where he has been invited to address the Associated Press Good Fellowship Club, composed of news telegraphers.

Okmulgee Democrat Building Home

OKMULGEE, Okla., June 3.—A five-story building, costing approximately $200,000 is to be erected for the Democrat and the J. H. Rebold Oil interests. Construction will be begun about June 15 and it is to be completed by January 1. The three upper floors will be rented as offices.

RANKIN ADVOCATES FOR ADVERTISERS THE FOCH METHOD OF "TIMELINESS"

Prominent Advertising Agency Man Shows How National Advertisers May Win Wide Markets Through Concentrating on Dominant Newspapers—Elements of Expense and Effectiveness Considered from Standpoint of Experienced Space Buyer

WILLIAM H. RANKIN, president of the Wm. H. Rankin Company, Chicago, and chairman of the Newspaper Division of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, presents herewith an illuminating analysis of the possibilities and costs of National Advertising Campaigns, conducted on a large scale, through the columns of the leading newspapers in one hundred American cities.

Mr. Rankin, impressed with the value of the statistical information on newspaper circulations and rates as contained in EDITOR & PUBLISHER for January 11-18, and in subsequent issues, has already made effective use of these surveys in planning campaigns for his clients and is arranging to have the entire series of tabulations, as published in these pages, bound in convenient volumes and placed in the offices of each of the 117 advertising agencies belonging to the A. A. A. A.

The outline of major national advertising campaigns, to run through dominant newspapers, as formulated by Mr. Rankin and presented in this article will serve to make clear to advertisers the economy of using newspapers and the impossibility of securing localized appeal through the use of any other mediums. It is the clear-headed analysis of a man who holds no bias in the matter of mediums, who does not carry any special brief for newspapers, who buys advertising space for his patrons in magazines and in all sorts of periodicals, but is impelled by a consideration of obvious facts to point out the dominating value of the great primary medium —the newspaper.

BY WILLIAM H. RANKIN.

National newspaper advertising—which enables you to reach a far greater number of prospective customers; which enables you to put over your selling story when it is TIMELY—the Foch method; in which you do not waste one penny in advertising in territory in which you have no distribution; which enables you to DOMINATE your competitors and invariably to gain the attention of the community in which you are making your sales effort.

An advertiser can buy one full page in the first 100 cities in the U. S. A. in 100 morning newspapers for $21,486.

10,000 lines in the same papers for $89,346.

With a national circulation of nearly 6,000,000.

One full page in one afternoon newspaper in 100 cities for $22,632.

With a national circulation of 6,315,517 daily.

These are days in which competition to secure national markets has become so keen that individual business firms are eagerly searching for new methods by which to DOMINATE the attention of the public and to dominate it FIRST; searching for methods that will give more intensive sales results than can be obtained by any other form of advertising.

This method has been found. Necessity mothered its discovery. National sales organizations cannot operate successfully without national advertising.

Like everything else that is new, it is an old method with a new potentiality—which all of us, and not just a few, should have put to use long ago—that is, NATIONAL NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

The ability of national newspaper advertising to create national sales and to increase their volume has already been demonstrated in actual practice. Many millions of dollars have already been spent for the United States Government in this way, helping to bring to the Government billions of dollars in return. Millions more have been spent in this sort of advertising by commercial firms; and the results they have obtained have been highly remunerative. The thing has been tried out, thoroughly. It works every time!

Afraid of the Expense

Nevertheless, I hear many men saying, "But to advertise in every newspaper in every city in the United States would cost so many hundreds of thousands of dollars that no advertiser could afford to pay that price."

But who would ever suggest that an expenditure of such size is NECESSARY? Here is a concrete case into national advertising through the magazines it does not advertise in every magazine of national circulation. The advertiser selects the very best magazines only; and these he finds sufficient for his needs.

So it is with national advertising through the newspapers. By using judgment and discrimination in selecting the newspapers to be used, the advertising counselor can prove to the advertiser that newspapers so selected are certainly the most productive, fully as economical, and absolutely the most highly EFFECTIVE method of reaching the consumer nationally, having always in mind what will bring the best results per dollar invested in advertising.

Does that sound like an extravagant claim? I believe that every business man seeking to do a national business successfully should read every word of this article. He will be convinced that this claim is founded on absolute fact.

What Will Such a Campaign Cost?

Suppose we take one newspaper in each of the first one hundred cities in the United States. Select in each one of these cities the newspaper which has the largest circulation in that city, according to the Audit Bureau of Circulations report—the largest, whether morning, evening, or Sunday. The combined circulation of 100 morning newspapers is 5,928,687 per issue—in round numbers, 6,000,000.

To reach the 6,000,000 readers of the 100 morning newspapers selected—all different readers, all in different communities—would cost approximately $44,699.

How well does the circulation of these 100 selected newspapers blanket the United States?

The 100 newspapers selected stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Canadian line to the Gulf of Mexico. Each zone of circulation virtually touches another.

To Blanket the Country

Here is the one kind of national newspaper advertising that can be done most effectively and economically. This is the campaign that begins in one center and expands, as events warrant it, until it interlocks with campaigns radiating from other centers.

For example: A campaign started in the newspapers of Boston, New Haven, Hartford and Providence expands through the circulations of these newspapers until it meets that of the New York City newspapers on its national way westward. The circulation limits of New York newspapers dovetail in with those of the newspapers of Newark, Philadelphia and Washington; with those of Buffalo, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh; and these in turn interlock with the zones of influence created by the newspapers of Cincinnati, Louisville, Nashville, Atlanta, Jacksonville, Birmingham and New Orleans.

The national newspaper campaign that is started from Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle radiates eastward through the circulation zones of these cities to meet and dovetail in with the circulation zones of Spokane, Helena, Denver, Dallas, Oklahoma City, San Antonio, Houston and Fort Worth and on eastward through Minneapolis, St. Paul and Kansas City, to pass through St. Louis and cross the Mississippi from Canada to the Gulf. From St. Louis the widening radiation of forces meets and interlocks with that spreading from Omaha and Des Moines, and fuses with the great zone dominated from Chicago.

Greatest Unit of Advertising Power

Then, passing eastward through Indianapolis, Detroit and Columbus, it reaches the fusion of 200 afternoon and morning newspapers into one national medium—a single mighty medium with a total national circulation of more than 11,500,000 copies; the greatest single unit of power in the realm of advertising!

By this amalgamation a new giant is suddenly born, full-grown. Its name shall be "The National Newspaper Unit." It stands ready to serve national advertisers as they have never before been served.

Thirty per cent of the entire population of the United States is in these 100 cities—upwards of 30,000,000 people, with a newspaper entering every home. And forty per cent of the combined circulation of these 100 selected newspapers is among the farmers on rural mail delivery routes and in the suburbs of the cities in which these newspapers are published. Six million readers, North, East, South and West, in farm, city and suburb—this is the audience of the advertiser who uses 100 morning newspapers alone.

It is generally conceded that a morning newspaper in most cities is the one that is given the most careful reading by business men. For this reason advertisements directed to men are, in most cases, preferably published in morning newspapers. A national campaign in morning newspapers would cost as follows:

Morning Newspapers

5,000 lines, one time, in 100 newspapers	$44,699
500 lines, ten times (once a week for ten weeks)	"
50 lines, double column, 100 insertions	"
(Daily for three months, or weekly for a year and 11 months)
Full page, one time, in 100 newspapers	$21,456

Afternoon Newspapers

Champions of evening newspapers point out that the evening newspaper reaches the home and stays there. Not the father alone, they show us, reads the evening paper, but also the mother, sister and brother—all read the home-delivered afternoon paper. A national campaign in evening newspapers would cost as follows:

Full page, one time, in 100 newspapers	$22,632
5,000 lines in the same newspapers	47,186
10,000 lines in the same newspapers	93,209
20,000 lines in the same newspapers	186,269
50,000 lines in the same newspapers	479,172

The circulation of this list of afternoon papers is 6,315,557, daily; and when you stop to consider that, by using a 50,000-line schedule in these cities you could use ten full-page advertisements, forty quarter-page advertisements, and still have left 10,000 lines which would permit of a double-column, 50 lines, advertisement twice a week throughout the entire year, you can readily see the extraordinary possibilities of such a campaign.

Sunday Newspapers

There are a great many advertisers who prefer the Sunday newspapers for their advertising; and those who have that preference can buy a full-page in the first one hundred newspapers in the country, for a national campaign, for $26,940. 1000 lines, $53,000; 10,000 lines, $108,000; 20,000 lines, $250,065; 50,000 lines, $533,701. The total number of subscribers reached it 7,339,403; and I am sure many of you will compare this circulation with that of any other national medium you cannot help but be favorably impressed.

Most advertisers in national magazines are able to forecast, weeks and months in advance, just what seasonable arguments they wish to make in favor of their products on the publication date of any magazine and are therefore able to prepare effective "copy" in time to meet the mechanical requirements of the magazines whose form closing dates are usually weeks in advance of the date of publication. It is no argument against the continued use of national magazines to point out that many advertisers can prepare doubly effective copy by using newspapers. "Copy" exactly pertinent to the hour and to local conditions can be prepared, and sharp blows can be struck with an immensely telling effect in the business world as in military campaigns.

In the case of many articles this element of TIMELINESS is an absolutely essential feature; adequately met by the newspapers alone.

To Prevent Non-Distribution Waste

While the newspaper campaigns outlined here are designed to cover the country from coast to coast many merchandisers will prefer to select newspapers in such a manner as to cover certain districts more thoroughly in which their distributing facilities are well provided for; and to omit the use of newspapers in other districts in which their distribution is of lesser importance.

Such a selection of territory for intensive cultivation cannot be made by the advertiser who uses national magazines exclusively.

The magazines themselves provide further showings in distribution of their circulation. The advertiser perceives that, in order to reach certain sections in which he is prepared to make sales of his product, he must pay for circulation in districts which are of no immediate value to him.

National advertising through newspapers carries with it no such wasted expense. The advertiser need select no newspaper whose circulation does not go hand in hand with his own sales facilities.

"Dominating" Through Big Space

A quarter-page advertisement in a newspaper always attracts attention. A full-page advertisement in a newspaper COMPELS attention. It can't be "buried."

All advertisers are striving today to dominate in particular mediums, but there is no way that you can dominate nationally in national advertising so well as to dominate in national newspapers as well as local newspapers.

The recent work done by advertising men, first for the Red Cross, then for Smilease, and for the Liberty Loan, and for the "18 to 45" Draft, has taught business men that the new big thing in advertising—that is, the "dominant plan" to reach masses of people—is a full-page advertisement in the daily newspapers.

In my own experience I have seen, through newspaper advertising, the cost of selling a $1 membership in the Red Cross reduced from the average of sixteen cents, without advertising to less than seven cents per dollar member. That was done with full page newspaper advertising used in a dominant way; that is, seven full pages in each of the seven daily papers in the city of Chicago.

ADVOCATES FOCH METHOD OF TIMELINESS

The original plan was to secure 150,000 members for the Red Cross in Chicago; but, because of this dominant newspaper advertising, paid for by patrons of Chicago business men, at the end of six weeks we had secured 416,000 members—an object lesson in the economic value of newspaper space when properly used.

It is said that more than $130,000,000 will be spent in national newspaper advertising during the year 1919. A very much larger sum than that will be spent in newspapers by local merchants. When all national advertisers wake up to the value of national advertising campaigns in newspapers, the $130,000,000 will jump to $300,000,000 almost over night.

A New Era in Advertising

This new method, National Newspaper Advertising, that made the U. S. war activities promotion so successful, is now being put into use for commercial purposes. In the city of Chicago there is running now and has been running for the past thirty days, a "Build Now" campaign—a campaign of full-page advertising in every daily newspaper in the city of Chicago, backed up by consistent smaller advertising copy. In less than thirty days after the campaign commenced an item appeared in the Chicago Tribune showing that during the month of April there had been more building permits issued than in any month during the past five years. "Copy" for this campaig is now being sent out nationally, and Chambers of Commerce and buildings associations are being asked to father and pay for the campaign in their individual cities.

Plan for Advertising Nationally

In order that advertisers may know the value of small-town newspaper advertising we have worked out a plan whereby we have divided up the country into thirteen distributing districts or zones. We have figured the cost of 5,000 lines in every newspaper in each district and we show in the accompanying tables the price of such campaigns and the total circulation, based on one paper in each city, also every newspaper in each city. We have shown separately the cities over 50,000 inhabitants and those under. Then we have shown the total cost of such campaigns in the thirteen districts and also the newspapers that are represented by the American Press Association.

So, in answer to the question "What is the best way to advertise in newspapers nationally?" we recommend:

First, that a campaign be placed in the first one hundred cities in the United States, with a total circulation of approximately 6,000,000 in the morning newspapers, 6,500,000 in the afternoon newspapers and 7,400,000 in Sunday newspapers.

Then select a local territory where your goods are on sale and where you are sure you will get the maximum results per dollar spent—that is to say, where your salesmen have already sold the dealers and your goods are on sale—and work that intensively, with special advertising in the newspapers of that locality, the dailies and the weeklies.

During a recent investigation we found that local dealers in the smaller towns have the following preference for advertising media: They believe first, in advertising in thei local newspapers; second, they believe in large city newspapers to back up a campaign in the local town; third, national magazine advertising.

There is no power that will do more to take them goods off the shelves than advertising in the local newspaper in those towns—especially if such local advertising is backed up by NATIONAL NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

There is no better way to get your goods on the dealers' shelves than through such advertising; and you will find the publishers of those papers wield a decided influence with the dealers in those towns listen to the local publisher and do everything in their power to place on sale goods advertised in the local newspapers.

To Get Best Results

To get from national newspaper advertising its best results the advertiser should conduct a campaign of this sort for at least a full year, and, preferably, for three years.

It would practically eliminate all chance of unsatisfactory results from a newspaper campaign if the campaign were carried through for twelve months. Insertions at least twice a week, with a judicious combination of large and small sized copy, should be used.

Other factors being what they should be, such a campaign guarantees success.

Today is the day on which you and every other American business man who has axes to grind should be sharpening for his products should act. Consult today with your advertising agent as to the ability of national newspaper advertising to serve you. Or, if you have no agency connection, write to the Newspaper Division, American Association of Advertising Agencies, Metropolitan Tower, New York, for counsel. The association has a membership of 111 advertising agencies with headquarters from coast to coast.

National newspaper advertising will enable you to broaden your audience to a tremendous degree; it will enable you to reach that augmented audience swiftly; it will economize your advertising effort with your sales facilities, eliminating wasted effort in advertising; it will enable you to DOMINATE.

The day of national advertising through national newspapers is here, and the EDITOR & PUBLISHER, the A. N. P. A. and the American Association of Advertising Agents will do all in their power to make it the national advertising unit—the standard by which all others are measured.

Corrections

Through an error in the tabulation of magazine and newspaper advertising rates in the issue of April 17, the figures showed an average cost per line per thousand of circulation for morning and evening newspapers of the United States of .0047441. This should have been .00215169. In the issue of May 15, it was made to appear that Des Moines has two morning newspapers and one Sunday paper. There is but one morning newspaper in Des Moines and three Sunday papers.

Memorial to E. P. Call

Friends of the late Edward Payson Call, business manager of the New York Journal of Commerce and treasurer of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, have been invited to attend a special memorial service at the New Church, 35th street, between Lexington and Park avenues, New York, Sunday morning, June 8, at 11 o'clock. The service will be conducted by Julian K. Smyth, the pastor.

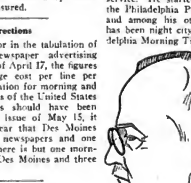
Clarke Locates in Sharon

SHARON, Pa., May 30.—The Petroleum Iron Works Company of Ohio, with general offices in this city, has appointed Robert Clarke, Jr., to handle its advertising. Mr. Clarke was at one time with the General Fire Proofing Company, Youngstown, Ohio, and for the past 20 months has been in France and Italy with the army aviation service.

Special Edition by Shriners

A special issue of the Tulsa (Okla.) World, for May 23, was devoted to the local Shriners, who edited it in part and who solicited the advertising. It consisted of 108 pages, and the advertising revenue was contributed to defray the expenses of the Tulsa Shriners to the June meeting in Indianapolis of the Imperial Council.

Small Moves to Buffalo



BUFFALO, N. Y., June 2.—The advertising of the Hession Tiller & Tractor Corporation has been placed in charge of S. H. Small, late advertising manager of the L. A. Young Industries, Inc., Detroit.

Bland with Butler Brothers

CHICAGO, June 3.—E. W. Bland has joined the advertising department staff of Butler Brothers. He was formerly with Swift & Co.

WHY THE TRIBUNE IS SO NEWSY THESE DAYS

Hood Macfarland, new head of the New York Tribune's city desk, has a record of 27 years in active newspaper service. He started as a reporter with the Philadelphia Public Ledger in 1892, and among his other jobs since then has been night city editor of the Philadelphia Morning Times, night city editor of the Philadelphia North American, city editor of the Philadelphia Evening Times, and head of copy desk and telegraph editor of the New York American. He has been on the New York Tribune since 1916.

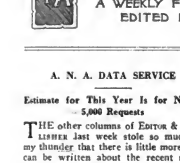
Called in as city editor to organize the Philadelphia Evening Times by Frank A. Munsey, its owner, Mr. Macfarland found the alleged sleepy city a "stop-over" for news gatherers and writers headed for New York. In five years he had all the Philadelphia papers bidding for newspaper men with reputations in the East, West, North and South.

"Mac," as most all know him now, went to the Tribune from the American as a copy reader, and in a very short time he was "discovered." Thereafter he was used as emergency man for any desk where a vacancy occurred. In 1917 he succeeded "Larry" Sloan as night city editor and in October, 1918, moved over to the big city desk. How well he has reorganized the staff can be noted with little trouble by referring to the sort of local stories the Tribune is printing these days.

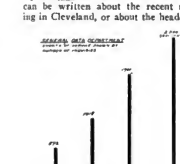
Seattle Will Advertise

SEATTLE, Wash., May 30.—The Chamber of Commerce of this city is contemplating an extensive city advertising campaign. Plans are in charge of Frank C. Dole, a well-known newspaper man, who has been appointed publicity director.

A. N. A. NEWS AND VIEWS



A WEEKLY FEATURE COMPILED AND EDITED BY JOHN SULLIVAN



SECRETARY-TREASURER OF THE ASSOCIATION OF NATIONAL ADVERTISERS

A. N. A. DATA SERVICE

Estimate for This Year Is for Nearly 5,000 Requests

THE other columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week stole so much of my thunder that there is little more that can be written about the recent meeting in Cleveland, or about the headquarters office organization and service. Perhaps, however, the charts shown here will be of interest. The first chart shows the progress that has been made in the General Data Department service during and since 1915-1916. The chart of the Publication Data Department service shows the increase in membership demand during and since 1916-1917.

As will be seen from both charts, the estimate this year is for nearly 5,000 requests for information. If there is any other body of a membership of less than 300 which receives so many requests for data, in addition to carrying on a very great and strenuous general activity of standardization and protection, I would like to be informed. Up to the present I have not heard of any such body.

ANOTHER CASE OF WASTE

LAST week mention was made of the waste of energy, brains and paper in futile endeavors to reach buyers of advertising space, material and service at their general meetings. It is, of course, the function of the advertising man to reach his public in the mass.

When he does so on what is sometimes called the similarity of presentation basis—in other words, when the presentation of his proposition fits in with a correct estimate of mass psychology—he is likely to be right. But when he attempts to reach men in a mass who must necessarily think of his proposition from many different points of view—in fact, as many points of view as there are men and businesses—he may think he is a good advertising man; whereas, in fact, he is a mighty poor salesman.

There was once a salesman of a certain medium who tried to reach his audience among A. N. A. men, not by seeking to talk to them in a meeting, but by addressing individual letters to them when attending a convention. I can well remember the hotel mail clerk handing a great pile of fairly expensive, first-class postage communications to me with a rueful look and an apologetic air, and the dubious inquiry, "Do you want these, Mr. Sullivan?"

Not one man "bit."

The letters were taken into the meeting room, and the men were advised they would be laid on the table for them to take away. Although they were not exactly an ornament to the platform table, the letters were allowed to remain there, and especially because no one appeared interested attempted to interfere with their staying there.

In fact, every man seemed to be perfectly content that the important communication addressed to him should not reach him.

At the end of the three days' session, there were as many letters in the pile as on the first day. They were there, because anyone connected with the A. N. A. has a very great respect for the mails, since A. N. A. men use them so prolifically, carefully taken back to the hotel mail clerk, who, with much consideration in his voice, said that he would see that they were given back to the post office authorities as undelivered mail. There was probably, at a conservative estimate, an expenditure of $10,000 involved or wasted.

MORAL: Don't worry a man with your business when he is away from his office at a convention, or in his club, unless he invites you.

CO-OPERATION WITH GOVERNMENT AND WELFARE INTERESTS

THE A. N. A. figured so prominently in bringing about the establishment of the Division of Advertising of the Committee on Public Information in connection with the advertising needs of the government during the war that, since the armistice was signed a great many requests have come into the A. N. A. headquarters office that it should try and induce the members of the Association to give advertising space free, gratis, and for nothing.

To all such requests the association has taken a consistent attitude—that of refusal to interfere with the individual conduct of membership businesses. Advice and guidance, however, have never been refused.

This matter of co-operation with government and welfare interests came to the attention of the membership representatives at the Cleveland meeting, and it was decided to have a committee appointed to pass upon all requests for co-operation.

Full particulars will be sent to this committee from the headquarters office and action will be taken only as recommended by the committee.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN TWO CLEVELAND MEETINGS

WRITING in advance of the recent Cleveland meeting, I said that it would be interesting after the meeting to make a comparison between the program, etc., and the program of the last Cleveland meeting, which was held in March, 1915.

I find one item that will be of interest to publishers mentioned in the 1915 program—the Circulation Audit Committee's report, which was a report on the progress of work of certified, standardized circulation audits, the future development of the movement, and how members could co-operate to their own material advantage.

The audit movement at that time was in an anticipatory condition. Much pioneer work had been done and the work of the Audit Bureau of Circulations was really getting into shape. There was not a large degree of definitiveness. There may have been a good deal of hopefulness, but there was also a good deal of "sitting on the fence."

Today it can be said that so far as the A. N. A. is concerned there is no "sitting on the fence." The A. B. C. has made good, and is, without question, the outstanding operating factor in the circulation audit movement. The A. N. A. has finally, as already announced, abandoned its own plan of auditing and is throwing all its weight to the A. B. C.

It is safe to predict that the next year will see a very considerable advance both in extending and intensifying the movement.

OTHER PROGRAM ITEMS

AMONG matters discussed at the 1915 meeting were quite a few subjects that could only be called technical. For instance, whether an advertiser would get better results from the use of full pages or quarter pages; whether it would pay national advertisers to divert a considerable part of their national publication expenditure into the newspaper field; the advertising value of evening papers as compared to that of morning newspapers; the standardization of sizes of magazines and weekly periodicals; the simplifying of the basis for billing advertising; subscription clubbing.

Nothing approaching these subjects was discussed at the recent Cleveland meeting. And it is the opinion of quite a few men in the association that it would be impossible to hold a meeting together today if these well-worn subjects were brought forward for discussion.

A. N. A. men today discuss, when they do discuss, technical problems in an objective rather than in a subjective manner. In other words, when they discuss them, they do not talk as if they were sitting at a desk, but as if they were actually in the presence of the prospect to whom they had to sell their goods. Instead of being content to play in his own yard—and a very circumscribed yard at that—the men who are today handling the advertising of these big companies are living in the field in which the sales are made.

That new spirit was essentially characteristic of the Cleveland meeting. These men were marketing men, not advertising men only. And there was a corresponding impatience with purely technical matters unless there could be expressed a definite relationship between the technique and the sale.

MAKING DATA FROM NEWSPAPERS

AT the risk of being accused of advertising the Chicago Tribune, but as a natural sequence to all that has been written on this page concerning the interest of newspapers in selling their markets and not their circulation only, I should make mention of "The Chicago Tribune's 1919 Book of Facts on Markets and Merchandising" just issued.

To attempt to review this work at length would be quite a job and would require a good deal of space. It has a good deal of the kind of data that, in my opinion at least, national advertisers want.

They want these facts because they are primarily interested in markets, not in mediums.

The work goes farther than the mere presentation of physical data and will be worth while the study of newspaper publishers. Perhaps the criticism may be allowed that there is a little too much about the Chicago Tribune in it, and I suggest that, generally speaking, the best kind of advertising is that which is not too obvious.

A good proposition does not have to splash itself all over everything in order to be accepted.

WILLIS E. BLODGETT has been appointed advertising manager of the Antocar Company, Ardmore, Pa., and will serve as his company's representative in the A. N. A.

J. D. CHAPPELL has resigned from Henry Lindenmeyr & Son, New York, to become assistant sales manager of the General Ordnance Company.

THE Ralston Purina Company, St. Louis, has just been elected to membership in the association. Edward T. Hall, secretary, is the accredited A. N. A. representative.

H. M. DOBSON has been appointed advertising manager of Whitaker-Glessner Company in place of Goodale Grimes.

VALUE OF VICTORY-INTERNATIONAL NUMBER ACCLAIMED BY LEADING NEWSPAPERMEN

Letters of Congratulation to EDITOR and PUBLISHER Indicate Hearty Appreciation of Effort in Interest of a Closer Relationship of the Newspapers of Allied Nations—Hailed as Epoch-Making Achievement in Trade Journalism.

THE Victory-International Number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, issued May 22, has made a profound impression upon the minds of American newspapermen and leaders in the advertising field. Every day since the publication of this record-making number letters have come to this office expressing not merely admiration for the issue as a work of art but of the vast array of information it contained in regard to the press of the Allied countries.

These voluntary expressions from men who count large in the formulation of American public opinion show, also, a general and cordial approval of the theme and purpose of the Victory-International Number. That the time is at hand for a closer union of the free press of the world, for a better mutual understanding between the men of the free nations who mould opinion, is indicated by the attitude of those who have been kind enough to favor us with their appreciation of the work thus inaugurated for world betterment.

Because of their public interest extracts from some of these letters are presented herewith:

Ex-Senator Lafayette Young, Publisher Des Moines Capital:

"I am in receipt of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER of May 22. Because of its beauty and on account of the interesting matter contained in it, I feel impelled to write you this letter of congratulation. It is surely a wonderful publication. I have seen nothing like it for a generation. You have exercised wonderful talent and exquisite taste. Success to you!"

Walter Williams, President Press Congress of the World:

"Permit me to congratulate you, and the other members of your staff, upon the admirable international number of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER. It should, and I confidently believe it will be, of far-reaching service to journalism, and through journalism to humanity."

Roy C. Watson, President-Publisher, Houston Post:

"Your May twenty-second issue is an inspiration!

"Certainly there is nothing which can better forward the understandings of nations than would the juncture of the Press. In its last issue, EDITOR & PUBLISHER lifts the veil and permits us to glimpse some of the marvellous possibilities which lie before us. Too much credit cannot be given to you.

"More power to you!"

Frank Presbrey, President, Frank Presbrey Co., New York:

"I want to offer my congratulations on the Foreign Trade Number of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER, which you published last week. It is a great credit to the newspaper and advertising business, and there is so much interesting matter in it that I have not yet begun to get through it.

"After I have finally finished reading it, I intend to preserve it because of its worth—not only as a publication but for the information it contains."

Louis Wiley, Business Manager, New York Times:

"The international number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER is one of the most ambitious and successful issues of a newspaper trade publication I have ever seen.

"I congratulate you on its worldwide scope. It gives a comprehensive view of newspaper activities throughout the world. It is a publication worth preserving."

A. W. Petersen, President, Inland Daily Press Association:

"I have always noticed that the biggest things happen when I am away. In this case not only the biggest but the best. Upon my return I find your international number of May 22 on my desk. It is a wonderful publication from my point of view. Handsome, interesting and enlightening from first to last. I congratulate you heartily. Courtesy, resourcefulness and originality are conspicuous throughout the publication."

Carl Hunt, Director Extension Division, Associated Advertising Clubs of World:

"That Victory Issue is the best thing the EDITOR & PUBLISHER has ever done —and that is saying something. Congratulations!"

Irving K. Stone, President, Duplex Printing Press Co.:

"I have just received your very striking, and not only striking but splendid, edition of the 22nd, and I certainly must congratulate you and your staff upon getting out such an issue.

"I have been very much interested in going through it page by page. No wonder you have been so exceedingly busy and required additional space for your offices, getting together the amount of material and doing the work which is evidenced in this number!"

J. E. Pierce, Editor, Huntsville (Ala.) Times:

"Permit us to congratulate you on the handsome success of your special number, "Victory." It was a wonderful and most successful effort. The whole newspaper world will benefit and profit because of that publication. Words are inadequate with which to express full appreciation and congratulations, but accept, please, our warmest and most cordial greetings."

Frank P. MacLennan, Topeka State Journal and Director, Associated Press:

"Your international number, May 22, was simply great. With you I am proud of it and its valuable contents. The title and back pages are classic beauties."

Frank S. Neighbor, Newark (O.) American Tribune:

"We are indeed pleased to exchange greetings. That international number was a poppin. It is chock full of good stuff from cover to cover, and shows quite an enthusiastic effort. Please accept our sincere congratulations. We enjoy reading EDITOR & PUBLISHER."

William Johnston, New York Sunday World:

"Congratulations on your wonderful international number. It is an achievement of inestimable value in stimulating amity among English-speaking nations.

"It is also such an interesting and valuable record of publishing activities that it is sure to be preserved for reference by every intelligent editor.

"Personally I never could see, anyhow, how any editor could consider himself well equipped without EDITOR & PUBLISHER every week."

John Talman, Newspaper Librarian, Minnesota Historical Society:

"The international edition of EDITOR & PUBLISHER is easily the greatest publication on newspapers that ever came from the press. It is rich in historical and biographical material, which we are glad to have in our library for permanent preservation."

Robert E. Hughes, Louisville Courier-Journal:

"Congratulations on Victory edition. It's a corker!"

T. H. Moore, Associate Director, Bureau of Advertising, A. N. P. A.:

"Anyone of our profession who does not atop to congratulate you on the wonderful international number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, just issued, is committing a distinct social error.

"I think without question that this number is the high water mark in your achievements, and you have some splendid milestones behind you.

"EDITOR & PUBLISHER was great nationally—you have made it great internationally."

John T. Toler, Atlanta Constitution:

"I am in receipt of copy of your international number. I looked through it carefully and as soon as I was through with it I delivered it into the hands of Mark Howell with your compliments. The edition is certainly a creditable one and you and your staff deserve credit and praise for not only this special number but on account of your regular issues. You are doing a great work and getting out a great paper."

E. S. Dobson, Newark (N. J.) Ledger:

"I want to compliment you on the splendid issue of your recent international edition. It is the finest thing I ever saw, or that has ever been attempted by any publisher that has come to my notice during my long years of newspaper work, and too much cannot be said for the enterprise of the organization that made such an effort the success that I feel sure it must have been. The thanks of newspaperdom should be yours. My hat's off to you."

William B. Bryant, Paterson Press-Guardian:

"That wonderful copy of the international number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER came to my desk this morning, and I cannot help but write you this little note of congratulation. It not only shows broad vision in its conception, but proves the perfection of your great organization. It is one of the most complete and interesting publications ever gotten together."

H. Fisher, London (England) Advertising World (Now in America):

"Please accept my heartiest congratulations on the very fine number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER you got out. Enjoyed it thoroughly and commend your enterprise."

C. O. Monroe, South Haven (Mich.) Tribune:

"We do not recall missing a copy since we have been subscribers, and there is hardly an issue that we have failed to read from cover to cover, always including the advertisements on the covers.

"We have as yet only been able to glance through the international number, but hope to take time to read it as carefully as the regular issues—more so, if such a thing be possible—as it will be well worth it. It is a great achievement, and should go far in promoting a closer understanding between the newspapermen of the great English-speaking nations."

Osman C. Hooper, Columbus, O.:

"I wish to congratulate you on your international number. You have presented the highest possible ideal of journalism and have struck a mighty blow for the League of Nations. When we get your idea of the function of a newspaper, we who are in the business will be better workers and better men and women."

John M. Henry, Council Bluffs (Iowa) Nonpariel:

"Congratulations on your Victory edition. It was like the EDITOR & PUBLISHER to put out such a volume."

G. A. Wiedemann, Philadelphia Evening Bulletin:

"I congratulate you on the very wonderful international edition of EDITOR & PUBLISHER."

S. Blake Willsden, Chicago, Ill.:

"I want to compliment you sincerely on the splendid work you have done. It certainly is great and you deserve success after producing a wonderful edition such as this number."

James McKernon, New York World:

"A copy of the Victory edition of EDITOR & PUBLISHER has reached my desk and I wish to congratulate you on your wonderful achievement. No newspaperman, no matter what field he may be in, can afford to go without EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and, judging from my observation, there are very few of them that do."

J. C. Ross, Business Representative in Montreal of Toronto Globe:

"Permit me to extend my heartiest congratulations on the success of your special issue of the 22nd. It is a most creditable production and is full of interesting matter regarding the world's big papers and the men at the head of them."

DECLARES ORGANIZATION IS NEEDED AMONG EDITORIAL WORKERS

Dr. Bleyer Makes Four Recommendations for Advancement of Profession—Women's Place in U. S. Journalism—Problems Happily Worked out in Australia.

CHICAGO, June 2.—"There are four things that must be done to materially advance the newspaper profession in the United States," declared Dr. Willard G. Bleyer, dean of the department of journalism at the University of Wisconsin, to the gathering of newspaper men who attended the recent annual dinner of the late National Association of City Editors in this city.

"First, every worker should take a personal pride in it and discard the 'game' idea. Europeans say that American newspapermen lack the dignity of their own 'journalists,' but surely we have just as great and abiding a sense of the responsibility of the great work we are doing day by day."

Organization Is Needed Badly

"Moral character must be sustained as a patriotic as well as a personal duty.

"Then too, every newspaper worker should hold membership in some organization for the advancement of his work. He should be as proud of his membership in such a body as the average workman is of his union card.

"Lastly, every newspaper should subscribe to some paper devoted to his own professional interests.

Almost Wholly Unorganized

"It is a significant fact that ours is the sole one of the great professions of the world which remains to-day almost wholly unorganized. Even every other branch of newspaper activity now is strongly entrenched and able to protect its own interests through associations—true in the case of the publishers, the advertising managers, the circulation managers, the publishers' representatives, the free lance writers, the country editors and the suburban newspaper interests.

"Doctors take pride in the fact that they are organized into national, state and local bodies without lowering the ethics of their profession.

"The law fraternity has its bar associations and local clubs. . . . What the English and Australian journalists have done toward organizing—unionizing, if you choose—their profession, we American newspapermen can do just as effectually. We need to do that soon. . . ."

Dr. Bleyer indicated the essential differences between a trade and a profession. "The former," he stated, "is learned almost entirely through one's own experience and, considered in that light, newspaper work really was a trade in Colonial times when every editor was simultaneously a practical printer.

Truly a Profession

"A profession, on the other hand, implies knowledge based on the experience of others than yourself. It implies a different personal attitude from that of the worker in a trade; means looking at one's work from within; never is to be practiced by mere rule of thumb, as is the case with every real trade. Hence, I think, we may best term newspaper work a profession just as truly as any other line of work now recognized as such. . . .

"The future of this country depends directly upon the development of the country's newspapers, both large and small . . . ."

Miss Carol Bird, for nearly ten years past a newswoman and feature writer and now connected with the Detroit Free Press, spoke on "What Newspaper Work Is a Woman Best Fitted For?"

"Perhaps," she stated, "I should paraphrase my subject by asking 'when is a woman really a newspaper woman?' Show me a newspaper woman who is constantly obsessed with self-consciousness of her sex or who is always timorously wondering whether her stories will prove acceptable as written to her city editor, and I'll tell you that she isn't a genuine newspaper woman at all. It is the girl's general manner, her poise and personality which count most for her success in this sort of work. Real newspaper women are born, not made, which isn't either a platitude or a sophistry, but a literal fact.

Women in Journalism

"Like Caesar speaking of Gaul, I should say that all newspaper women may be roughly divided into three varieties: (1) those handling space news and features, (2) those doing society notes, Sunday features, advice to the love-lorn, etc., and (3) those who have undertaken newspaper work because they heard somewhere that it 'is just too fascinating for words.'

"There are in every newspaper office a certain number of women who, by reason of one or another sort of influence, hold their positions as sinecures—who unconsciously have deprived the world of better nurse-girls, housewives, stenographers and governesses than they ever will be newspaper women. It is women of that hap-hazard, haphadasical type who will pull down the reputation of their sex as a whole in the profession.

"It is they, more than anything else, which has in the past and still does prejudice so many city editors against having women on their staffs. They never know nor will learn how to write real news copy, nor seem capable of developing a sense of news value.

"The second group of women workers —those who handle club and society news—are important, I suppose, but their work is necessarily uninteresting, unexciting, and surely they must indulge in it because they like it. Personally I always have been tempted to regard them as martyrs to the cause. . . .

Groups of Women Writers

"And finally there are the 'regulars,'—the girls who really are news-women. They are the sort who are instinctively as well equipped to handle any sort of assignment, with the possible exception of the police run, as any man on the staff. They have a semi-masculine mind; a masculine outlook on life. They know that they cannot afford and have no wish to be prudish. They cultivate a sense of humor; know how to be masculinely concise when they speak and when they write.

"A woman's sex peculiarly fits her to handle certain stories. A tactful, sympathetic woman reporter can enter homes where tragedy stalks—death, murder, suicide—and nine times out of ten she will come away with plenty of colorful material and a photo or two tucked under her arm.

"A clever woman reporter, and particularly if she possesses a pleasing personality, can successfully interview 'big' men or women whose utterances are of interest to the general public, even though these same people are difficult for men reporters to manage. It is instinctive for a woman to understand children, hence she, better than the average man, can write touching stories about them. Everyone knows that to paint a babe into a word picture gives an added touch of interest.

Keenly Observant

"Women are keenly observant. A woman reporter interviewing a murderess, for instance—some one for the time being in the light of publicity—notices that she is wearing a blue gabardine skirt, a white Georgette crepe waist embroidered in pale blue and coral beads, colonial pumps, and that her slim tapering fingers are adorned with two rings, an old cameo and a sapphire, outlined in diamonds. So, in her story, she devotes a descriptive paragraph or two to the woman's costume.

"It is a touch which adds tremendously to the interest of the story insofar as the thousands of women readers are concerned. And, after all, newspapers must consider the likes and dislikes of its women readers. Some statisticians have figured out that 90 per cent of the buyers of the nation are women. "Advertisements, which are the life blood of the paper, are read by the women and the advertisers are patronized by them. Why should not the reading matter of the newspaper be handled in a way that will particularly appeal to all those buying-readers?

"Women reporters are disarming. They do not put one so much on guard as a man interviewer might, and very often people 'come through' with more 'hot stuff' than they would if an alert-eyed, sharp-eared man reporter were doing the news gathering.

"Women have been accused of using 'sex lure' to get desired materials for their newspapers. Why not? If a well-directed smile or two can gain the sought-for story, why not employ them? Men who have 'a way with 'em' are called 'magnetic,' and people say that they owe their success to 'personality.' But a woman's personality is called by the less attractive and more suggestive name of 'sex lure.'

Few in Executive Work

"The executive branch of newspaper work is perhaps the most difficult of all for the average newspaper woman to handle, but that, I believe, is because the powers higher up are so reluctant to give a woman an opportunity to show what she could do in such positions. The youngest cub reporter would willfully scorn to receive assignments from

LOVING TRIBUTE TO McLEAN'S MEMORY

Associates on Philadelphia Bulletin Place Bronze Tablet in Main Corridor to Commemorate Sacrifice of Gallant Officer.

PHILADELPHIA, June 2.—Men and women employes of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin paid tribute on Memorial Day to the memory of Lieutenant Warden McLean, Officers' Reserve Corps, son of William L. McLean, owner and publisher of the paper.

Lieutenant McLean was the first Philadelphia officer to die in performance of his duty after America entered the war against Germany. He was the eldest of three sons of the publisher and Associated Press director, all of whom entered the service, one becoming a major of field artillery and the third a lieutenant of field artillery. All were connected with the newspaper.

The tribute of his associates of the Bulletin to Lieutenant McLean took the form of a bronze tablet, which was unveiled upon the wall of the main corridor of the Bulletin building, northeast corner of City Hall Square, Philadelphia. Impressively simple ceremonies, attended by the entire editorial, business office and mechanical staffs of the newspaper and by the members of the dead officer's family, marked the unveiling of the tablet in the late afternoon of Memorial Day.

Those invited to the ceremony assembled in the corridor, where the bronze memorial was concealed by a silk American flag. Immediately in front of the tablet a small altar had been arranged, with a setting of palms and flowers, and upon a stand covered with a yellow scarf were red, white and blue flowers.

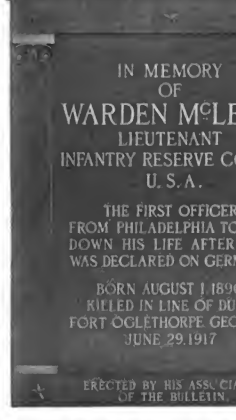
The service was opened with the singing of "Lead, Kindly Light" by a quartet composed of Miss Mary E. Jeffers, Mrs. Lillian Craig, Joseph E. McGlynn and Robert Herman, all Bulletin employes. An eloquent prayer was offered by the Rev. W. Beatty Jennings, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Germantown, Philadelphia, of which church Lieutenant McLean was an active member and worker.

Mr. Craig's Eloquent Tribute

William B. Craig, city editor of the Bulletin, as master of ceremonies, made the presentation speech. He said:

"Mr. and Mrs. McLean, members and friends of their family, fellow-members of the Bulletin organization:

"We are assembled on this Memorial Day—the day that the nation reconsecrates itself to its sacred dead and this anniversary of a deeper significance than any of its hallowed predecessors—to dedicate a tablet to the memory of one of our associates.



"He was the first Philadelphia officer—the first Princeton University graduate—the first Bulletin man—to lay down his life after the United States declared war on Germany.

"He was one of us. None was closer to us in our comradeship. None was more highly esteemed among us for sterling character and conscientious faithfulness to duty.

"When the war clouds hovered, he immediately placed himself at the service of the nation. Happy and successful in the pursuits of peace, and with a business career of great honor and usefulness before him, he set these all aside. No civilian could have stepped forward earlier. At the first sign of trouble, eagerly he offered himself to his country.

"It is with a clutch at the heartstrings that most of us think of his death—so sudden, so unexpected, so tragic.

"We picture his stalwart figure riding amid the guns and caissons of a section of field artillery in far-off Chickamauga Park, famous as a battleground of the Civil War, and we wonder what distinguished military honors might not have come to him had he, in the enthusiasm of his early manhood, been permitted to go forth to those mighty battlefields that have added such imperishable glory to the record of American valor.

"Here, on the south wall of the publication office, hangs the blue silken standard that flew over the officers' training camp at Fort Oglethorpe, named after him by our Government in honor to his memory.

"That flag and that incident of the naming of the camp for him, recalls that men who were his superior in military rank and experience held him in esteem as an excellent officer and a splendid example, morally, physically and mentally, to the young recruits with whom he came in contact.

"So that today, when we dedicate this tablet to his memory, we pay, after all, only a slight tribute to a volunteer soldier, who represented in high degree the best spirit of patriotism in the young men of this community.

"Mr. and Mrs. McLean, in presenting this tablet as the gift of the women and men of the Bulletin, we do so in confidence that the memory of your son, Warden, will go down to future generations of the Bulletin family, a thing of honor as characterless as the immutable bronze of which this simple memorial panel is fashioned."

As Mr. Craig finished, wee five-year-old Mary Kiesel, daughter of one of the employes, pulled the cord, drawing aside the flag and revealing the tablet, a bas-relief with Ionic columns on either side, as shown in the illustration.

The father of the young officer accepted the tablet. He was deeply moved by the tribute and at times his voice was barely audible to those farthest away from him. He said:

"In receiving your impressive tribute to the memory of my son and this permanent token of your regard for him, I am more than ever made to realize how much he was loved by all, and I am deeply moved by the honor you do him on this Memorial Day.

"You have erected, indeed, a fitting and beautiful memorial of one who was among the first to make the supreme sacrifice in that great struggle which was the means of calling forth so much of the best in all of us.

"From every department of your organization there came forward patriotic young men, who nobly offered their all in the service of their country, some of them giving by their lives, and I feel that our record is one of which all of us may be proud.

"Mr. Chairman and your associates, it is with profound feeling, in the name of those to whom, through ties of blood, Warden McLean was very near and dear, that I thank every one of you for this memorial of his pure and sterling life."

The exercises ended with the singing of "America," after which the audience passed before the tablet to view it and then greeted Mr. McLean personally.

Tribune's "Book of Facts, 1919"

The Chicago Tribune's "Book of Facts, 1919," one of a notable series of advertising publications issued by that newspaper, contains an amazingly interesting array of data concerning the great market territory covered by its circulation. Facts are driven home by such graphic illustrations and analytical charts that there is no escaping their force and significance. This Book of Facts carries about every variety of trade information an advertiser could desire. Incidentally, publishers everywhere should study it as an object lesson in effective promotion literature, fitly supplementing trade newspaper advertising.

Elliott Ladd Thurston, a reporter on the Providence Journal, and Miss Margaret Tucker of Providence, have announced their engagement.

IN May The New York Times published 1,669,932 agate lines of advertisements, a greater volume than was ever published in a single month by any New York newspaper.

In five months of this year The New York Times published 7,064,487 agate lines of advertising, more than any other New York newspaper ever printed in any five months of any year.

No other New York newspaper prints so large a volume of advertising, notwithstanding that all advertisements in The New York Times are censored and many columns excluded. Compared with the corresponding period of 1918, the gain of 1,535,457 agate lines represents by far the greatest growth of any New York newspaper.

The net paid circulation of the Sunday edition of The New York Times is in excess of 500,000.

The average net paid circulation, daily and Sunday, exceeds the combined circulation of the three other New York morning newspapers popularly classed with The Times as to quality of circulation.

FOSTER COMPETITION AMONG NEWSIES

Raleigh Times Has Had Splendid Results —A Group of Ideas That Can Be Applied to Any Newspaper— "Atta Boy" Feature.

[AUTHOR'S NOTE—This article is to primarily interest the smaller city newspaper publisher and is written with two purposes in view: 1. To impress upon the smaller publisher the fact that he is "small" possibly because he does not take his circulation department seriously enough.
2. To help the smaller city circulation manager solve his perplexities by giving him the benefit of our experience with (a) "Atta Boy," (b) Carriers' and Sellers' contests. (c) Collecting old accounts. (d) Eliminating complaints. (e) Increasing the street sales by teaching the boys to cry the news. (f) Increasing the number of street sellers by advertising in the movies. (g) The responsibility of the Circulation Manager.]

By LEONARD E. KOLMER,
Circulation Manager, the Raleigh (N. C.) Times.

The spirit of rivalry that throbs in the heart of every American boy is depended upon by The Raleigh Times for success in its city circulation. It is continually appealed to and publicity keeps its fires burning. A system of simple charts, hung conspicuously in the boys' room, shows each boy precisely what he and his competitors are doing. But the school of cards is "Atta Boy," a feature of the regular issue of the paper edited by and devoted exclusively to the circulation department.

"Atta Boy" has unlimited possibilities —it enthuses the boys and tells their folks at home what they are doing better than the publication of an occasional miniature paper can do. It occupies a space of three columns by six to ten inches daily and is kept alive by cartoons and illustrations that the proof sheets of the advertising cut services never fail to produce upon close search and a little ingenuity of arrangement.

Treat Carriers and Sellers Separately

It has a style of make-up all its own and gives all the news about the contests, prizes to be awarded, sick notices, jokes, human interest stories—everything and anything of interest to the boys. All the stories are written to encourage and lead but never to drive.

In The Raleigh Times' contests the carriers and sellers are never pitted against each other. The sellers are "graduated" into the carrier class. The carriers are the "big boys" and every seller is taught to hope some day to be one of the "choseo few."

A carriers' contest two during April netted The Times 45 new subscribers with an average subscription of six months. Votes were won by

1. New subscriptions
2. Collections
3. No complaints
4. Promptness
5. Good behavior.

Five prizes were awarded, the first of which was a bicycle and the others included a baseball outfit, watch, flashlight and pocket compass. The winners were permitted to select their prizes from a substitution group. To prevent interest from lagging, the contest was run for but four weeks and numerous special minor prizes were offered at the end of each week and on threatening days. Large charts recorded each day's result and the standings of all the boys to date.

Votes for Subscriptions

New subscriptions were credited on the basis of 20 votes for each month. Renewals were given the same consideration with the result that carriers induced 60 per cent. of the total city circulation to change from paying weekly and monthly to quarterly and yearly.

On Oct. 1, 1918, The Times went on a "strictly cash" basis and naturally confronted the big problem of collecting back accounts. This was partly solved by giving the carriers votes for collecting these old accounts as well as their current accounts. Ten votes were given for each per cent. collected, and the total was based on the proportion betweeo what the boy should collect and did collect.

At first the old accounts were neglected. To stimulate interest, during the last week of the contest it was announced that 200 votes would be given for every per cent. of old accounts collected thereby giving the lowest standing boy on the chart an opportunity to win the bicycle. Better results were immediately forthcoming.

Promptness, good behavior and no complaints each gave the carriers five votes daily. The first two never have given much trouble, but the last has always presented a hard problem. The Times finds the best solution is to again appeal to the boys' spirit of rivalry and pride and by rewarding honest effort.

Complaints Are Charted

A record of all complaints is kept on a chart in the boys' room. To those carrying their routes without a complaint for a week, movie tickets seem to suffice as a reward.

To those having a clean record for a month, more substantial prizes are given.

In this way the circulation manager can keep tab on his boys, coach the delinquents, and drop the irredeemable. The Times has 26 carrier boys in Raleigh. The first week of the chart system only 11 boys qualified for prizes, the second week produced 18 winners, the third, 23, and the fourth, 24.

Since then the average has not dropped below 20. This record for efficiency is due largely to the habit formed by practically all the boys of either 'phoning or returning to the office after carrying their routes to learn if any complaints have been received. However, this practice is not required.

When a complaint is promptly satisfied, it is not charged. The experience of the writer has been that the average boy in the smaller cities will work harder for a Saturday night movie ticket than for a Victory bond!

The excitement of the carriers' contest enthused the sellers and they too, must have a contest. This was easily managed—one vote for every paper sold. A chart kept the score. Of course the usual selling commission was allowed. In order to prevent clubbing to the hardship of the boys fighting a lone battle, the prizes were strictly individual affairs, and better still, daily, semi-weekly and weekly prizes were offered.

Again, the movie ticket proved the best drawing card, while tickets to the carnival and circus never failed to produce exceptional results. For these minor contests within the big contest, the boys were divided into teams under the leadership of captains.

Movie Ticket Draws Well

One of the grand results of the last Times' sellers contest was an increase of 3335 per cent. in the street sales. Another and far better result attained was the lesson taught the boys that it pays to cry the news and sell the paper on its own merits.

The tendency of the smaller city newsboys is to limit his persuasive powers to "Last Edition, Mister?" or worse still, to whiningly plead "Buy a paper, Mister, please."

This evil in a large measure is being corrected by the circulation manager distributing movie tickets among prospective customers on the streets with the request they be given to the first newsboys who approach them crying the news, showing some "pep," and offering The Times with a smile.

The boys are told about these tickets and it does not take them long to realize this more approved method of salesmanship pays bigger dividends.

Awarded Before All

The awards in all contests, however seemingly small and insignificant, are always made in the presence of all the boys assembled and the elaboratness of the ceremony is only limited by the importance of the contest.

"Atta Boy" never fails to spread the glad tidings by story, and, if warranted, by picture.

The number of newsboys selling The Raleigh Times was doubled in two weeks by the circulation department running slides in the local moving picture parlors to the effect that "the average earnings of 16 boys selling The Raleigh Times during April was $16.25." Once a boy gets into the game, he is pretty sure to stick because The Times is always doing something to stimulate his interest—picnics, fishing parties, hikes, baseball, prizes—something, however insignificant, just so it is something.

But best of all "Atta Boy" sees to it that every boy's home and friends know what he is doing and what a cracking good record he is making, for a roster is kept which guarantees the publication of every name in some connection every so often.

But the biggest and most important result of these contests is the benefit the circulation manager himself derives. He realizes how much more vitally important than planning and starting a campaign is to keep it going and gaining in speed all the time, that he is responsible for failure, and that from him alone must radiate the enthusiasm and "pep" that mean success.

The moment he quits, just so soon will interest lag, and it's far more difficult to revive enthusiasm once dead, than it is to first inculcate it.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among non-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines of advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in new business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial in many ways—It has made new advertisers and helped circulation—It has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for twenty weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

$20,000,000 from Oil

—Just a little more loose change for Texans to spend

Over $20,000,000 in oil! A veritable fusillade of liquid gold. That's the figure, based on production reports of the State Comptroller of Public Accounts for the quarter ending March, 1919. It will be greater for the quarter ending June 30, 1919, owing to added development.

—And all this in addition to the prodigious earnings which annually accrue from cotton, agriculture in general, livestock and an infinitude of other sources which in themselves make Texas an exceptional market.

And right here in the midst of it all—right at the gateway to this wonderful territory—

LOUIS WILEY HONORED ON 50TH BIRTHDAY

LOUIS WILEY

FROM A RECENT SKETCH OF THE BUSINESS MANAGER OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LOUIS WILEY, business manager of the New York Times, attained his fiftieth birthday on May 31, and the event was made the occasion for displaying the attitude of the business and editorial staffs to the celebrant.

Early in the morning on his arrival at his office, Mr. Wiley was greeted by the congratulations and wishes for his future happiness by men and women who have the pleasure of working with him. His desk was adorned with flowers and he was made the recipient of a fine gold and platinum chain amidst the cheers of those assembled.

Hugh O'Donnell made the presentation in felicitous terms, conveying the admiration, affection and respect the members of the staff felt for their manager.

Later on, at a special meeting of the editorial council, Charles R. Miller, the editor-in-chief, presided, and addressed Mr. Wiley, offering him the congratulations of the editorial staff. He voiced the general opinion that Louis Wiley had an important share in building up the New York Times, and he referred especially to his dealing with difficult labor situations.

C. V. Van Anda, managing editor of the Times, presented Mr. Wiley with a handsome Tiffany watch, subscribed for by the entire staff. The watch bore the following inscription:

"Louis Wiley, on his Fiftieth Birthday, from THE NEW YORK TIMES, in grateful appreciation of many years' faithful and invaluable service. May 31, 1910."

In making the presentation, Mr. Van Anda expressed his admiration of Mr. Wiley's career, not only as a newspaperman but as a citizen. In the whole of New York, he said, there was probably no man better known or more favorably known in almost every class or more greatly respected and esteemed. It was pointed out especially by Fred Mortimer that Mr. Wiley was always ready to help others, and he did it quickly and pleasantly.

A letter from Adolph S. Ochs, chief owner of the Times, who was unable to be present, addressed to Mr. Wiley, was read by Mr. Miller, in which Mr. Ochs paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Wiley's qualities. Other addresses were delivered by members of the editorial staff and of the business department. Among those present were Charles R. Miller, C. V. Van Anda, Major Julius O. Adler, Edward A. Bradford, Fred Mortimer, Elmer Davis, Edward M. Kingsbury, Arthur H. Sulzberger, E. S. Friendly, Louis O. Morray, Charles A. Flanagan, Hugh A. O'Donnell, Charles W. Thompson, H. E. Armstrong, Osmond Phillips, and B. T. Butterworth.

RECEIVE NO MAIL FOR DAYS, THEY SAY

New York State Farmers Hold Indignation Meeting and Send Resolution to President Wilson for Return of R. F. D. Service.

FONDA, N. Y., May 30.—Complaints against the inadequacy of present mail deliveries throughout this section were voiced by farmers, newspaper editors from cities all through this section, and business men, at a meeting here Tuesday. Representatives from cities and farming districts from Albany on the east and as far west as Utica were present, and as a result of the meeting a resolution of protest was drawn and forwarded to President Wilson, Postmaster General Burleson and congressmen from the territory involved.

The meeting was easily the largest of the series held throughout northeastern New York in protest against the changes put in effect by the postmaster general, which, it was claimed, have cost business men thousands of dollars already. Newspaper editors at the meeting claimed they were among the largest losers on account of the change.

In the protest the members of the conference demanded a return to the old routes, and efficient service, which they defined as delivery before 3 o'clock in the afternoon. They protested against the lengthening and consolidation of routes, and pointed out the inability of carriers to complete deliveries during inclement weather. Disorganization of business has resulted in many instances already, they declared.

It was revealed that in several places mails had not been delivered to farmers in several days. Farmers protested against this chiefly, they said, because it cut them off from the outside world by preventing the delivery of their daily newspapers, even though the cities in which the newspapers were published was as near as 20 miles.

MECHANICAL EXPERT IS HERE ON VISIT

G. P. Garbett, of Great British Publishing Concern of Odhams, Limited, Investigating American Plants—In Search of New Ideas.

G. P. Garbett, chief electrician of Odhams Limited, one of England's greatest publishing houses, issuing a series of widely circulated publications, including "John Bull," is now in this country on a tour of investigation of mechanical plants of newspapers and of manufacturers supplying newspaper equipment.

JULIUS SALTER ELIAS,

Mr. Garbett's visit will take him as far west as Chicago and Milwaukee. The plant of Odhams Limited, it will be recalled, was almost wholly destroyed by a German bomb, and the firm has been busily engaged since that occurrence in replacing its extensive mechanical equipment. Under war and post-war conditions this has been a gigantic task. The English manufacturers of presses, mechanical equipment, etc., are not yet on a pre-war basis of production. Mr. Garbett finds the situation here somewhat similar, and although American concerns are now operating to capacity the accumulation of orders has been so great that early deliveries are out of the question.

Mr. Garbett has been deeply impressed with mechanical appliances in use in our great publishing plants, and expects to take back with him many new ideas for adoption in England. His mission is one of investigation rather than of placing orders.

Arthur Taylor, of the business department of Odhams Limited, has been in this country for several weeks surveying the methods of business administration, particularly as applied to advertising, in American publishing houses.

Mr. Garbett expresses the hope that the managing director of Odhams Limited, Julius Salter Elias, may shortly visit the United States. Both Mr. Garbett and Mr. Taylor are enthusiastic admirers of the great ability and distinguished achievements of their chief, and accord to him full credit for having built up, in the face of great obstacles, one of the world's greatest publishing enterprises.

"Mr. Elias is not only a man of ability amounting to genius," according to Mr. Garbett, "but he is a man who inspires in the men of his organization a fighting spirit of loyalty and a determination to achieve. A conference with him, however brief, acts as a mental tonic. He is magnetic, understands men and their problems, a natural organizer and leader and is constantly on the alert for new and better methods of doing things."

Mr. Garbett expresses deep appreciation of the courtesy shown to him here by our publishers and manufacturers, and is impressed with the real existence of that closer unity and better understanding between Britons and Americans which has resulted from the intimate cooperation of the two peoples in the great war tasks.

Dr. Rumely Must Stand Trial in Washington

Former Publisher of New York Evening Mail Loses Long Fight to Prevent Extradition.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Dismissal by Federal courts of habeas corpus proceedings instituted by Edward A. Rumely, former publisher of the New York Evening Mail, to prevent his extradition to Washington from New York to answer indictments charging violation of the Trading With the Enemy Act, was upheld today by the Supreme Court in disposing of appeals brought by Rumely. Chief Justice White dissented from the ruling.

As a result of this action, Rumely must come here for trial on indictments charging him with withholding from the Alien Property Custodian the fact that he had custody of certain stock in the S. S. McClure Newspaper Corporation belonging to the German Government, as well as the fact that he owed that Government $1,500,000.

In bringing the proceedings, Rumely contended that by coming here his speedy trial in New York on similar indictments might be prevented.

Pittsburghers Choose Officers

PITTSBURGH, Pa., June 2.—Officers have been elected by the Advertising Club as follows: President, C. F. Ohliger, advertising manager of the H. H. Heintz Company; vice-president, Andrew Connolly, Joseph Horne Company; secretary, W. G. Evans, Harris Pump & Supply Company; treasurer, Robert Rawsthorne, Rawsthorne Engraving Company.

Two More Members for the A. N. P. A.

The Douglas (Ariz.) Daily Dispatch and the Albany (N. Y.) Sunday Telegram have been elected to active membership in the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

Iowa

The last 30 years have brought Iowa 25% more people and 400% more wealth.

MERE numbers of people are more often the cause of poverty than a source of plenty.

From an advertiser's standpoint, better a small market and a rich one than the utmost conjestion in even the wildest area.

Iowa is a proof of the advantages of a moderate growth in population combined with industry, thrift and universal education.

Back in 1889 the revenue of the state was only $2,593,-095, about $1.25 per person, the population being at that time about 25% less than now. It has since steadily risen until in 1917 it reached a sum of over $9,700,000, or about $4.31 per inhabitant.

Growth is thus shown of individual wealth increasing enormously while the population slowly but surely adds to its numbers in a much smaller ratio. THAT is what makes Iowa a state every American should be proud to claim to fellowship.

To the national advertiser, Iowa offers the greatest prize for good advertising—good business.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Is the Dominant Trade Newspaper in Its Field

EDITOR & PUBLISHER is a weekly trade newspaper concentrating the energies of its organization upon the task of giving helpful SERVICE to newspaper makers and national advertisers. Within the space of seven years—the period of its greatest growth—EDITOR & PUBLISHER has forged ahead of its competition in this field, established new and better standards of ethics and practice and demonstrated the possibilities open to a high class trade newspaper for promoting closer relations and more substantial cooperation between newspapers and advertisers.

SERVICE TO NEWSPAPERS

EDITOR & PUBLISHER gathers and prints the NEWS of the newspaper field, without bias or prejudice, holding to the ideal of the square deal to all. News values are determined impartially, accuracy is a primal principle, good will to all a living creed.

The happenings, changes, instances of unusual newspaper enterprise, policies of management, solutions of publishing problems—in brief, the things that constitute NEWSPAPER NEWS are chronicled every week. While naturally covering the American field more intensively, EDITOR & PUBLISHER has staff correspondents in London and Paris, and presents a great deal of news matter concerning activities in this field in Great Britain, Europe and other parts of the world.

Newspaper makers in all lands will find in this journal not only the representative trade newspaper of America, but a publication of world-wide interest and appeal.

Editorially EDITOR & PUBLISHER has won the respect and close interest of editors and newspaper executives—no light achievement, as they constitute the most critical audience in the world. It is frequently quoted in Congressional debates and is considered an authority on problems connected with newspaper making.

SERVICE TO ADVERTISERS

EDITOR & PUBLISHER is the channel of communication between newspapers and space buyers.

Advocating the newspaper as the great primary medium for advertising, EDITOR & PUBLISHER supplements this advocacy by GENUINE SERVICE, week by week, to national advertisers. The Executive Secretary of the Association of National Advertisers contributes a page to each issue in which the interests and affairs of that great organization are treated.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER presents, twice a year, complete lists of the daily newspapers of the United States, with circulations and advertising rates of each paper stated. This authoritative information is not available to advertisers through any other single source. In addition to this, scores of exhaustive surveys of major markets, with analysis of costs for advertising campaigns in such territories, are printed, constituting a service to space buyers of inealculable value.

Thus the interests of those who make newspapers and those who buy advertising space in them are linked together in one publication of equally strong appeal to both classes.

WAR SERVICES OF SHEFFIELD NEWSPAPER MEN

LONDON, May 10.—No review of the remarkable success that has attended the rise of Sir Charles Starmer in the English newspaper field is complete without due mention of the valued services of W. W. Chisholm, editor of the Sheffield Independent, and John Kemp, the advertisement manager. To their efforts, in a considerable degree, the notable public service accomplishments of the so-called "Starmer Big Three," functioned during the period of the war.

Sir Charles is proprietor of the Northern Echo, Birmingham Gazette, Sheffield Independent and a string of important weekly, Sunday and Saturday journals, and well-written papers to gratify readers at the week-end.

The rapidity with which this important string of newspapers and periodicals responded to the urgent needs of the people at home as well as the military forces abroad during the war, and the power that these publications exerted to aid the Government, are notable features of the press war accomplishments. Mr. Chisholm and Mr. Kemp having won high public approval for their participation in this service. The Soldiers' Comforts scheme which the Sheffield Independent launched the day following the declaration of war was everywhere acknowledged as one of the most humanly kind enterprises of the war, while the Independent's flannel sleeping helmet won the approval of the War Office and an autograph letter of commendation from Queen Mary.

Printers Refused to Break Their Contracts

Canadian Publishers Have Not Been Slow to Acknowledge Men's Loyalty in Face of Strike.

OTTAWA, Ont., June 3.—A feature of the wave of industrial unrest in Canada has been the loyalty displayed by members of the International Typographical Union, who have refused to violate their agreements with employers and walk out on strike in sympathy with other branches of organized labor.

While the stereotypers and pressmen struck in Winnipeg, the printers stood by their agreements, and in other centres they took the same attitude, which was advised by international officers of the international body.

A significant development has taken place in Hamilton, where the newspapers have voluntarily given their printers an increase of 20 per cent., although the agreements have still three years to run. It was agreed "That in the event of a general or sympathetic strike being called, in recognition of the press as the best channel for reflection of public opinion, the union agrees to recognize the freedom of the press, and so far as the union is concerned, there will be no interruption of publication."

Canadian publishers have not been slow to recognize and fittingly acknowledge this loyalty. A case somewhat similar to that in Hamilton is Ottawa. Publishers in the Canadian Capital some months ago granted employees increases beyond what the agreements called for, and which in the case of married men amounted to $2 a week. This applied to both mechanical and editorial staffs.

Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Hays, of the I. T. U., has advised Canadian unions to have nothing to do with the One Big Union proposal, which is dividing organized labor in the Dominion into two camps.

The Sixty-third annual meeting of the New Jersey Press Association will be held at Lake Minnewaska, N. Y., from June 27 to 30. The members, wives and friends, who will make up the party, will travel by the Hudson River Day Line boat from New York to Kingston, thence by train to Kerbonkson, and then by stage to the Wildmere House.

INDIANA

Merely a Matter of Millions

Millions of people growing
Millions of bushels of wheat
Millions of bushels of oats
Millions of bushels of corn
Millions of head of cattle
Millions of head of sheep
Millions of head of hogs

All of which are soon to be turned into

Millions of Dollars

Indiana people live—Oh! boy! how they live—and how they like good things to eat and wear and they have not only the taste but the money to gratify that taste.

Indiana is the original home of the Farmers' Alliance.

Indiana people believe in co-operation. They buy of Indiana merchants—goods that they become acquainted with through Indiana daily newspapers.

Give Indiana intensive, co-operative cultivation.

Get your share of this great sum of money which constantly circulates in this great state.

And do not overlook the great manufacturing industries of Indiana. They rank pretty big and furnish lucrative employment to hundreds of thousands of wage earners who have lots of money to spend.

Indiana as a field for merchandising is a field capable of yielding results worthy of the most careful attention on your part.

These Indiana daily newspapers can do great service for you. Put them to work now.

Strike Situation Caused Cancellation—C. P. A. in September

TORONTO, June 2.—Owing to the strike situation throughout the industrial centers of Canada, both Canadian Press, Limited, and the Canadian Press Association have called off the annual meetings which were to have been held here this week.

So far as the C. P. A. is concerned, the convention for this year will likely be held in September.

No matter what your product may be, you first want an Able-to-buy-Public in order to promote a MARKET worthy of cultivation. Think of Population more than 6,000,000 people.

ILLINOIS

Illinois produces 58,000,000 tons of coal annually. This coal is valued at approximately $65,000,000.

Illinois produces 307,000,000 bushels of corn, 175,000,000 bushels of oats, 45,000,000 bushels of wheat annually.

These products are valued at $410,000,000.

Illinois produces $400,000,000 worth of meats and packing house products annually.

Illinois produces $2,000,000,000 worth of manufactured goods annually.

Illinois produces 500,000,000 gallons of milk annually.

Illinois produces 19,000,000 gallons of petroleum annually.

The land value of Illinois is $108.00 per acre—the highest of any state in the Union.

The above is an indication of the purchasing capacity of Illinois folk who can and will buy any worthy advertised article or product if they are informed through newspaper advertising.

The following daily newspapers will carry an advertising message into the HOMES of Illinois.

THE LIGHT BREAKS

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has urged for so long a sensible policy of paid Government advertising that the news from Washington comes as a tonic.

It seems assured that the War Department is to use display advertising in recruiting, as well as for finding positions for returned soldiers. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has already shown that funds of the Department may be used, as specifically provided by statute, for advertising. It is now hoped that the new Congress will make direct appropriations for this purpose.

The campaign by the Railroad Administration, now to be followed by War Department campaigns, pioneer the way for the creation of a Department of Advertising, the need for which was so strikingly demonstrated in the great bond campaigns and other national tasks.

If Secretary Baker shall succeed in demonstrating to the Congress the practical possibilities of Government advertising in solving national problems, he will have added to the sum of his great services to the people—services so modestly performed that our citizens have scarcely realized as yet their far-reaching value. This self-forgetting public servant, rising to a task of unprecedented magnitude the solvent of common sense, high devotion to the cause of human liberty, and the vision which never permitted the goal to be obscured by the clouds of difficulties which often veiled from other eyes the eventual triumph, will loom large in history.

The heartening fact of the hour is the trend at Washington toward a proper recognition of the power and usefulness of advertising to the nation. The light is breaking. Events are moving—forward.

UNPOPULAR COMPARISONS

AN advertising man has protested, in a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, against the recent comparisons made in this journal of the costs of newspaper and magazine advertising. He claims that it is unfair to compare the magazine rates, based on nation-wide circulation, with rates of newspapers covering only territorial markets.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S analyses of comparative costs to advertisers in reaching regional or territorial markets were intended to show the utter waste involved in buying circulation outside the zones of distribution covered in selling campaigns. It is essential that advertisers should have such facts at hand, and EDITOR & PUBLISHER has rendered a service to them in furnishing such comparisons.

It has been made plain in these analytical articles that magazine and periodical rates were based upon nation-wide circulations, and that advertisers having distribution only in certain market zones were compelled to pay for a vast bulk of circulation which could not be linked up with the more restricted selling campaigns. In presenting these comparative costs, therefore, the folly of wasting a large part of the advertising appropriation was graphically demonstrated.

These articles did not carry an attack upon magazine or periodical advertising. They have merely shown the better adaptability and the economy of concentrated advertising in the newspapers reaching the people whose interest may be sought in particular selling campaigns.

The figures presented have also shown the smaller cost per thousand of circulation of newspaper space in comparison with magazine space. That the contrast is striking, and that the facts themselves form the best possible argument in favor of the newspapers, are evident to all.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER does not belittle the value of magazine advertising. The purpose has been to clarify marketing problems for advertisers. That the cost-tables presented have aided in this is cause for gratification.

SENATORS MOSES, SMOOT, NEW and Capper, of the Committee on Printing, are experienced newspaper publishers. They face a great opportunity for useful public service. It will be within their power to reduce the volume of useless public documents which clog the mails to such an extent that the whole service is impaired.

A JUDGE REVERSES HIMSELF

JUDGE CHESTER A. FOWLER, of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, issued an order barring the circulation in the county of newspapers which printed anything regarding a certain murder case until after a jury had been selected. The judge contended that it would be impossible to secure an unprejudiced jury if the citizens of the county were permitted to read about the details of the crime.

The attorneys of the Milwaukee Journal persuaded Judge Fowler to vacate his order. They convinced him that such an order was unconstitutional.

There has always been conflict between the judiciary and the press on this question. In issuing his order the Wisconsin judge merely voiced the sentiment which has swayed judicial minds from the time when courts of law were first established—particularly since the advent of the jury system.

Judges, in the earlier times, thoroughly distrusted juries. They felt that only juries composed of men of pliable minds—men so lacking in intelligence that they could not be trusted to read newspapers—could be depended upon to render verdicts in accordance with the instructions of the courts.

This attitude still persists in some quarters. There are still judges who thus put a premium upon ignorance and servility. It is still assumed that a man who reads a newspaper, and who forms an opinion based upon the facts presented therein, will be unwilling to change that opinion in the light of other facts. If this view were sound our social order would collapse.

The very best jury is an enlightened one, composed of men or women who live and think in tune with the age; who read the news, who understand the motives and reactions of individuals under given conditions. If the people of this Wisconsin community had been deprived of newspapers which printed the facts of the case in question, and had been left to secure their impressions through exaggerated gossip, what benefit could have accrued to the state? The only definite result of such a situation would have been the creation of prejudices such as always thrive upon ignorance or credulity.

Perhaps one other result would have been achieved: The people would have learned that it is within the power of a judge to control the press. And that, happily, is not true under the American constitution.

WILBUR FORREST, in a cable to the New York Tribune, says that Robert M. Berry, the correspondent of the Associated Press, has been at Amerongen for the last six months waiting for the Kaiser to talk. This illustrates the patient processes of an organization pledged to secure the news of the world. Often the tireless vigils of the news men are doomed to failure—but let us hope that Berry may yet succeed in his quest, and that the world may learn something of the thoughts and mental reactions of the man who aspired to wreck civilization.

PROGRESS

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has recommended that individual churches include in their budgets an appropriation for paid advertising. This action will be applauded by all who have the interests of the churches at heart. The policy is in keeping with the trend of the times.

Condemnation of the newspapers by churchmen, once so much in vogue, is dying out. Leaders are coming to see the possibilities of harnessing the power of the press for the more effective promotion of religious living. They may deplore the fact that this great power is sometimes diverted from its highest uses to mankind. They may regret that more space is given by the newspapers to the Willard-Dempsey fight than to any single church movement or activity—excepting, perhaps, the "Billy" Sunday crusades.

Time was when the churches permitted "the Devil to monopolize the good music." They have, too, usually permitted other interests to monopolize the good advertising. Both of these policies of reaction should be discarded. The first has already spent its little day and is passing. The second will not hold much longer.

When the churches are adequately advertised the churches will prosper accordingly. They have the greatest of all advertising assets—service, fellowship, self-realization, faith and hope and charity. Could there be a finer basis upon which to build a convincing advertising appeal?

Having put forward on record in favor of a progressive policy in advertising, the General Assembly by a vote of two to one, condemned Sunday newspapers! Thus the pendulum was given a backward swing.

The scriptural records show that the Saviour of Mankind had scant patience with those who sought to restrict and to penalize good works on the Sabbath. It would appear that the spirit which He rebuked in Palestine has not yet surrendered to the forces of enlightenment and Christian progress.

The Sunday newspaper should be the greatest force for the advancement of the work of the church. That it is not is the fault of those churchmen whose eyes are still blinded by bigotry and intolerance. They would abolish the most powerful means at their command for furthering the Master's work. As "the Sabbath was made for man," so is the Sunday newspaper.

THE DOT MAP OF CIRCULATION

HOW TO PICTURE the circulation of a newspaper so that an advertiser will carry the image in his mind has always been a tantalizing problem with publishers. The ingenuity of advertising managers has been taxed to the utmost in trying to project upon the printed page striking visualizations of the manner in which their newspapers "cover" their fields.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER recalls nothing else in this line to compare with the "Dot Map" idea of the Chicago Tribune, illustrated so strikingly on the first page of last week's issue. This idea, which The Tribune generously commends to other newspapers, appeals to the imagination as well as to the practical, analytical faculty in men.

In The Tribune's own Dot Map, showing the distribution in the Chicago trading territory of the Sunday issue, there are more than twelve thousand dots, each dot representing fifty copies of the paper. It is a blanket of dots, spreading over six great states, and is well calculated to impress upon an advertiser one of the reasons for The Tribune's famous sub-title, "The World's Greatest Newspaper."

The Tribune's invitation to other newspapers to use the Dot Map idea should be accepted. The conception is an inspiration in newspaper promotion work—a branch of effort calling for the highest ability in the men engaged in it. The "promotion man" must have not only the creative faculty. He must have the ability to appreciate the creative work of others—and, in such instances as this, where the originators of a striking idea tender it for the free use of all, he must have the vision to utilize it.

THEY DECLINE TO BE MERE AUXILIARY TO MEN'S AD CLUB

Miss Florence Prevost

Portland, Ore., June 3.—Portland women engaged in advertising, who recently were denied membership in the Portland Ad Club, have formed an organization of their own, called the Advertising Woman's Club of Portland. It starts off with an enthusiastic membership and a determination to make a success.

When the men declined to open their membership rolls to women, they suggested that they would have no objection to the formation of a women's auxiliary.

But the women decided they would not be a mere auxiliary to any men's organization. Their leaders are: President, Miss Florence Prevost; vice-president, Miss Hazel Gough; secretary, Mrs. Ocean Jolly; treasurer, Miss Kathryn Coffield; historian, Miss Onida Herlihy.

JUNIORS ELECT CORRIGAN

Eight Service Members Welcomed Home by E. Lansing Ray

ST. LOUIS, June 2.—J. Vincent Corrigan, who headed the "white" ticket, was elected president of the Junior Advertising Club of St. Louis at the annual election last Tuesday. Other officers elected follow: First vice-president, C. H. Miller, Jr.; second vice-president, Jack Ebbinghaus; third vice-president, E. J. Ryan; recording secretary, Warren Teskey; corresponding secretary, Carl Zerweck; financial secretary, Fritz Grolock; treasurer, John George.

Following the election, a banquet was given at the Missouri Athletic Association, when eight members of the club who had returned from war, were guests of honor. E. Lansing Ray, president of the Globe-Democrat, was toastmaster, and delivered a four-minute talk on "Victory."

New Men with Poughkeepsie Star

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., June 3.—Alfred S. Jones, for eleven years city editor of the Ansonia (Conn.) Sentinel, is now with The Star in a similar capacity. Willard Cooper who recently resigned his commission as ensign in the Navy, comes to the Star from the Boston Traveler, to become news editor and editorial writer. Thomas Mc Avoy, who has just sold the New Paltz Times, will join the Star in July as assistant advertising manager. Maurice F. Dubreuil, for ten years on the editorial staff, will leave in July to take up advertising work with a large firm in Boston.

Bruce Directs "W. S. S." Publicity

ATLANTA, Ga., June 2.—Bruce Hall, former well known Atlanta newspaper man, who throughout the war has been assistant publicity director for the Liberty Loan in the Sixth District, has been appointed director of publicity for the savings division of the War Loan organization. Mr. Hall has established offices of the division in the Rhodes Building.

Mrs. Wilcox Critically Ill

News dispatches from London say that Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the famous American writer, is dangerously ill from overstrain in war work. She is being cared for in a nursery home in Bath, Mrs. Randall, of New York, who accompanied Mrs. Wilcox to England, is constantly at her bedside. The attending physician holds out slight hopes of her recovery.

Crate Back at Old Post

OTTAWA, Ont., June 4.—J. S. Crate, who recently left the managing editorship of the Journal newspapers, this city, with the intention of acquiring a paper of his own, has returned to his old post, while J. Ross Munro, who succeeded Mr. Crate, is leaving the Journal to become news editor of the Toronto Globe.

Sues Portland Telegram

PORTLAND, Ore., June 2.—The Portland (Ore.) Telegram has been sued for $10,000 by St. Clair Wood, a stereotyper, who was injured by a chisel while working for that paper.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER
Q & A
Service Department

NOTICE: Questions concerning newspaper technical trade matters and newspaper advertising should be addressed to Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER, 1117 World Building, New York. These communications and answers will be published, unless the correspondent requests private reply; then self-addressed stamped envelope should be furnished. Correspondents desiring anonymity should indicate initials to be published.

Q.—I, acting as a syndicate salesman, frequently run into editors who tell me that matter I am offering for sale to them, and which is established as real successes in other cities, is not appropriate for "our class of people." I have in mind an editor in a city of more than a hundred thousand who turned down a comic which is popular everywhere, even in his own State, because the people of his town, as he said, would think it "vulgar." Don't you think that human nature is the same the world around and that a comic which will make 'em laugh in New York will also tickle the funny bone of the people of New England, the West or the South—anywhere it appears? I read Q. and A. interestedly and would like to hear what you say. No bet involved S. ST. C.

A.—Don't bet on it. Human nature is not "alike" the world over, particularly in the matter of humor. It may be said quite truly that there are certain fundamentals common to all, but humor is a matter of taste and the editor who does not discriminate in his selections is not playing the game. Perhaps he does not know his public—only thinks he does—but he is boss and responsible. There's plenty of matter to meet all tastes.

Q.—What reserve allowance would you advise to carry to cover loss on bad advertising bills? "AKRON."

A.—You know the state of your business for six months—draw an average. Properly solicited advertising should not run a profit and loss account in excess of 2 per cent. on any newspaper. You do right to carry a reserve.

Q.—In the general increase in advertising we have not been able to get much new classified business. It seems to be lagging and as that is my particular responsibility on this paper, I wonder why there is no proportionate lineage gain. Is classified moving up in lineage in other papers over the country? MARTIN ——.

A.—We know of some conspicuous instances wherein the April, 1919, classified lineage fell behind the record for the corresponding month last year. This is true on some newspapers that specialize on liners. On the other hand we know of papers that have made excellent gains. In the month of May, 1919, for instance, the Birmingham (Ala.) News published 110,978 lines of classified as against 70,350 in May, 1918. This is one of the best gains we know of. The News, however, had a total lineage for last May of 1,139,278, as against 720,622 for May, 1918. The real estate market is much upset in many cities, due to housing shortage and this has hit classified. Also the help wanted and situations wanted columns are not up to the third in many cities. Our own opinion is that in the big advertising boom many publishers have permitted classified to run without much promotion or urging, being preoccupied with heavy space.

Q.—There is a periodical published in the State of California devoted to the rice industry, and I presume you could furnish the name of it. Will you kindly favor me? P. H. M.—ST. LOUIS.

A.—We know of no such periodical in California and do not believe there is any, but the Rice Journal is published at Crowley, Louisiana.

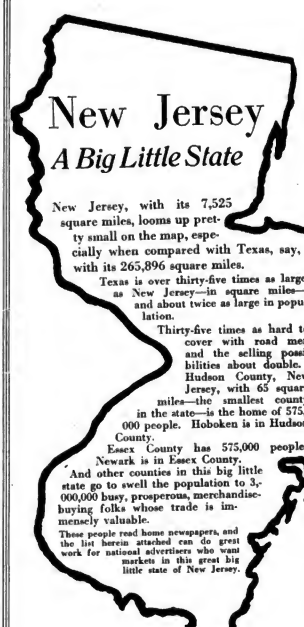
Saw Peace Terms Presented to German Delegates

L. V. Ashbaugh Had Unusual Honor—Says Brockdorff-Rantzau Was Unable to Rise

One of the few men not in the diplomatic service who was present when the peace terms of the Allies were presented to the German delegates at Versailles was L. V. Ashbaugh, vice-president of the United Press Associations and president of the Cler Leaf Newspapers. Mr. Ashbaugh is just back home after spending two months in Europe.



"Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, head of the German delegates, was eritiesized by newspapers because he remained seated when he made reply to Clemenceau, but my own opinion is that he did not rise because he was afraid he would fall down," said Mr. Ashbaugh to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "His face was ashen and he looked as if it was all he could do to keep on living. President Wilson had the most satisfied look on his face that I saw there."

Mr. Ashbaugh went abroad with Roy Howard, president of the United Press Associations, to see about re-establishing the service of that organization in Germany and Austria, and also to confer with South Americans who were there concerning a special cable service to South America.

Plain Dealer Makes Changes

Cleveland, June 2.—The Plain Dealer building's fifth floor, "editorial department," is undergoing some changes in order that the mechanical department on the sixth floor may have more room. The "printers' department" has become too small. The associate editor, editorial writers and Cartoonist Donahey have been "rooted" from their rooms on the fifth floor and given quarters on the fourth floor. A shift of some of the business forces from an upper floor to the ground floor has also been made.

The Plain Dealer is extending its mechanical facilities to meet the constantly increasing demands upon it, due to growth. One of its orders placed is for a latest model 11oe rotogravure press.

dom from dull months and disorganized intervals.

"The modernized efficient advertising agency is working effectively for this very desirable condition for the publishers.

"The American Association of Advertising Agencies has endorsed to its members a plan for close co-operation with publishers, to avoid the forcing of national advertising into the heavy days of the week. Following this thought is the greater one of extending the campaign into twelve months instead of only part of the year.

Plan Endorsed

"Newspaper publishers generally, even the publisher of the small local daily and weekly, appreciate the service of the correct advertising agency today and the spirit of team work is everywhere apparent. This spirit will do more to make for advertising prosperity than all else, and all of us should remember that advertising prosperity brings national prosperity.

"Prosperous days for newspaper publishers have come. It was to have been expected.

"It was the obvious thing to predict.

"Should advertising run into large volume it meant a large use of newspaper space. In no other way could large volume present itself.

"Advertising has reached a national volume today which compels still more advertising.

"The great expansion field is the newspaper. The limit to which the national advertiser may expand through newspapers will not be reached for years. The happy prospect of new corners of the field to conquer will spread out before the eyes of national advertisers for many seasons.

Bright Outlook

"This argues properly that the prosperity of the newspaper publisher will be on an upward scale for years.

"Every cross-road in the country has a worth while buying power today. The newspaper reaches to the last home and therefore offers to the advertiser the facility for intensification of sales effort, which is as comprehensive as it is gigantic in its proportions.

"Foreseeing what was coming in the newspaper field, the American Association of Advertising Agencies suggested the standard rate card to every publisher in the country.

"This was done with a view to making the sale of advertising space practical and easy in every newspaper in the country.

"We believed the big day for the newspaper was at hand, and undertook to make the sale of their space soundly and accurately merchandisable.

"Clean circulation figures and sound rates are vitally important now, so that the prosperity coming to the newspaper may not be impaired. Every newspaper in the country can look for more national advertising, and can do its share to promote the permanence of the growing volume by taking off unnecessary restrictions and penalties which some newspapers put on foreign advertising.

"Every newspaper in the country can say that it is represented in all of the eighteen larger advertising markets of the United States by one or more members of the American Association of Advertising Agencies. These agencies not only represent all the newspapers, but are creating the facility for constructing for them, building for them.

"The splendid manner in which the newspapers generally have co-operated with one association in adopting the standard rate card is splendid evidence of continued advertising prosperity. It shows a degree of sympathetic co-operation on the part of the publishers which is encouraging to our members to work harder to create more advertising.

"The material for new advertisers is not yet fully uncovered. The manufacturer who merely wants to preserve his present volume is now finding himself compelled to turn to advertising, as well as the manufacturer who wants to increase his output and improve his profits."

Western Publisher Tells of Bumper Crops and Prices

H. N. Owen, editor and publisher of Farm, Stock and Home, an agricultural publication, published in Minneapolis, was in New York this week attending a conference called by the United States Grain Corporation by Julius Barnes, president, to devise plans and methods of caring for the storage of the 1919 wheat crop. Mr. Owen was accompanied by Railroad Commissioners Jacobson of Minnesota, Aandahl of North Dakota, and Murphy of South Dakota.

"The 1919 wheat crop, for the handling of which Congress appropriated one billion dollars, is, in its present prospect, an enormous one, and because of it, the present unbounded prosperity of the Northwest will be tremendously augmented," he said.

"The value of the five 1918 grain crops, wheat, barley, rye, oats and hay, was $1,116,600,000. Just those five crops alone averaged each one of Minnesota's 156,000 farmers $2,229.28. North Dakota has 74,000 farmers and the average for them was $4,864.84, and each of South Dakota's 77,000 farmers averaged $3,562.15. Only the direst calamity can prevent the doubling of these figures for 1919. And mind you, the figures just quoted do not include corn, now selling at $1.75 a bushel, nor flax, which brings $4.25, nor the 65 cents paid at the farm for butter and 40 cents the farmer gets at his door for a dozen eggs, and, last, but by no means least, hogs, at $21.60 per hundred weight, nor $17.00 for good beef steers on the hoof."

Mr. Owen said the zone postal system was working great over there. "One of the daily newspaper boys told me it would cost him $9.00 per copy for mail charges alone to get his paper into Montana," he said, adding, "He isn't going to do it, that's all."

Asked about the new daily newspaper, The Star, about to be started in Minneapolis by the Non-Partisan League, Mr. Owen said: "Those folks have a corking good newspaper in Fargo and another in Grand Forks, North Dakota. Practical newspaper men get the sheets out. They handle the news in good, clean, unbiased shape, and do not overburden their columns with their own propaganda."

Sidney M. Owen, the present publisher's father, was for twenty-five years publisher of Farm, Stock and Home.

"I want to equal his record," said his son.

EDITORIAL WORKERS NEED ORGANIZATION

a woman editor . . . wherefore she needs must employ an amount of finesse in dealing with him that no man editor would need. . . .

"The great war hurt woman's position in the average newspaper office more than anything else ever has done. With his staff decimated of men who entered military service, the average city editor recruited hit-or-miss from the first women applicants for the vacancies. As a result he got a large percentage of incompetents and now is less tolerant than ever before of women in the field. . . .

"The 'regulars' have indubitably made good in the face of rank prejudice from men superiors in their offices, yet still the vast majority of them are permitted to handle only wishy-washy 'woman' stuff; are not given the real chances to distinguish themselves as the men reporters invariably are. The 'regulars' were the pioneers. Give them the same opportunities that you do their masculine co-workers. . . ."

Conditions in Australia

"A most interesting speaker was Thomas Hackett Mutch, member of the Parliament of New South Wales, Australia, who was one of the organizers of the celebrated newspaperman's union in his country.

"We found, about a decade ago," said he, "that wages and conditions of employment in the newspaper profession in Australia were in many cases far lower than those enjoyed by even unskilled labor in almost every other kind of work. To raise that standard and to correct the obvious injustice we began by organizing The Writers' and Artists' Union, out of which shortly evolved the Australian Journalists' Association, whose influence to-day extends all over the continent. Its membership to-day comprises 90 per cent of the active newspapermen of the more important dailies and workers.

"The Journalists' Association is operated directly under the Commonwealth and state arbitration laws. It has no political or industrial affiliations with other trade unions except on understanding the printing societies for action in matters of mutual concern. In its nine years of existence the association has improved the conditions of newspapermen in Australia fully 100 per cent, particularly as relate to salaries and working conditions.

Co-operation from Publishers

"After its purposes were thoroughly understood, no appreciable opposition from the publishers was experienced and newspaper men themselves were won over to membership after the definite establishment of the union. A system of grading employes was established by mutual agreement between the publishers and the editorial men and has even been incorporated in awards of the arbitration court, which itself settles all matters of disagreement.

"A minimum wage of $40 per week has been established for what we call senior reporters (i. e., those experienced enough to handle any sort of assignment), and other proportionate rates of remuneration are fixed for cadets (i. e., reporters of three or fewer years' experience) and junior reporters (i. e., those who have less than seven years' experience), special writers, and the like.

"We also have established a 48-hour work week, and any overtime put in by editorial men is subject to extra pay. Women are admitted to membership in the Journalists' Association as well as men, although we have fewer women newspaper workers in Australia than you have here in the United States. . . . The working of the union has so eminently satisfactory to all interests that we never yet have had a strike . . . and I can see no reason why the establishment of some similar organization in this country should not work out equally well. . . .

Attracts New Blood

"The improvement we have effected in the economic and industrial conditions of Australian journalists, especially as concerns their wage scale, has now made the profession attractive to men of greater ability and ambitions,—men who previously never would have considered journalism as their life work. Fathers who formerly discouraged aspirations of their sons for newspaper work now are no longer prejudiced against it. . . .

"The establishment of a minimum wage has by no means lowered the status or earning capacities of men of special abilities. On the contrary it has very considerably raised the standard of pay and improved the conditions of special writers in every respect. . . .

"The association publishes a monthly official organ known as 'The Australian Journalist,' which is closely followed by all active members of the profession. . . . On the social side we have established a flourishing Press Club at Sydney and another at Melbourne. These are kept directly under the control of men actively engaged in journalism, but associate members from other professions are admitted. . ."

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL WINS MERIT PRIZE

Much Coveted Pulitzer Medal Is for Most Disinterested and Meritorious Public Service by Any American Paper During the Year

The Joseph Pulitzer prize, consisting of a $500 gold medal, "for the most disinterested and meritorious public service rendered by any American newspaper during the year," has been awarded to the Milwaukee Journal. The award was made by the committee of the faculty of the Pulitzer School of Journalism of Columbia University, consisting of the director of the school, Dr. Talcott Williams; Prof. Walter B. Pitkin, Prof. Roscoe C. E. Brown and Robert E. MacAlarney.

The recommendation of the committee was approved by the Advisory Board of the school and by the trustees of Columbia University.

The Milwaukee Journal's campaign against sweatshops in Wisconsin was given as the reason for the award.

In announcing the award of the prize to the Milwaukee Journal, the Advisory Board in a statement said:

"The Milwaukee Journal was one of the first newspapers of the United States to recognize the absolutely uncivilized methods employed by the German Government in its war against civilization. It was the first newspaper of the country to employ an editor for the sole purpose of following German propaganda. It made thousands of translations from the German language press of the country to show how thoroughly Germanism was intrenched in the hearts of the editors of these newspapers. It now holds in its vaults almost 5,000,000 words of original translation of propaganda and other pro-German matter."

Announcement was also made that the Pulitzer prize of $1,000, which is awarded "for the American novel published during the year which shall best present the wholesome atmosphere of American life and the highest standard of American manners and manhood," has been awarded to Booth Tarkington for his novel, "The Magnificent Ambersons."

Canadian Government Buys $496,645 Ad Space

That Much Was Spent for Official Advertising in Dominion Newspapers During Past Year.

Ottawa, Ont., June 3.—Government advertising accounts passing through the hands of the Dominion auditor of advertising during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1918, totaled $496,645. Of this amount $283,443 went to 46 daily newspapers published in Ontario, $94,461 to 16 Quebec dailies, and $15,455 to 14 Nova Scotia dailies.

These figures were supplied the Public Accounts Committee of Parliament when that body resumed its inquiry into the subject of government advertising in the press. The informant was E. J. Lavergne, government auditor of advertising. Liberal members of the committee indicated the belief that some Liberal newspapers had not received a proper share of government advertising.

WILL TURN BACK HANDS OF TIME FOR A. A. C. W.

The streets will be filled with people wearing costumes of the period of more than a century ago. Jackson Square will become once more as it was before the Battle of New Orleans that gave it its name. The old Spanish arsenal, the Cabildo, the St. Louis Cathedral, the Pontalba Buildings, the coffee shops and the bazarres, all will live their history over again.

Tuesday night's plans contemplate taking the visitors on boats for a ride about the harbor. All along the river the scenes of anti-bellum days will be reconstructed and re-enacted. The steamboats loading cotton, the picturesque cotton and sugar planters of the old days, the levee scenes, darky "roustabouts" singing as they work or picking their banjos as they loaf along the waterfront—these are some of the features planned.

For good measure, one or more "duels" will be fought by high-spirited gentlemen of the old school.

Dinner Given Pres. D'Arcy

New Orleans entertained President D'Arcy and the other executive officers last night at a dinner in the Grunewald Hotel. It was a "sample" of the hospitality the city will extend when it lowers the drawbridge and raises the portcullis to the hosts who will come for the convention in September.

Two figures were brought before the minds of the assemblage as the addresses were made at this dinner.

One was a grotesque buffoon, beating wildly upon a bass drum, stopping now and then to blare the discordant crash of cymbals of brass, pirouetting in uncouth language.

The other stood sapling high, towering above the heads of humanity. He moved not with his limbs, with the swift beauty of the trained athlete. Clear and silvery sounded its voice. Clean-cut knowledge and sharply defined ideals shone from its gaze. Power rippled from it with every gesture. Its message reached to the far ends of the earth.

The first figure was "The Advertising of Yesterday."

The smooth-functioning giant by its side was "The Advertising of Today."

Advertising by Parable

And then there was conjured up another vision, just ahead, too far and too high in the distance to be glimpsed at all by the grotesque buffoon, but clear and sharp in the view of the guests, there loomed another giant, greater still. The new giant bore in his open hands gifts to all humanity. He spoke with common tongue of mankind, wherever the spoken and written word of man reached the human ear he dispensed cleanliness and light, knowledge and truth.

And the name of the greater giant was "The Advertising of Tomorrow."

Such parable, was the message that was flashed to the consciousness of the 200 men and women who attended the dinner.

The growth in idealism and truth of the profession of advertising and the clear promise held out for the future.

The officers told of the growth in numbers and accomplishment of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and of the potent influence worded for greater and cleaner business by the principle which have the organization's backing.

Orleanians pointed out the advantages and possibilities inherent in this city and tributary territory and how New Orleans, through the big convention, will be aided in carrying its story to the world as well as in learning how to tell it.

A striking history of how the advertising organization in ten years has grown from swaddling clothes to a stature of commanding influence and helpfulness, and of how advertising standards everywhere have been raised correspondingly was told by its first president, S. C. Dobbs of Atlanta, who was vice-president and general-manager of the Coca-Cola Company.

F. W. Ellsworth, director-general of the convention board and a vice-president of the Hibernia Bank and Trust Company of New Orleans, was toastmaster. Among those who spoke were:

F. W. Ellsworth Was Toastmaster

L. R. Putman, president of the New Orleans Advertising Club and advertising manager of the Southern Pine Association; Arthur G. Newmeyer, vice-president of the Southern division and associate publisher of the New Orleans Item; Daniel G. Fisher of Dallas, vice-president of the Southwestern division and advertising manager of the Texas Electric Manufacturing Company; O. C. Harn, New York, chairman of the national committee on advertising and advertising manager of the National Lead Company; P. S. Flores of New York, director of agreeance; George W. Hopkins of New York, vice-president of the Eastern division and general sales manager of the Columbia Graphophone Company; William C. D'Arcy of St. Louis, president.

Responses were by the following Orleanians:

Archbishop John W. Shaw; James M. Thompson, publisher of the New Orleans Item; Dr. A. B. Dinwiddie, president of Tulane University; E. James Moore, editor and manager of the Times-Picayune; Crawford H. Ellis, vice-president of the United Fruit Company; Dr. P. H. Saunders, president of the Commercial Bank and Trust Company.

The Denver Times
Evening except Sunday

Two up-to-the-minute Newspapers covering thoroly the representative Homes and the REAL BUYING POWER of Denver and vicinity.

Published in the same plant, but duplicating circulation LESS THAN FOUR per cent.

In no city in America is the distinction so sharply drawn between dailies catering to the best and the worst elements in the community. The News and The Times appeal to the Best and are typical of the true spirit of the Great West.

They are the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Optimist club papers of Denver.

The News—established 1859—is one of the country's best known dailies. The Times carries more advertising than many of the largest metropolitan papers. Both among the nation's leaders in automobile advertising.

The News and The Times reach the responsible classes and the wealth of the Rocky Mountain region—a region rich in agriculture, stock-raising, mining, oil and other natural resources—where money is more plentiful today than ever before.

Beloit News

There is not a city in the middle west where a paper so thoroughly dominates the field. There is no richer territory to cover in the middle west than the Beloit field.

It will include in their entirety at least eight advertising campaigns all eminently successful.

Thirty Club of London Joins A. A. C. W.

The board recognized the growing importance of women in the advertising world by passing a motion to make a place for women on the executive committee.

Secretary Flores made a report on the "Truth-in-Advertising" work of the advertising clubs, showing that thirty-six states now have laws against fraudulent advertising. In about twenty cities, paid secretaries devote all their time to helping business men guard against fraud in advertising.

President D'Arcy was authorized by resolution to appoint a committee on advertising to co-operate with the United States government. It will take the place of George Creel's war-time advertising board, and will be a permanent peace-time advertising aid to Uncle Sam.

President D'Arcy announced the Thirty Club of London has voted to affiliate with the International organization.

H. A. Wenige, Glens Falls (N. Y.) Post-Star:

"It is by far the finest thing in the way of a special edition I have ever seen."

Miss Carrie M. Locke, Houston (Tex.) Oil Journal:

"I read your publication with much interest every week and congratulate you on the international number. It is not only a splendid specimen of the printer's art but it is a remarkable publication, replete with most valuable matter—and above all, it stands for a most worthy cause."

Mattagami Expanding

OTTAWA, Ont., May 30.—Public offering is now being made of $2,000,000 7 per cent. mortgage debentures of the Mattagami Pulp and Paper Company, which is greatly extending its plant in Northern Ontario. By next October, it is expected that the company's output of easy bleaching sulphite pulp will be increased to 45,000 tons, a large part of which has been contracted for by the United Kingdom.

Miss Davis Re-elected

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 3.—Miss Mary Davis was re-elected secretary of the Indianapolis Advertising Club. C. D. Murta was elected president; H. S. Noel, vice-president, and Paul Richey and O. T. Roberts, directors.

tions on this line if we are successful in getting the privilege.

"As regards the Southern members, I have been in communication with A. C. Jenkins of the Birmingham (Ala.) Ledger, and he advises me that he will get in touch with the southern members and arrange their end of the trip from there."

Big Attendance Promised

The arrangements committee says:

"Early indications are that all records for attendance will be broken at Buffalo. Everything seems to help the interest in after-war circulation; centrally located for membership; convenient for Canadian membership; affords vacation trip and travel over the great lakes; more entertainment for members and ladies than ever before.

"Buffalo can take care of the I. C. M. A. with ease and if you are to be in Buffalo make it known when corresponding with members. If you are going, others may go just to talk to you—and bring the lady. The ladies will be entertained royally.

"The headquarters of the secretary-treasurer will be opened at Hotel Statler from 3 to 6 P. M. Monday, June 9th, for all members to register early. Registration will be on large sheets and each member will give:

"Name.
"Publication.
"Morning or evening.
"Average daily circulation.
"Town.

"This will give any member the knowledge of some other member from a morning or evening newspaper about the same size as his publication and the opportunity to ask the other fellow some questions.

"At 8 P. M., while the board of directors are in session, the secretary-treasurer's headquarters will be open for a general 'get acquainted' meeting."

Urges Change in By-Laws

A change in the by-laws has been suggested to allow newspapers that pay for their circulation manager's membership in the I. C. M. A. to retain title to that membership in the event of the circulator's leaving, death, or other change.

William L. Betts, one of the leading workers for the by-laws change in urging its adoption, says:

"You will find that many papers will be willing to join, but not under the present circumstances. I have seen many publishers who are unwilling to join because the membership is not their property, though they pay the bill, and in several cases, I have found where publishers paid the initiation and dues and the circulation manager left within a week or a month.

"You can easily understand that under those circumstances the best man alive could not talk such publishers into joining again, and if the circulation managers of such papers do join they have to pay the bill themselves. Udder average circumstances the publisher is willing to pay the bills.

"This is a most important matter in my estimation and for the benefit of the I. C. M. A. should receive action favorable to the newspapers."

Meeting Places

There is much speculation on where the 1920 meeting will be held. It is expected to go West, but just what city will be selected is yet a problem. The largest part of the membership is to the East, but it always has been the endeavor to divide the convention place honors as evenly as possible between sections of the country. Since the organization of the I. C. M. A. in Detroit in 1898, conventions have been held in the following cities:

1898—Detroit	1914—Steamer "Noronic,"
1899—Chicago	Sarnia, Ont.
1900—New York	Port Arthur, Ont.
1910—Buffalo	Duluth, Minn.
1902—Detroit	1915—Manior Richelieu,
1903—Boston	Murray Bay
1904—St. Louis	Quebec, Canada
1905—Toronto	1916—Grand Rapids,
1906—Louisville, Ky.	Mich.
1907—Milwaukee, Wis.	1917—Atlanta, Ga.
1908—Philadelphia, Pa.	1918—Washington, D.
1909—Cleveland, Ohio	C.
1910—Montreal, Can.	1919—Buffalo, N. Y.
1911—Chicago, Ill.
1912—Baltimore, Md.
1913—Cincinnati, Ohio

Efforts to Be Elected

New faces and new blood may be seen among the officers of the association next year. A man will be selected for second vice-president to qualify for president.

During the election of officers a new secretary-treasurer will be selected. He will be the fourth one in twenty-one years. The first secretary-treasurer was I. J. Bowden, 1898 to 1905; second, J. R. Taylor, 1906 to 1916, and then J. A. Mathews, 1917 to 1919, who is no longer in newspaper work.

The terms of three directors expire with the Buffalo convention and the election will select five new officers. There are never candidates. The organization selects workers who have some time to give their ability to helping the organization. The I. C. M. A. is growing every year. Every member eligible for officer.

The Cleveland Sunday News-Leader has expanded its comic section from four to eight pages.

CIRCULATION NOTES

Albany is mourning the passing of its most centrally located newsstand, which for more than 50 years has supplied readers at the corner of State and Pearl streets. The stand, which had a sale of well over 4,000 copies of ocws-papers a day, was moved to make room for a new office building. It was conducted by William Coulson.

Returning West Virginia soldiers in the 80th division were made welcome when they landed in Newport News, Va., Tuesday, by the Clarksburg (W. Va.) Telegram, which issued a special "Welcome Home" edition to their honor. The edition consisted of thirty-two pages and contained messages of welcome from Governor John J. Cornwell and prominent Clarksburg citizens. Three thousand copies of the issue were printed and taken to Newport News by special messenger and were distributed among the West Virginia soldiers as soon as they reached land. J. J. Devine, general manager of the Telegram, received many expressions of praise and appreciation from the officers and men for his thoughtfulness and enterprise in planning this novel welcome.

An eight-page section was devoted by the Post-Dispatch May 25 to a story of "The 80th Division in the Great War," by Lieut. H. R. Palmer, formerly a reporter on the paper and who has been an officer in the division since its organization. The 80th was composed largely of Missouri and Kansas men.

Edythe M. Wildman, secretary to J. A. McNeil, circulation manager of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Evening Herald, is to wed Edward F. Langner, of Milford, June 11. Mr. Langner recently returned from France, where he fought with the 56th Coast Artillery Regiment. He formerly was employed in the business office of the Post Publishing Company, but is now with the Locomobile Company. Miss Wildman was with Mr. McNeil for some years when he was circulation manager of the Bridgeport Telegram.

PRESIDENT CARRANZA'S WAY

Is to Demonstrate to Editors Falsity of Rumors of Uprisings in North

A news dispatch from Mexico City states that the responsible heads of four daily newspapers in that city have been detained by the military authorities of the Carranza government for transportation under escort to the Northern States of the Republic, in order that they may have ocular proof that the stories which have been printed by these periodicals regarding the military situation there are without foundation.

The newspapers in question are: El-mannia, Revolution, Omega and the A. B. C.

May Challenge Chicagoans

There is reported to be a scheme on foot in the New York Advertising Club to organize a baseball team this summer for the very particular object of challenging the Chicago Advertising Association to a championship game or series of games. Howard Ruggles, who used to be a Chicagoan and who thinks he knows the weak baseball points of the Western ad man, is reputed to be the man behind the proposed venture.

Albany, New York

Dear George:

May advertising was over 25% above last year's figures. What more gain could anyone ask for? Sales are holding up very well, and stay close to 28,000. All local papers except The Telegram are again accepting returns. I feel sure we will be benefited by their move. I do wish more people had backbones. It is a sign of weakness to go back to the returns basis.

Yours as ever,

WANTED AND FOR SALE

WINONA DAILIES CONSOLIDATE

Independent Buys Republican Herald—Tribute to E. F. Rogers

WINONA, Minn., May 31.—The Independent has bought the Republican-Herald and ceased to exist, having occupied the morning field over twenty years. The Republican-Herald will continue as evening paper.

The new owners are H. G. White and F. J. Rucker.

In announcing the change of ownership, the publishers of the Republican-Herald paid a pretty editorial tribute to E. F. Rogers, the paper's business manager, to whom they give unstinted credit for the building up of the publication since it became the property of the late W. Hayes Laird. Mr. Rogers has been connected with the Republican for 12 years. He started as Associated Press operator and also served as circulation manager. Mr. Rogers is vice-president of the Inland Daily Press Association.

Ralph R. Mulligan, of New York, and the C. J. Anderson Special Agency, Chicago, will continue to represent the Republican-Herald in the national advertising field.

Two Parties Visit N. Y. Times Plant to Aid Copy Work.

About 25 members of the J. Walter Thompson Advertising Agency's staff visited the New York Times Annex on Thursday evening, May 22, and were conducted through the rotogravure, photographic, re-touching, tracing, etching and printing departments. The idea of the visit was a suggestion by Nat Olds, advertising director of the Kayser Silk Company. His thought was that if agency copy men could get a "close-up" on the handling of rotogravure advertising copy, it would be to the advantage of advertiser, agency and newspaper.

Thirty members of the Junior Advertising Club of New York spent two hours Friday evening going over the Times plant.

PRINGLE UPHOLDS $69 A TON

Appeal Tribunal About to Pass on Canadian News Print Point.

Ottawa, Ont., June 3.—The news print price case is once more before the appeal tribunal, which is scheduled to hear the case on its merits tomorrow, following which it may either confirm, lower or increase the price fixed by the commissioner. Commissioner R. A. Pringle, K. C., sees no reason to alter the price of $69 per ton he fixed for news print in September last. In a short judgment just issued, he confirmed the previous order.

Following issuance of the $69 ruling, Canadian publishers appealed to the Government, which appointed a special tribunal of judges to hear the case, and some time ago this body gave instructions to take new evidence of a number of points. This evidence was heard by Commissioner Pringle, with result previously noted.

HOW TO TEST THE INKS FOR NEWSPAPERS

roughly mixed as before. The ink knife should be wiped clean, and one corner dipped in the first mixture and the other corner in the second mixture, and the two samples rubbed out on a sheet of paper by bearing down firmly. This will bring the two tints side by side for comparison and the slightest variation in the strength of color may be readily detected.

Suppose the second sample shows up much weaker in tint than the first sample. To determine the percentage of the deficiency in tinctorial strength, weigh a small quantity of the second ink and mix with the second lot of tint, and rub out as before. This process must be repeated until the two tints are matched as exactly as possible.

Then the percentage of ink added to bring the tint up to the strength of the first sample is readily calculated, and indicates exactly the percentage of the deficiency in tinctorial strength of the second ink as compared with the original sample.

Calculating Inferiority

For illustrations, suppose the first tint was obtained by using two hundred milligrams of the original ink and in order to match it three hundred milligrams of the second lot of ink were required. This indicates a cut of fifty per cent in the color strength of the second ink and is positive measure of the inferiority in the quality of the second ink.

In testing yellow or other light colored inks, the tint may be made more easily with a dark blue ink for the mixing base instead of white. White should be used for testing blues and reds.

The quantities of mixing white and inks to be tested suggested in the foregoing are for purposes of illustration only and need not be followed. Indeed other quantities may be found to give better results.

The principal thing is to see that the greatest care is used in every step. It should be borne in mind that if larger quantities are used, the smaller will be the variation in the final percentages due to errors in weights.

On the other hand, the larger quantity will require more care in mixing to a uniform tint.

Experience will show the best way to get the desired results, and after a few tests have been made, it will be possible to do the work in a comparatively short time.

New "Colonel" David S. Barry

WASHINGTON, June 3.—A group of the "old timers" among the corps of Washington correspondents paid tribute to one of their associates of long standing after David S. Barry, for many years the representative of the Providence Journal, had been formally elected sergeant-at-arms of the United States Senate.

Mr. Barry was in the Press Gallery when a resolution offered by Senator Lodge, the Republican floor leader, nominated him for the Senate office. Under the leadership of "Jim" Preston, an official inaugural committee was formed in the Senate gallery to induct the new official into office.

With the always efficient and wholly indispensable "Jim" as grand marshal a solemn delegation of veterans escorted Mr. Barry to his office where Gust J. Karger, of the Cincinnati Times Star and chairman of the Standing Committee of Correspondents was master of ceremonies. In the group were "Jerry" Matthews, for many years with the New York Sun; "Charley" Albert, of the World; "Gus" McSween, of the Philadelphia North American; "Bob" Small of the Public Ledger; Major Alfred Stoeffer, of the Baltimore News; Frank Whitehead of the Washington Post and "Jack" Messenger of the Washington Star.

At the suggestion of Mr. Messenger that for many years the office of sergeant-at-arms of the Senate has carried the title of colonel, Mr. Karger formally conferred that rank upon Mr. Barry.

Advertising and Publishing Interests Coordinated Working Together in Chicago Victory Loan Drive They Raised $4,000,000, Greatly Exceeding Their Quota.

Paul E. Faust, of Mallory, Mitchell & Faust, Chicago, who was Vice-Chairman of the Advertising Agencies Division in the Victory Loan campaign, is of the opinion that the record of the advertising and publishing interests in this and previous Liberty Loan drives is unique.

In a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Mr. Faust expresses his belief that Chicago is the only city where the advertising and publishing interests were grouped as one industry. These interests rolled up a total for the Victory Loan of $4,000,000, or 162 per cent. of the quota. In the Fourth Loan they also raised $4,000,000. Out of 35 trade divisions only one equaled the record of the Advertising and Publishing Division.

On the Fourth Loan the agencies alone subscribed $1,000,000 of a quota of $4,000,000.

Arthur Brisbane was chairman of Division No. 1, and made his headquarters in Chicago throughout the campaign, writing some of the most forceful literature used in the big drive. In addition to his broadsides in the Herald and Examiner, Mr. Brisbane made several highly effective speeches at the Association of Commerce, appearing with William Howard Taft and Albert Wm. H. Rankin was Vice-Chairman of Division No. 1, having in charge the subscriptions of the Chicago daily newspapers.

MAKE CANADA A NATURAL MARKET FOR U. S. PRODUCTS

and advertising in the daily newspapers (the greatest potential business building force) is the logical and practical method of promoting the market.

Canadians flock to see motion picture films starring United States actors and actresses in scenarios prepared by United States playwrights for United States audiences.

Canadians patronize baseball games regardless of the fact that nearly all the professionals have been recruited from the United States.

For post-graduate courses thousands of Canadians attend United States universities. International conventions are the vogue. Canadian public men take their cue in no small measure from the United States.

Canadians promptly adopt the newest United States slang. They look to New York as the commercial center of the continent.

New York or Chicago experts are imported by Canadian municipalities to advise on transportation and other questions.

Canadian exporters to a very large extent ship their products to overseas markets via New York or other United States ports.

Large quantities of Canadian commodities reach foreign destinations as products of the United States, and are so recorded in official trade statistics.

Canadians respond just as readily to advertising as do the citizens of the United States, and they have just as great a respect and confidence in their home newspapers.

The following newspapers cover the most populous portion of the Dominion and would be pleased to supply information about local marketing conditions in the area reached by their circulations.

THIS ADVERTISEMENT WON $100 IN THE GLOBE'S [illegible] ADVERTISING AGENTS' COMPETITION

180,000 NEW YORK FAMILIES WITH MONEY

And This Chart Shows You How to Reach Them!

☆ NO MORNING OR SUNDAY PAPER HAS EVER EXCEEDED 1,410,638 LINES

Experts on merchandising will tell you that you will do well to watch how the successful department stores plan their advertising campaigns. The department stores use advertising to an extent reached by few concerns in other lines of business; therefore, having made an exhaustive study of advertising mediums for years, no business concern is better qualified to judge of the relative merits of those mediums. Sentiment "cuts no ice" with the department stores, in their selection. They place their advertising on the strictly business basis of, "How well does this medium pay?"

The chart above shows the amount of advertising, in agate lines, used by sixteen of the largest retail stores in New York City, during the past five years, in the evening newspapers of New York City. These sixteen big stores, during the past four years, have awarded almost exactly TWO-THIRDS of their advertising to the evening newspapers and ONE-THIRD to the morning and Sunday newspapers combined. (53,000,000 lines as compared with 28,000,000 lines.) The morning newspaper leading its morning competitors in the amount of this advertising was only on a level with the lowest of the seven afternoon newspapers; and the Sunday newspaper which led its Sunday competitors ranked sixth on the list when compared with the evening newspapers.

Draw your own conclusions as to what New York newspaper will bring you the best returns.

The 180,000 families which read The Globe daily are families with purchasing power. An advertisement in The Globe is like a personal message to them, because they have learned to rely so thoroughly upon The Globe's trustworthiness. As an advertiser, you may not care whether The Globe is three years old or fifty years old, so long as it brings results. But the readers of The Globe realize that it is 125 years old—the oldest evening newspaper in America—and to them The Globe is gospel true. They are justified in that belief. The Globe is peculiarly a newspaper for intelligent families—for men of business and women who are home-makers. It never prints "yellow" news or unverified rumors. It prints the real news of the world. It carries regular "features," written by experts, of special interest to each member of the family—father, mother, and children. It is not a paper tossed aside after a glance at the headlines. It is read in the home, by every member of the family. That is why it stands first, in the opinion of those shrewd judges of advertising mediums, the department stores, among all New York newspapers.

The Globe has always led in safeguarding both the advertiser and the buying public. Its campaigns against fraudulent advertisements, on the one hand, and against misleading statements of circulation, on the other, are famous. Seven years ago The Globe organized the Audit Bureau of Circulation, which has now a membership of 1,000 newspapers in the United States, practically eliminating the old style circulation liar. More recently 77 newspapers have joined The Globe in pledging themselves to co-operate with advertising agencies by allowing commissions to the agencies on foreign business linked to the name of the local advertiser.

* (The sixteen New York department stores and retail shops on whose advertising this chart is based are: Altman & Co., Arnold, Constable & Co., Best & Co., Bloomingdale Bros., Bonwit, Teller & Co., Gimbels, Hearn, Lord & Taylor, James McCreery & Co., R. H. Macy & Co., Oppenheim, Collins & Co., Franklin Simon & Co., Stern Bros., Stewart & Co., John Wanamaker, and J. M. Gidding & Co.).

The Globe invites the national advertiser to study the purchasing power of the 180,000 families who are its steady friends in New York City. The Globe has probably put more new advertisers on their feet in New York during the last five or six years than all the other New York newspapers combined.

The Chicago Tribune Scoops the Earth with Peace Treaty

While the United States Senate was vainly striving to induce President Wilson to permit it to see a copy of the Peace Treaty, Frazier Hunt, war correspondent of The Chicago Tribune, secured a copy in Paris and brought it to Chicago for publication in The Tribune. The first copy of the Peace Treaty seen by the Senate of the United States was that presented to it by The Chicago Tribune on June 9, 1919.

This sensational scoop, one of the greatest (if not the greatest) of all history is in line with Chicago Tribune traditions and with recent achievements of The Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service under the direction of Floyd Gibbons. Note the following Tribune "beats":—

First American correspondent into Berlin after the armistice—trip being made by aeroplane from the western front.

First American correspondent into Vienna and Budapest after the armistice.

First American correspondent on the Archangel front—his revelations bringing about the recall of the American forces from Russia.

First American correspondent into Soviet Russia—only authentic first-hand news of conditions in Petrograd and Moscow received by the outside world for more than a year.

So many scoops on the Peace Conference that the British newspaper men have filed a formal protest with their governments against the alleged favoritism shown The Chicago Tribune. London has been learning vital facts about the Peace Conference by reading quotations from The Tribune.

Only newspaper of any allied nation to establish a daily newspaper in France for the benefit of its expeditionary forces.

The Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service is the most remarkable enterprise of its kind in history of journalism. No newspaper ever sent to Europe such a body of high caliber writers as those on the staff of The Chicago Tribune. No wonder every person of any consequence within three hundred miles of Chicago considers The Tribune an absolute necessity seven days every week. No wonder every reader reads The Tribune thoroughly. No wonder even Henry Ford's advertising department considers The Chicago Tribune the greatest and most indispensable advertising medium.

DIXIE TODAY

If just you could
But take the time
To take the trip
Through Dixieland
Where I have been
For weeks and weeks
And if you could
Size up the towns
And see the stores
And streets and folks
And stay a night
In those hotels
And read the papers
Your eyes would open
As mine have opened
And you would know
As I know now
That Dixieland
No longer sleeps
But is awake

And if you knew
The Dixieland
Of twenty years
Or more ago
And saw the change
In towns and men
In streets and stores
And everything
You'd realize
As I now do
That Dixieland
Is just the place
To sow the seed
Of business big
For big returns
At little cost.
And you would be
As glad you'd made
The trip as I Am glad I went

Dixie Agriculturally

Think of Dixie agriculturally in millions—many millions of dollars worth of products.

Think of the 1919 crops of Dixie as being the largest in its history—and all oversold, at record breaking prices.

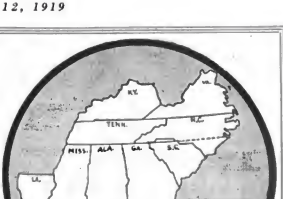
You naturally think of cotton, tobacco and sugar when you think of agricultural Dixie. Think at the same time of corn, wheat, oats, melons, apples, peaches, peanuts, oranges, grape fruit—think, too, of oysters, sheep, hogs and cattle.

Lots and lots of these things—all wanted everywhere—all growing in great profusion, all oversold.

Dixie is great agriculturally—but don't stop there. Think, too, of

Dixie Industrially

Dixie is producing nearly TWO BILLION DOLLARS WORTH OF MANUFACTURED ARTICLES ANNUALLY.



Tobacco, cotton goods, lumber, flour—all manufactured in Dixie, from raw materials grown in Dixie—and sold the world over.

Dixie as a Resort Country

Dixie as a winter resort is a big, big, money enterprise. "Yanks" "Invade" Dixie annually, invade Dixie with money to spend, and Dixie has risen to the occasion and provides ample facilities for the spending of much money.

Dixie's winter resorts are popular, prosperous and produce big business.

Dixie newspapers are producers. Use them right and they will use you right.

The products of the South are rich and varied.

A NEWSPAPER REPORTER RELEASES TO AMERICA TEXT OF THE ALLIES' TERMS OF PEACE

PREDICT ATTEMPT TO TAX ADVERTISING

Officers of A. A. C. W. Urge Necessity of Ad Men Presenting United Front to Congress, at Portland Convention of Pacific Coast Assn.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE EDITOR & PUBLISHER]

PORTLAND, Ore., June 11.—Decision to continue its affiliation with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World was the outstanding feature of the annual convention of the Pacific Coast Advertising Men's Association, held in Portland, June 8, 9, 10 and 11. The meeting was one of the largest and most spirited in the history of the organization, the attendance from outside Portland, including families of the attending members, being estimated at 2,000.

A large proportion of the delegates had come to the convention prepared to vote to sever relations with the parent organization on the grounds of economy. They remained to decide with practically unanimity that the advantages of membership are more than worth the membership dues. They return to the individual clubs strongly recommending that their status with the larger organization be continued indefinitely.

D'Arcy and Kellogg Win Out

The fight to keep the Pacific Coast Association in the world affiliation was led by William C. D'Arcy, president of the Advertising Clubs of the World, strongly seconded by F. W. Kellogg, publisher of the Los Angeles Express and vice-president of the Pacific Coast organization.

The necessity of advertising men presenting a united front at the present Congress, when it is expected a measure to tax all advertising will be introduced, was urged by Mr. D'Arcy in an address before the convention on Tuesday. Mr. D'Arcy said a delegation from the national organization would appear before Congress armed with statistics to prove that such a tax would be an unjust burden of the consumer and he asked the Pacific Coast men to lend their support.

This argument, and others advanced, convinced a committee appointed by Charles F. Berg, president of the Coast Association, that they should not withdraw from the National Clubs. The committee consisted of W. P. Strandborg, secretary of the association and the president and delegates-at-large of the Member Clubs.

One of the striking addresses of the convention was made on Sunday by Ole Hanson, Seattle's fighting mayor. Mr. Hanson dealt in no gentle terms with

Frazier Hunt of Chicago Tribune Brings Document from Paris and Presents It to U. S. Senate—President's Wish and Pledge of Secrecy Is Defied and Senate Endorses the Action

THROUGH an action by the Chicago Tribune, what is said to be the exact text of the Peace Treaty, as presented to the German delegates, has been published in the United States in defiance of the expressed wish and policy of President Wilson who, according to Richard V. Oulahan, staff correspondent of the New York Times at Paris, had entered into an agreement with the leading plenipotentaries of the other great powers that the treaty draft should be withheld from publication.

The Principle of "Open Covenants"

Publication of any textual part of the draft is prohibited in the British Isles and France through operations of the censorship. Mr. Oulahan cables that while Lloyd George is blamed in England for this secrecy, President Wilson is "willing to assume full responsibility," taking the ground that the treaty is a confidential document until completed, and that recent and present happenings show that it is still to the formative stage, due to pressure for modifications.

There is no explanation of the President's attitude in view of his original but greatly neglected first principle "open covenants of peace openly arrived at."

The President held that the United States Senate has no right to see the treaty until the official draft was presented to it for ratification. It is admitted that "copies" of the treaty are on sale in Germany and adjacent neutral countries.

Led by United States Senators who are outspokenly opposed to President Wilson's foreign policies, the searching demand for publication of the treaty text, which has continued for weeks at Washington, came to a head when Senator Lodge charged that there had been a "leak," and that he had seen a draft in the possession of a Wall Street financier

Mr. Lodge would not name the man, but the "leak" charge grew with the amplifications of other opposition senators until President Wilson cabled Senator Hitchcock, his supporter, to urge that a full senatorial investigation of the "leak" charges be held. This was finally ordered and the leaders of finance in Wall Street, including Messrs. Morgan, Schiff, Lamont, Warburg, Davison and Vanderlip, were ordered subpoenaed to appear before an investigation committee.

In the meantime Frazier Hunt, who had been representing the Chicago Tribune at Paris since the wounding and return home of Floyd Gibbons, turned

POLACHEK RESIGNS FROM NEW YORK AMERICAN

Victor H. Polachek, publisher of the New York American, has resigned that position and announces that he is retiring from the organization of William Randolph Hearst, of which he has been a member for 21 years.

Mr. Polachek will take a much needed rest as soon as work on which he is now engaged will permit. He says he has made no final plans for the future.

Mr. Polachek has, during his 21 years service with Mr. Hearst, held all editorial positions from copyreader to managing editor, all publication and business office positions from advertising man to publisher and for several years was associated with Mr. Carvalho in the general management of the Hearst publications.

Amazing Strike in Mexico City and Buenos Aires Met by Unionization of Defensive Publishers, Who Defeat the Mexicans

So the newspaper proprietors formed a union. It has happened in Buenos Aires and also in Mexico City. It was a big success in Mexico City in dealing with striking employees and was as the result of a hint conveyed by cable to Buenos Aires. Now Buenos Aires newspaper owners believe they will profit by the suggestion they gave the newspaper proprietors of Mexico City, but their strike is still on.

Buenos Aires is a city of more than 1,500,000 inhabitants and normally reads thirty daily newspapers in many languages. But since late in May, no newspapers have been printed in Buenos Aires and none have been sent in from other cities, so the population has gone back to pioneer days when they waited the arrival of sailing ships to learn what was going on elsewhere.

Remarkable Welfare

Everyone who knows the big newspapers of the world knows La Prensa of Buenos Aires. Its proprietor, or "director general," as he is known there, is Ezequiel P. Paz. He is more than a newspaper owner. In the handsome building La Prensa inhabits, he maintains also as part of the newspaper equipment, a medical surgery bureau, a chemical and agricultural bureau, a legal bureau, a meteorological observatory and such public welfare organizations and also "apartments for distinguished visitors."

Men employed on La Prensa have lived in a golden age. All of them have been wards of the proprietor and his chief object in life, seemingly, has been to make them happy. So, for instance, during each evening, one of his aides

I. C. M. A. CONVENTION CONDEMNS WASTE IN CIRCULATION PRACTICES

99 Per Cent of Members Vote Against "Returns" at Buffalo Meeting—Want to Co-operate with Post Office—"Business from the Shoulder"

(STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.)

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 11.—If any thought lingers in the mind of newspaper publishers anywhere that there is the slightest possibility of a desire for the adoption of old-time methods of waste by any of the circulators of newspapers, the vote following a discussion on returns decided where members of the International Circulation Managers Association, in 21st annual convention in this city, stand on the question. Ninety-nine per nt voted against returns and formally pledged themselves to opposition to y future adoption of the return privilege in any guise whatsoever.

The spirit displayed in the action and the expression of opinions on s score and the members desire to go on record before the newspapers of country have been the outstanding feature of the annual convention, ch comes to a close, with the election of officers and selection of the 1920 eeting place, tomorrow afternoon.

Extend Vote of Thanks to Editor & Publisher

President Joseph R. Taylor in his early remarks, said that publicity for I. C. M. A. interests was very important, and he appreciated the co-operation of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. The members unanimously voted approval of the President's remarks and extended a vote of thanks to this newspaper.

One of the most important factors in the welfare of circulations is service to subscribers, depending upon the mail and express delivery, said J. D. Hardy, Chief Clerk, District No. 9, U. S. Railway Mail Service, brought an encouraging message to the convention about it.

Problems of the Railway Mail Service

In an address, to which the closest attention was paid, Mr. Hardy said:

J. D. Hardy, chief clerk of the U. S. Railway Mail Service at Harrisburg, Pa., presented a paper on the subject of "How to Reduce Complaints to a Minimum."

"The relation of the Railway Mail Service to Circulation Managers of daily newspapers is thoroughly understood by every gentleman present," said Mr. Hardy. "The success or failure of a Circulation Manager can, in a measure, be attributed to local conditions in the Post Office Department, especially the Railway Mail Service in the district in which the daily paper has its circulation. If you could understand the problem of the Railway Mail Service from our standpoint I am sure there would be a more concerted effort on the part of publishers to assist the Post Office Department in remedying the unsatisfactory conditions which exist and over which we have absolutely no control.

Freight Service of First Importance

"During the past two or three years the Post Office Department has been severely criticized for alleged unsatisfactory service conditions, and considerable comment has been made 'upon the breaking down' of the service, and of the inefficient administration of the same. I feel that a frank explanation of some of the causes contributing to conditions complained of should be mentioned at this time.

"You gentlemen, possibly more than any other class of business men, were affected by these conditions as the irregular running of trains resulted in misconnection and complaints of delayed receipt of papers, but with the improved weather conditions, transportation facilities unfortunately did not improve as the increased demands on the railroads on account of the war, necessitated a most radical curtailment of passenger train service in order to provide sufficient equipment and trackage for the more important freight service. Shortly after this nation-wide curtailment of passenger train service the railroad companies, especially those in the East, began to complain bitterly to the Post Office Department of the delay to their passenger trains on account of the handling of large volumes of mail at important junction points, and insisting upon the segregation of certain classes of mail matter from fast passenger trains and the dispatch of the same upon solid mail or mail and express trains. One of the great Eastern railroads went so far as to demand of the Post Office Department, the withdrawal of practically all through mail service from passenger trains, and when such action was opposed by the Post Office Department they revised their train schedules so as to break through connections and therefore, forced the mail onto specially scheduled mail trains, and when this action was not found practicable the railroads refused to hold fast passenger trains for the loading and unloading of mails, ordering trains to depart from stations without mails being loaded or unloaded, and a careful compilation of the number of such cases throughout the United States during a four-week period showed there to be three hundred and sixty-four such cases, in connection with which 230 pourhes and 17,147 sacks of mail were delayed until the arrival of subsequent trains which would accept these mails.

JAMES McKERNAN
President-elect of the I. C. M. A.

"One of the heaviest and most important mail trains of an Eastern system, having a heavy trans-continental connection, was lengthened in schedule three hours between New York and a central western point and a corresponding time to farther western points. All trans-continental mail trains were lengthened, with a result that the schedule time of dispatch from Boston to San Francisco was extended nearly three days. This action by the railroad companies was taken, notwithstanding the fact, that the Government had taken over the operation of the railroads, and that the Post Office Department had vigorously protested such action. The matter of operating mail trains was of great concern to officials of the Railway Mail Service as our service is built upon the theory that heavy trunk line mail trains will make and maintain connections with side line trains at important junction points; and when a heavy through mail train runs so late as to miss these connections the office of every superintendent and chief clerk in the Railway Mail Service is the recipient of complaints of delays to different classes of mail.

Better Co-operation in Future

"At a recent conference in Washington between supervisory officials of different branches of the Post Office Department and representatives of the business organizations, a committee of three was appointed to take up the matter of railroad schedules, with a view of presenting the matter to the Railroad Administration for remedial action, and I have reason to believe that this committee, which will consist of representatives of the Post Office Department and of large business interests, will have sufficient influence with the Railroad Administration to effect desired results. Many Eastern railroads are contemplating the restoration of a great many of the local and through trains on their summer time tables which were withdrawn during the period of the war.

The Department's Policy

"The Post Office Department, for several years past, has realized the necessity for making radical changes in the method of transportation of mails on account of the increased volume of the same and the desire for further expediting the delivery of first-class mail and daily papers. One of the first steps in that direction was the segregating of all second-class mail matter except daily papers from regular mail trains and the dispatch of the same as blue tag mails by freight from office of publication to distant points where they were then reverted into the mails for delivery. This action temporarily caused general complaint from publishers, but the plan was so practicable and has worked out so successfully that I doubt whether the publishers would now desire to return to the former manner of handling their publications.

"This action on the part of the Post Office Department so relieved the conditions in railway post office cars as to permit of the entire effort of postal employes towards the proper distribution of first-class mail and daily papers.

How to Dispatch Papers

"In all of the larger cities the Post Office Department has prepared special schemes for use of publishers, showing the best possible dispatch of their papers to the different post office throughout the United States, indicating train numbers and the time of departure, and at such points where the number of publications and the volume of business was not sufficient to warrant the preparation of such schemes the department has arranged to have the publisher's galley list examined from time to time and keyed up for the best possible dispatch. Ninety-five per cent of all daily papers

DOYEN OF U. S. CORRESPONDENTS HONORED BY BRITISH PRESS

Edward Price Bell of Chicago Daily News in London Given Tribute—"20 Years Ambassador of Understanding Between Great Britain and United States."

By Herbert C. Ridout
London Editor of Editor & Publisher

London, May 12.

EDWARD PRICE BELL was the recipient last week of a tribute banquet by his colleagues of the British press, and the occasion was one of unique character, serving to show how deeply Mr. Bell had succeeded in penetrating the affections of London friends and the high esteem in which the paper he represents so ably, the Chicago Daily News, is held in this country.

Called "Ambassador of Understanding"

Mr. Bell has put up a unique record. For "20 years an ambassador of understanding between Great Britain and the United States" as it was aptly phrased, he is to-day the doyen of the distinguished band of American correspondents in London.

He had no reputation beyond that of being a clever journalist when he came to London twenty years ago, but he has made the British people his particular study, and distinguished himself during the War, by furnishing his paper with a faithful and analytical series of reports upon the British nation and its leaders' attitude in the prosecution of the war, dealing with his subjects sympathetically, without bias, and with a keenness of judgment that won entire approval of all who had the privilege of reading his words.

The Chicago Daily News staff has always been considered a great newspaper force for good both in American journalism and in its support of international cordiality. In London it has always stood for the best in American journalism because it preferred sanity to sensation.

A distinguished company was present to do him honor. J. L. Garvin, of the London Observer, presided, others of the gathering including Lord Burnham, Daily Telegraph; Sir Alfred Mond, M.P.; Gordon Selfridge; R. Newton Crane, chairman, U. S. Navy League; Sir Harry Brittain, Empire Press Union; Robert Donald, H. W. Wile, formerly Daily Mail resident Berlin correspondent; Howard Corbett and Pomeroy Burton, of the Times; James Douglas, London Star; and numerous others of the light and leading in London.

Lord Burnham said that Mr. Bell was a great journalist. All great presidents were great statesmen, and Mr. Bell therefore was a great statesman. All the troubles that had ever arisen between this country and America had been a matter of misunderstanding.

Where there were common characteristics and the solid and indestructible basis of mutual good will on which we had stood from the very beginning only proper interpretation was needed to ensure that all went well between us. Mr. Bell had told the American how to understand us, with all our idiosyncrasies, and taught them how to make the best of us.

We wanted now to exploit the psychological moment that had come to us, and it was men like their guest who could do this with the skill of the trained journalist and the power of the sincere believer. He knew Mr. Bell sufficiently well to be sure that what he had done up to now he would continue to do.

He seconded the suggestion that Mr. Bell might some day come here as Ambassador, but he questioned whether their guest could exercise a wider influence for good than he could at present.

Edward Price Bell

Mr. Bell said that during the twenty years he had cabled and posted some millions of words to American readers. He recalled with pleasure that in all these millions of words there had not been one to stir bitterness in any American heart towards this motherland of the English-speaking race.

On the positive side, he had done everything he could to show what was excellent and powerful in this people, and he felt that while no one man in the world could do more than a little, perhaps something had been done by his mass of words to make the American people understand better than they did the great people of Great Britain.

"I wish to try to project on the screen of your imagination," Mr. Bell continued, "a picture of the world as I see it to-night. On the one hand is the domain of recurrent war. On the other is the domain of perpetual peace. Between these two domains is what I shall call the abyss of domestic civilization.

"In this domain of war are all the peoples of the world; they are crowded very close to the abyss. The domain of peace is uninhabited, sun flooded, full of immense promise and happiness to the human race.

"Across the abyss which is the central feature of my picture, the best brains and the most powerful hands of the world are engaged in constructing a bridge, the most ambitious attempt in political engineering that history has known.

"It is a shadowy thing yet. But when I went to witness the surrender of the German fleet I remember that I looked at the great bridge across the Firth of Forth, and when I first saw it in dim light I thought it might slip away at any moment. The next day, however, after seeing a marvelous maritime spectacle, I again saw the bridge in clear air and sunlight. I watched two trains rushing across it in opposite directions, and I could not observe the slightest tremor in the whole gigantic structure. I hope and believe the great piece of political engineering of which I have spoken may some day not be clouded, but may be a solid thing—so solid that it will support the migration of the world from the domain of recurrent war to the beautiful domain of perpetual peace.

Basis of Peace

"This is a time in the history of the world when the man in the street has come in off the street. He has come into the council chambers of the world, and has laid his powerful hands on the wheel of national and international affairs. As a very humble representative of the people I would like to say something to the statesmen and publicists and journalists and peoples of Britain and America.

"I would like to say to them that there is one primary inscriptable and immutable principle to which they should cling at all times, and it is this, that in no circumstances whatever shall there be any quarrel between these two peoples. The great suspension bridge that the world is doing its utmost to build from the best material that can be provided must rest on two piers. I speak with the utmost possible respect for the people of the world, but one of those piers is the land power, sea power, intellectual and moral power of Great Britain and the British Empire, and the other is the same power of the American Republic."

Another tribute to the high position gained by Edward Price Bell in British journalistic circles is the fact that the Sunday Graphic devoted a whole column to an interview with Mr. Bell, telling the story of his search for truth in news. This is Mr. Bell's story:

"My career here (in London) dates from February, 1900. I came into this city at that time an utter stranger. I did not know a living soul in the place. I started out to try to get into touch with news sources, and my career here has been an unceasing fight to get the news and to penetrate the minds of persons who are doing the really vital things.

"During the war we made very considerable progress in overcoming official reticence. We broke down barriers to a very considerable extent. American correspondents, especially during the later years of the war, were taken quite freely into the confidence of public men, and as a result we were able to give to American readers, if not a complete at any rate a very vivid idea of some of the very great things that were being done by the British people in the war.

"I think that this work did more than anything to counteract the pro-German agitation in the United States.

"I am hopeful that the barriers which have thus been broken down will never be put up again against American journalists.

"In all our experiences during the

BIG CROWD EXPECTED AT A. B. C. MEETING

Fifth Annual Convention Opens at Chicago, June 19, with Divisional Meetings—General Session and Dinner on Following Day

Chicago, June 11.—All is in readiness for the sixth annual convention and its fifth anniversary of the foundation of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, to be held at La Salle Hotel June 19 and 20.

June 19th will be devoted to Divisional Committee meetings. The convention will open at 10 a. m., June 20th. The annual dinner that evening will be a sumptuous affair.

Every convention of the bureau has been increasingly important to advertisers, advertising agents and publishers, but this meeting will be perhaps the most important in its history. The bureau has made steady progress in the past five years. Through the devotion of leaders in the advertising and publishing world, a great institution has been established.

Among the most important topics to be considered is the revised by-laws. These revisions are the result of six months' work of legal advisers, the officers and the Board of Directors. They have been endorsed by a majority vote of Class A members, in accordance with the requirements of the existing by-laws, and will now be placed before the membership for ratification.

These new by-laws, if adapted by the convention, will establish the principles on which the bureau will operate in the future. The changes are not serious and are believed to be an improvement.

The present members of the Board of Directors whose terms expire at this meeting, and who will be re-appointed or whose successors will be named, are:

Advertisers—
Mr. George W. Cushing,
Hudson Motor Car Company, Detroit, Mich.
Mr. W. Laughlin,
Armour and Company, Chicago, Ill.
Mr. F. R. Davis,
General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.
Mr. H. Squier,
Palmer Brewing Company, Milwaukee, Wis.
Mr. L. B. Jones,
Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y.
Mr. B. H. Bramble,
Canadian Chewing Gum Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Advertising Agents—
Mr. J. W. Erickson,
The Erickson Company, New York, N. Y.
Mr. P. V. Troup,
Lord and Thomas, Chicago (one year).

Publishers—Newspapers—
Mr. W. A. Strong,
The Daily News, Chicago, Ill.

Magazines—
Mr. F. W. Stone,
The American Review of Reviews, New York, N. Y.

Farm Papers—
Mr. Herbert A. Whitney,
The Phelps Publishing Company, Springfield, Mass.

Business Publications—
Mr. E. T. Howson,
Power Plant Engineering, Chicago, Ill.

A large attendance is expected at the convention.

No proxies will be recorded after the opening at 10 a. m. Friday.

Manchester Greets America

The New York Times on Wednesday carried a two-page advertisement of Manchester, England, setting forth the great commercial importance of the Manchester Ship Canal and bearing greetings from the business men of that city to Americans. This advertisement is epochal, indicating the advent of international advertising of the kind foreshadowed in the recent International Number of Editor & Publisher.

N. Y. WORLD'S NOTABLE FEAT IN PRINTING OCEAN-FLIGHT STORIES

Had to Overcome Many Obstacles to Contract With Navy Officer Flyers and Succeeded—Accounts Otherwise Might Never Have Been Made Public

ONE of the really notable journalistic achievements of recent years was that of the New York World in obtaining from the commanders of the Navy's three transatlantic seaplanes, Commander John H. Towers, Lieut.-Commander Albert Cushing Read, and Lieut.-Commander Patrick N. L. Bellinger, their own stories of the flights.

Quite apart from their supreme news interest, the narratives are of immense historic value and threw highly valuable light on problems of aerial navigation encountered in these record-breaking cruises which, but for the World's enterprise in eliciting the accounts, in all likelihood never would have reached the public.

World Had to Overcome Many Obstacles

There were many reasons for doubting, before the attempt was made, that any measure of success would crown an effort to induce the three commanders to turn reporters for any single newspaper. For weeks before the take-off from Rockaway the Navy Department had laid obstacles in the paths of the newspaper men assigned to follow preparations for the flight.

It seemed as if a decision had been reached to adhere to a policy of secrecy until the flight had either been negotiated or had failed. In addition, the three commanders are Navy officers, and it was impossible at any moment to entertain a hope that they would risk sending a story to a newspaper without full and complete permission from their superiors.

Contracts Finally Closed

Nevertheless, undeterred by these considerations, the World set out to accomplish the great journalistic beat and, as everybody knows now, was successful. Until a few days before the actual start from Rockaway Naval Air Station, Commander Towers was the only officer whose name was officially identified with the flight plans, and it was by no means certain that he would be aboard one of the flying boats.

Nevertheless before the personnel of the crews was formally announced the World had entered into contracts with both Commander Towers and Lieut.-Commander Bellinger to furnish accounts of the flight, thereby exhibiting the prescience which had enabled that newspaper to publish the names of five out of the six pilots several days before Washington permitted release of the names.

When that announcement came it revealed that the World was covered on two of the three planes, and in both by the commanders, the men best fitted to furnish the sort of stories wanted, because their positions demanded familiarity with every detail of the cruises. Lieut.-Commander Read, skipper of the NC-4, was as yet unsigned. The different possibilities of the situation included that all planes might get across, that all might fail, or that any one or two would suceeed.

Every Eventuality Assured

The contract with Commander Read, which was entered into without delay after the official announcement of his selection, gave absolute insurance that every angle and every eventuality of the flight would be adequately covered. The management of the World could then rest in easy confidence that not only would no other newspaper have better stories, but that none could have any equalling its own in authority.

The outcome of these far-sighted arrangements has already been adequately emphasized by the quality of their returns. The stories, sent back while they were still news and printed in installments in the World, formed in their entirety such an adventure romance of air and sea as had never before seen the light of print. They transcended infinitely in both interest and value the reports of trained newspaper men following the flight because they were the actual experiences and observations of participants in the great adventure, set down while those observations and experiences were fresh in memory.

They touched on innumerable phases of the flight newspaper writers would not have thought of asking about.

Read's Story Will Live Long

Lieut.-Commander Read's narrative of the successful flight of the NC-4 was of particular interest by reason of its fulness and comprehension of what the public wanted to know. His straightforward fact story will live many a day without a rival.

Read's complete story was told in five articles, totaling altogether about 12,000 words. Characteristically, his first came from the Azores, after he had successfully concluded the most difficult part of the task assigned him.

It told of the flight from Trepassey to Horta. Not until later did he relate the discouraging experiences of the NC-4 on the first leg of the cruise, when, storm-bound at Chatham, Mass., it looked as if the other planes would leave Newfoundland before Read's ship could reach there. His well rounded narrative concluded with a description of the flight to Plymouth, England, and observations of great value based on the experiences the writer underwent.

The Flight, Step by Step

Towers and Bellinger each contributed three articles to the history of the flight, following it step by step. Although both met with wreck, they lived up to their agreements to tell their stories, which are straightforward, and accounts of misadventure in fog near the Azores will live as permanent contributions to the history of aviation.

The total word count of the printed stories—upward of 20,000—convey an idea of the "never mind the expense" spirit of the World in obtaining these great features. The cable companies did their bit, straining every nerve to expedite the dispatches in the face of great difficulties by reason of pressure of other business.

In this connection it is of interest to note that all of the proceeds of their journalistic work went to the writers themselves, although the articles were syndicated through the World. The provision that the aviators should reap the financial reward of their stories was written into the contracts by the World.

MADE WAR MATERIAL—THEN USED IT AS AVIATOR IN OVERSEAS SERVICE

Everyone recalls the featuring of the Hamilton watch as the "railroad timekeeper of America" in the early years of the advertising of the Hamilton Watch Company of Lancaster, Pa., and it is interesting to know that many of the most forceful pieces of this kind of copy were written by Robert E. Miller, the present advertising manager, when he was a "green hand" at advertising and just out of college.

When the world war started, Mr. Miller was secretary and general manager of the Hamilton Corporation, a subsidiary of the Hamilton Watch Company, organized for the purpose of constructing timers, and distance measuring instruments.

Much of the material turned out by the new corporation was turned over to the War and Navy Departments of the Government and finally Mr. Miller decided that instead of merely manufacturing such instruments for the Government, he would use them, himself in Government service. So he voluntarily enlisted in the aviation service as a private in June, 1918.

Upon graduation at an aviation school, he received a lieutenant's commission, spent six weeks at an aviation camp in Texas, and went overseas where he was in service for six months in France in the A. E. F. Now he has returned to civil life and his duties in connection with the Hamilton Watch Company and the Hamilton Corporation.

He is 27 years old, is married, and has a son.

Evening Chronicle Absorbs News-Statesman—Moses & Son, Publishers

MARSHALL, Mich., June 11.—The Evening Chronicle has absorbed the News-Statesman, the latter being discontinued June 14, leaving the Chronicle the only paper in the field. Six years ago there were three dailies and three weeklies. The Evening Chronicle has just ordered new equipment. H. D. Lansing and D. W. Knickerbocker were publishers of the News-Statesman until the death of the latter a month ago. The Chronicle is published by J. M. Moses & Son. The Chronicle will be represented in the east by Payne, Burns & Smith, Inc., and in the west by G. Logan Payne Co.

N. Y. Globe Opens Chicago Office

The New York Globe has decided to open an office in Chicago, in charge of John Hunter, to represent the paper direct in the matter of foreign advertising. Richard S. Wood has been placed in charge of foreign advertising in the territory east of Buffalo and Pittsburgh, at the same time retaining charge of the Globe's food department.

TEXANS TESTIFY FOR CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Testimony for Defence in Ford Libel Suit Shows Reign of Terror Along Rio Grande at Time Editorial Was Printed

The presentation of the direct testimony of the plaintiff in the libel suit of Henry Ford against the Chicago Tribune, at Mt. Clemens, Mich., was completed June 5, and witnesses for the defence called on June 6.

Counsel for Mr. Ford made an effort to substantiate charges of bias on the part of the Tribune because of private interests and "pro-German leanings." Mr. Ford's embarkation in the tractor business was assigned as a reason for hostility to him on the part of the International Harvester Company. After hearing testimony along this line, Judge Tucker ruled that the relationship of the McCormicks of the Harvester Company and the McCormicks of the Tribune was so remote that it gave only dubious indications of having affected the policy of the newspaper.

Attorney Weymouth Kirkland, for the Tribune, stated that the witnesses called from their homes on the Texas border would be the last heard, as they had made great sacrifices to be present at the trial. He announced that a serial story would be unfolded by these witnesses, showing a state of terror all along the border at the time the Tribune was urging the protection of our citizens by armed intervention in Mexico, Under Secretary Lansing.

Judge Tucker having ruled that the defense might introduce testimony to show actual conditions along the border, the first witnesses upon the Tribune to show that the writer of the famous editorial had such knowledge in a general way at the time the editorial was written, the leading witnesses were called to the stand at the Friday session. The first of these witnesses was Mrs. Austin, of Sebastian, Texas, whose husband and son were killed by Mexican raiders on their ranch, thirty miles north of the Rio Grande, on August 6, 1915.

Other Texas witnesses who have been heard have related stories of terrorism, involving killings of our citizens by bands of Mexican bandits, and of plans for the invasion of the United States by the Villistas. It was proposed to retake Texas, New Mexico and Arizona. Papers and maps had been captured and turned over to our military authorities, and steps taken by them to frustrate raids.

German guns and munitions, seized from Mexicans, were shown in the court. The Tribune attorneys contend that these atrocities forming so black a chapter of American history, could have been avoided had troops been sent to the border in time to control the situation. They contend also that Mr. Ford worked to prevent troops being sent.

At the Tuesday session, Norman Walker, for twelve years an El Paso newspaper man and since 1916 Associated Press correspondent in El Paso, narrated his experiences and observations of border conditions. He told of the killing of many El Paso people by stray bullets at the time Villa captured Juarez from the Federals. Many families removed from the city, which was a danger zone, and business houses were put in a state of armed defense against the possibilities of raids.

ROY W. HOWARD TELLS HOW NEWS OF AMERICA IS RELISHED ABROAD

United Press Executive Saw Desolation in Germany—France and England Are Rapidly Reconstructing—Proper Exchange of Press Intelligence Basic Aid to World Understanding

RETURNING from a three months' European business trip, Roy W. Howard, chief executive of the United Press Associations, tells EDITOR & PUBLISHER that the appetite abroad for American news has tremendously increased and that there is every evidence that American importation of foreign news will continue in the present vast volume after the signing of the peace treaty.

News as an Aid to International Peace

"The intimate relationship of the Allies during the war and the conspicuous part played by America in the struggle has created a popular interest in press intelligence on both sides of the Atlantic which shows no sign of abatement and if cultivated properly by the established news agencies and the newspapers will mean much to give enduring stability to the permanent peace movement," he said. "The cables are overtaxed and there is a strong demand for the partial use of Government wireless to relieve the congestion.

Expanding Service

"The ground work has been laid for an understanding among peoples of all nations which is indispensable to the success of international good will, no matter what form covenants to perpetuate peace may take. Broadly speaking, I believe it is true that the future service of the world press as a fundamental requirement of world understanding, is recognized generally by newspaper men, but it does not yet seem to have taken strong hold with many of the leaders of governments. It is a fact, however, that the war has given the diplomatic world a new vision of the power of the press in all international relations. The most immediate response to this knowledge is the activity of several of the nations to venture into the realm of press agentry, with paid representatives issuing propaganda in various forms of publicity.

"The United Press is making important extensions to its European service. Rather than decreasing personnel we have enlarged the foreign staff, in instances doubling the forces. United Press dispatches are now appearing regularly in newspapers of England and France and this foreign use of our service promises to progress rapidly, blazing the trail for American-produced news in Europe, much as the United Press opened the way for this product in South America three years ago.

Miseries of Germany

"While abroad I visited Germany, England and France. Life seems very desolate in Germany. The principal streets of Berlin, once so gay and reckless, now seem as listless and deserted as Broadway of an early Sunday morning. Women and children show the war strain that existed at home. They look thin, often emaciated, and their soberness speaks volumes. Militarism is most certainly crushed in Germany. Once the animating spirit of all classes of people, it is now a thing despised. You seen a German soldier slouching on his gun, his cap pulled down over his eyes, his uniform shapeless, puffing a cigarette. Discipline, once his god, has gone out of him, and no one minds.

"Insofar as Government exists, its personnel is made up chiefly of remnants of the Kaiser's old bureaucrats, trying to feign a new philosophy, trying to explain away the dealings of fate, trying to conceal their true motives till the present hurricane of national disappointment, shame and regret has swept by. Germans of intelligence and affairs with whom I talked seemed to feel that the next phase of Government would come through action by the moderate Socialists. I found that capitalists were not averse to a real test of Government by these moderates, whose objects are more national than international and whose scheme is constructive rather than one tending in any way to the bitter radicalism sweeping from the north. But the future of Germany is not to be predicted by any man. On every hand there one finds the opinion that the terms of the peace treaty, if accepted, will leave Germany impotent and futile through two generations at least.

"Industry, except agriculture, is prostrate. One sees great manufacturing plants idle and abandoned. To sustain life the people are in the fields raising crops.

French and English Press

"France is reconstructing somewhat slowly, but the determination of the people to re-establish their fortunes and rebuild their country seems fixed. The newspapers appear to be making headway, gradually increasing in size and, in general, overcoming the retrenchment and embarrassments of war times. Life goes on in Paris much as usual. The center of all interest lies in the peace conference. The political elements are feverish, and great developments are looked for after the signing of the treaty.

"In England I was interested in the rapid growth in importance and popularity of the evening newspapers. They have gained ascendancy in circulation and they are in many ways the more enterprising and progressive of the newspapers. England is reaching out for trade. She is greatly in need of raw materials. Her transformation to the terms of peace has been rapid. The people appear anxious to clear their minds of memories of war tragedies and resume normal thought and action."

Preparing for Canadian Loan

OTTAWA, Ont., June 10.—Canadian newspapers are beginning to line things up for the Spring Peace Loan flotation, which will be made in the autumn. Each of the previous Government loans exceeded its predecessor in advertising lineage, and it is expected that the next one will set up a new high record.

ALLISON JOINS RECORD IN FORT WORTH

Popular Southerner Resigns as Publisher of Nashville Tennessean & American to Become Vice-President and Manager of Texas Newspaper

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

FORT WORTH, Tex., June 11.—James H. Allison, publisher of the Nashville Tennessean and American and vice-president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, has come to Forth Worth as vice-president and general manager of the Fort Worth Record.

Mr. Allison is one of the best-known newspapermen of the South. Two years ago the publishers of the Fort Worth Record were seeking a man to put the paper on its feet. A proposal was made to Mr. Allison. He declined, and said that the man for the job was W. H. Bagley. Mr. Bagley's services were secured. Today the Record is a financial success; Mr. Bagley owns all of the stock in it, and Mr. Allison now comes in as his partner, the understanding here being that he is to take up one-third ownership.

Comes as Partner

"Jim Allison is coming here as my partner," said Mr. Bagley. "He is among the noblest of men, and there is no more capable newspaper executive in this country. Fort Worth, growing by leaps and bounds, offers him an excellent opportunity, and he will make his service felt for this community. The Record has made a notable business gain during the past year, something over 100 per cent in advertising. Texas is booming as never before."

In a public announcement, Mr. Bagley bespoke for his associate "the same kindly consideration and generous co-operation that has been shown me by the people of Fort Worth and Texas."

Mr. Allison is a native of Ohio. At the age of 12 he was selling papers on the streets of Columbus. A few years later he held a responsible position in the office of the Columbus Dispatch. He became superintendent of newsboys, and was later given a place in the circulation department. Then followed the transfer to the reportorial department, which did not appeal to him, and he returned to the business office of the Dispatch. He then joined the National Stockman and Farmer at Pittsburg, where he remained until Nov. 1, 1911, when he joined the Nashville Tennessean and American and rose rapidly.

Press Is Untouched By the Strike of Keymen

Leased Wire Operators Not Involved and Special Service Seems Normal During First Day

The nation-wide strikes of telegraph operators, which began yesterday, caused no interruption of news service, so far as could be learned, in any part of the country. The Western Union, the Postal Telegraph Company, and the American Telegraph and Telephone Company, and a number of small telegraph companies all accepted messages and delivered them promptly without marking them "subject to delay," and if newspaper editors had not read their own papers, they would not have known a twenty-four hours after the strike had begun that a strike was on.

Western Union officials said that only a few of their operators were members of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America and that business over their lines would not be materially affected. Issues involved in the strike include the right to organize and bargain collectively, wages and working conditions. Leased wire operators are not involved in the strike, but President Konenkamp, of the Union, said they might be called out to enforce the demands made by the commercial men.

CANADIAN EDITORS KNIGHTED

Generals Morrison and Watson Win Honor for War Services

MONTREAL, June 11.—Another Canadian newspaperman, in the person of Gen. D. W. B. Morrison, has been knighted as a result of the services rendered during the war. Sir E. W. B. Morrison, who went overseas with the first Canadian Contingent in 1914, had been editor of the Ottawa Citizen. He went over as a Colonel, won promotion and decorations and ended up by being in charge of all the Canadian artillery. General Morrison also served through the South African War, where he won medals and promotion. He is the second Canadian newspaper man to be knighted because of his war work: a few days ago, General Watson, of the Quebec Chronicle, was made Sir David.

BIG BOOM IN AUSTRALIA

T. H. Grosier Here to Buy Machinery and to Meet Demands

Among the many foreign newspapermen who were in New York this week, many in quest of machinery and equipment supplies, was Thomas H. Grosier, the mechanical superintendent of the Sydney Morning Herald, of Sydney, Australia. He reported a tremendous business revival in Australia, with remarkable prosperity among the newspapers. Advertising, he said, was booming there on about the same scale as in the United States. Mr. Grosier was in the United States to negotiate for the purchase of additional presses for his great newspaper.

JOURNALISM IS TORCH OF PROGRESS IN PAN-AMERICANISM

Herbert Houston Urges Formation of Committee Representing Each Country to Stamp Out Propaganda Inimical to Democratic Institutions—Praises U. S. News Services

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The importance of the unrestricted interchange of news and views and of the correct understanding and use of advertising in the future relations between North and South Americas was a subject in the forefront of the program of discussions at the Pan-American Commercial Congress, which closed here yesterday. In particular the address of Herbert S. Houston of New York stressed the necessity for better press and advertising understanding.

He proposed that a committee of journalists, to be made up of two from each country representing the Pan-American Union, be appointed by the Congress, to be known as the Vigilance Committee on Democratic Information, and to serve under the general direction of the Pan-American Union as an agency to detect and to reveal any propaganda that is a menace to democratic institutions and to the peace and prosperity of the republics of North and South America."

Giving Far Greater Breadth of Knowledge

During his address, entitled "Pan-American Journalism as the Torch of Progress," Mr. Houston said:

"The Pan-American press as the great torch of news has recently had its light vastly increased by the enterprise of the Associated Press and the United Press, in enlarging their news service between the continents.

"The importance of this enlarged service is incalculable. It means better understanding and greater friendship. The light bearers who have brought this to pass, Melville Stone of the Associated Press and Roy Howard of the United Press, deserve not merely unstinted thanks, but substantial and generous financial support, for they are building for Pan-American good will the only foundation on which it can survive and grow— that of a common understanding.

Praises "U. P." and "A. P."

"It is now possible, for the first time, to weave between these republics those bonds of knowledge that are sure to become the bonds of peace and enduring friendship.

"In their country great journals like the New York Sun, the New York Herald, the Philadelphia Public Ledger have opened special sections for the presentation of news and feature articles on the Latin-American Republics.

"These more elaborate articles, supplementing the news that is coming daily by cable, are giving to this country a greater breadth of knowledge of the interests, the hopes, the progress of Latin America than we have ever had before. And the journals of South America and of Cuba are even more enterprising, for they are marching our journals by giving even more attention to North American news than we give to South American, and they also carry on in this country and in Europe educational campaigns in regard to their respective countries.

Opinion Hampered in Past

"It is often invidious to mention names, where so many are deserving of praise, but the work being done by the Journal de Commercio of Rio de Janeiro, by La Nacion and La Prensa of Buenos Aires, by El Mercurio of Santiago, and by El Mundo of Havana is deserving of particular notice.

"This recent and great growth in the amount of news circulating between the continents has given fresh importance to the second distinctive service of the press, that of being a torch to illumine. In times past this torch has not always held a strong, clear light. And the reason has been that opinion has not been based on full and accurate knowledge. Happily this is fast being corrected through the cable and special news services to which reference has been made.

"And it will be still further corrected if insidious propaganda can be checked through a strong committee of journalists operating under the general guidance of the Pan-American Union. That is a means right at hand that can turn on such propaganda a 'pitiless publicity,' both through the torch of news and the torch of opinion.

"In the three-fold power to give light to each other, it is essential that news and opinion be sufficiently comprehensive to present a well-balanced and accurate picture of the spirit, the activities and the whole broad life of the people dwelling in them. Otherwise the picture is incomplete and, therefore inaccurate it may be in some respects, the total impression will lack proportion and focus.

Advertising Important

"In interpreting these two continents, through news, opinion and advertising, that is the thesis of this address, there remains to be considered the luminous quality of the torch of advertising.

"In both North and South America, the power of advertising has come to be one of the most potent forces in business. It is being studied and analyzed as never before, to the end that it may perform with the greatest economy and efficiency the work it has to do in the world.

"And a number of deductions from experience have been crystallized into sound practice. For example, it is generally agreed that advertising, like all business, must rest on truth— and that, therefore, it must be guided and governed by truth. A great international advertising organization has taken form in recent years, called the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and the one word, Truth, is its motto and symbol.

"And in this country it has been responsible for placing honest advertising laws on the statute books of 35 states, and it has done much to standardize advertising practice.

"For one thing, the journalists of Latin America will learn how seriously the publishers and business men in this country look upon advertising and how jealously they guard its good name. In this connection it would increase both friendship and trade between the continents if the few export manufacturers in the United States who are careless both of their country's reputation and their own, should be made known to publishers so that they might be denied advertising space in which they could offer their goods for sale.

"The torch of advertising should be lighted with truth, and the publishers of Pan-America owe it to themselves, to their readers and to their countries to see to it that this is done."

Frank B. Noyes, president of the Associated Press, told the Pan-American Conference to-day the exchange of "the unsubsidized and unbiased news" between the North and South American continents, now being brought about by the membership of South American newspapers in the organization, would be "more effectual in cultivating and maintaining the relations of friendship and affection that should exist between the two continents of this hemisphere than all propaganda that could be fed out by all the publicity agents that could be put to work.

Making People Know Each Other

"We are making peoples know each other, know each other's habits, know each other's likes and dislikes, virtues and foibles."

A pledge that no expense would be spared to create a cable service between the United States, Central and South America that would be the equal of any in the world was made by John L. Merrill, president of the All-America Cables. Mr. Merrill said that his company had duplicated by the services of the three Americas 20,000 miles of cables and land lines and that extensions now under way or planned would bring the total to 30,000.

The first extension to be completed will be to Uruguay and Brazil. Later one cable will be run from Rio de Janeiro to Buenos Aires.

A. C. Pearson of the Dry Goods Economist, president of the Associated Business Papers, Inc., New York, was a speaker on "How the Business Press Serves Industry." He said in part:

"The success of the trade between our respective countries will depend on the knowledge we have of the market and the requirements of our customers, wherever they may be. This information can be obtained primarily by the business press and there is every indication that the publications are thoroughly alive to the responsibility which they owe their industry as well as their country."

MAY START DAILY TRADE PAPER

Said to Be Planned in Chicago for Clothing Industry

CHICAGO, June 10.—It is reported that a group of manufacturers in the women's and children's ready-to-wear clothing field are about to start a daily trade newspaper, to run 12 pages or more, edited under the supervision of a special publication board. More than $40,000 is said already to have been pledged toward financing the paper, which probably will be published here, although some of the principal backers are New York men. Hitherto the only daily newspaper in this field has been Women's Wear, of New York city.

Picturing Tacoma of Old

"Turning Back Life's Pages for Tacomans" is the title of a feature on the Tacoma Ledger which is now starting on its third month. Pictures of Tacomans, taken in their youth, are reproduced, accompanied by a few lines telling of their ambitions at that time. This feature has created such interest that each day's mail brings forth some picture of a Tacoman, taken from 30 to 50 years ago.

JOHN C. COOK APPOINTED MANAGER JOURNAL OF COMMERCE.

The position of business manager of the New York Journal of Commerce, left vacant by the recent death of Edward Payson Call, has been filled by the appointment of John C. Cook, who assumed his new duties June 9. Since last November, Mr. Cook had been in charge of foreign advertising for the New York Herald, Evening Telegram and Paris Herald.

Mr. Cook has been long engaged in executive work for New York daily newspapers, and until 1916 for thirteen years treasurer and business manager of the New York Evening Mail. He retired from daily newspaper work at that time to engage in trade journalism, returning to his old field of activity again, with the Herald, last November.

After "breaking in" on the Philadelphia Press, Mr. Cook came to New York in the early nineties and was for a time advertising manager for John Wanamaker. From that he became advertising manager of the New York Evening Post, when the late E. P. Call was its business manager. Several years later he became business manager of the Evening Mail, with which he remained until the paper passed to the ownership of Dr. E. A. Rumely.

For a number of years Mr. Cook was chairman of banquet committees at A. N. P. A. conventions, some of the best dinners in the history of the organization having been arranged under his direction.

FIRST AD AGENCY IN WICHITA

A. B. Russell Leaving Colorado Springs to Enter Own Business

WICHITA, Kan., June 10.—Allen B. Russell for several years manager of the copy and service departments of the Fawcett Advertising Agency of Colorado Springs, will leave his present connections July 1 to establish the Russell Advertising Agency at Wichita.

It will be the endeavor of this new agency to develop national and semi-national advertising in this field, from which already, several quite large and prominent accounts originate. Mr. Russell has had in addition to his agency work a wide mercantile and department store experience.

FOUR ARMY ADS OUT TO 200 NEWSPAPERS

Good Copy but Promoters Resort to Press Agentry and Assume Usual Pose of "Publicity Experts," Discrediting Fine Enterprise

Four pieces of copy are out in the U. S. Army advertising campaign for recruits.

This campaign, which is limited to the two last weeks in June, is the direct result of the revelation by Estrow & Putzstuck of an existing enabling statute, as published in this journal on April 10.

As confusion exists in advertising circles as to the origin of this newspaper advertising campaign, in the name of accuracy it may be well to state that the Morale Section of the Army originally figured on a poster campaign, with $50,000 appropriation for such printing in New York, and that this schedule was suspended when the enabling statute was pointed out, and high army officials were appraised of the plan to advertise without consideration of the newspapers.

The four pieces of advertising, which are being placed exclusively by Frank Seaman, Inc., are to appear in all English language daily newspapers in cities where recruiting stations are located. There are more than 200 such newspapers in 56 cities. The schedule shows two full pages and two pieces of 1,100 lines.

What Ads Are Like

The first advertisement, scheduled for the week of June 15, is a full-page displaying the line, "50,000 Men Wanted for Immediate Service in France and on the Rhine." The terms and conditions of enlistment are made plain and the advertisement is linked up with the local recruiting offices.

The second advertisement, scheduled also for the week of the 15th, is 1,100 lines, and shows a drawing of Uncle Sam pointing the prospective recruit to the land of opportunity for service overseas, and says: "Serve on the Rhine—NOW, in the A. E. F." The terms are particularized. The seal of the War Department is shown.

The same stre appears in the advertisement scheduled for the week of June 22. This plays up "good pay," "foreign service" and "free education."

The fourth advertisement, also to be run during the week of June 22, is a full page and gives "ten of the many reasons why the United States Army is your opportunity." This is lively copy.

The advertisements are fairly well prepared and should pull.

Sad Press Agenting

Rather pathetically, to those who stick by ethical standards in season and out, those promoting this Government advertising campaign could not resist the temptation to do a press agenting job along with it, assuming as usual that newspaper editors have to be stirred to action by the "publicity expert," and also that a dollar spent in space advertising means several additional dollars in value through free reading notices. Assuming, also, further, that this attractive advertising could not be depended upon to yield its natural result.

So, along with the advertising, goes one of those dismal "campaign bulletins," intended to show editors just what to print in news columns, cartoons, boxed statements and, oh, to be sure, editorial columns. The reading notices are laid out for numerical release. Elsie Janis among others is interviewed on "the Army as a Steady Job." Some of the recent public writings of Secretary of War Baker, obviously without his consent, are reproduced in near-signed statement style. Just had to do all of these things, even to the old familiar set of instructions as to the best way to treat a newspaper reporter to get space out of him.

Barring this pathetic little device for double or triple measure per line the campaign looks favorable, the only fellow seeming to tremble for its success being the "campaigner" who is telling editors just what to do to make the thing go. No one in the news business has really missed the importance of a nation-wide army recruiting campaign, city editors have it on their schedules for the month everywhere, advertising men know that there is a real responsibility behind this first big venture of the Government in space advertising, and editorial writers might reasonably be expected to be moved to discuss the matter, unless scared off by the canned editorials which are being sent out by the press agents, unmindful of the indignity of the operation.

For Goodness' Sake

This little "flier" in Government advertising in newspapers, to cost Uncle Sam $186,000, appears to be looked upon by some of the advertising men concerned as an experiment of rather fearful portent. That is, they are urging the newspapers to for-goodness-sake get behind and push no Government official may ever say that Uncle Sam didn't get his money's worth and so that future campaigns may flow.

The ordinary cost of recruiting a soldier for the U. S. Army, as regards advertising, has been between $18 and $19 per recruit. If the present campaign brings in only 10,000 or 12,000 men, on the ordinary army routine, Uncle Sam would not be out of pocket. But, as a matter of fact, efficient newspaper advertising, unaugmented by press agentry, may be expected to yield a result many times more economical than the poster and card methods of the past. If anyone has promoted the War Department the moon now is a good time to mention the fact that the moon is not within reach of even newspaper advertising.

It is true that the time set for the campaign is very short, and there is some wonder why this is so, there being no crucial reason apparent.

Newspaper advertising for this Government purpose will deliver as usual, if army officers at recruiting stations are on their toes to take advantage of the "business," and editorial men will see and print whatever news there is in it, also as usual.

It is not reasonable that the War Department or any Government official expects two dollars in value for one dollar spent.

Appleget Speaks to Soldiers

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., June 10.—That the war could not have been won without the assistance of the newspapers of the United States, was the declaration of Fred B. Appleget, newly appointed associate executive secretary of the Southern Department of the Army Y. M. C. A., in a recent address to the soldiers in Camp Travis.

NEWSPAPER SERVICE EARNS DIVIDENDS

Western Advertising Manager Tells How His Paper Cooperates with Local Merchants in Many Ways and Advises Copy Changes

PORTLAND, Ore., June 10.—In his address to the members of the Pacific Coast Advertising Managers' Association, G. W. Roche, advertising manager of the Spokane Chronicle, and connected with that newspaper continuously for twenty-four years, recounted the basic principles of newspaper service to advertisers and readers.

Mr. Roche contended that newspaper service should be rendered for three reasons, namely: Because it pays; for love of the work and from the standpoint of duty.

He believes that the department stores set the pace for newspaper service, through furnishing to their customers rest rooms, tea rooms, play rooms, checking rooms, nurseries, etc., all calculated to make shopping pleasant and convenient.

Fifteen years ago, he says, the Chronicle began furnishing its advertisers with full-page dummy sheets for lay outs, ruled off in single column spaces with samples of type sizes at the sides and tables showing how many letters it would take to make a single column line in a certain point of type, also how many of these lines would make an inch. Copy paper of suitable size for the linotype operators was furnished to advertisers, with the request that they write only the body of the ad on this paper, preserving the dummy sheet for the display scheme of the ad writer. The plan was a success from the start.

The Chronicle, he says, find that it pays to furnish advertisers with free cuts, as these add to the pulling power of the copy.

The advertising staff of this newspaper holds meetings every morning at half past seven to devise way and means for serving the trade better during the day. Here the advertising troubles of the merchants are threshed out and suggestions developed for helping them to get maximum results.

Mr. Roche regulates the position to be given to ads by the order in which copy is received—and, naturally, there is a keen competition between merchants to get in early copy. Often such copy is in hand early days in advance of the date of its insertion.

The merchants of Spokane co-operate with the newspaper men in support of the Better Business Bureau, working always to eliminate undesirable advertising. "Fly by night" advertisers are under the ban. All local papers refuse advertising mentioning trading stamps and also pot premiums under the ban. Local newspapers fight the mail-order houses, advocating the buying of home products. Free advance notices of amusements are cut down to the vanishing point.

"The same ad should never run twice," says Mr. Roche. "Advertising should be just as fresh and interesting as news matter. The people buy a paper just as much for the ads as for the news matter."

BENNETT REAL ESTATE BRINGS $1,786,900

472 Lots, Sold at Public Auction After Big Advertising Campaign, Average $3,770 Each—To Build Home for Newspapermen

Four hundred and seventy-two lots of the James Gordon Bennett estate, in the Washington Heights district of Manhattan, were sold at auction in New York on Tuesday, and realized a total of $1,786,900. The average price obtained was $3,770 per lot. The sale represented the most important auction of real estate in the history of the city, and continued for seven hours at the Vesey street auction room.

The property has been in possession of the Bennett family for a long period. It had been held as practically unimproved real estate in spite of the great boom in apartment house building in that section, serving as a barrier to the extension of the building movement above 181st street on the West Side of Manhattan.

The sale had been authorized by Rodman Wanamaker and the Guaranty Trust Company, executors of the Bennett will, in order that the provisions of the will might be carried into effect. It will be recalled that Mr. Bennett provided for the establishment and maintenance of a home for New York newspapermen, to be known as the James Gordon Bennett Home. The early realization of this plan is now possible. No announcement has been made as to the proposed location of the institution.

Joseph P. Day, the auctioneer, whose striking advertising campaign in advance of the sale attracted much favorable comment, announced that certain public-spirited citizens had raised sufficient money with which to make the initial payment required for the purchase of the site of Fort Washington, the scene of one of the battles of the American Revolution. It is proposed that a suitable memorial shall be erected on this site.

Services for E. P. Call

Many friends and newspaper associates attended a memorial service for Edward Payson Call Sunday morning in the New Church, New York City. Mr. Call, who died May 9 last at his home in Larchmont, N. Y., was a trustee of the New Church for twenty years. The Rev. Julian K. Smyth, the pastor, preached a sermon on "The Land of the Living," in which he referred to Mr. Call in affectionate terms.

WANTS PAPER CONTROL LIFTED AT ONCE

Canadian Stock Selling Corporation Wonders That "Government Should Continue Playing Into Hands of American Consumers"

OTTAWA, Ont., June 10.—An interesting commentary on the pulp and paper industry is provided by a recently issued circular of the Royal Securities Corporation, which is handling new issues by several producers of news print and other grades of paper.

The circular complains about the continuance of the Government order requiring paper manufacturers to sell their product at the price fixed by the Paper Commissioner, and expresses wonderment that the Canadian Government "continues to play into the hands of American consumers" by failing to cancel the orders at once. The circular insinuates that a few powerful Canadian newspapers influence the Government in such a way as to prevent the cancellation the corporation desires.

Charges Development Hindered

The circular goes on to set forth that: "Whatever may be the final action of the Government in the matter, certain it is that the policy of restriction is, and always has been, diametrically opposed to the economic interests of this country. There is no export industry in Canada which could be more rapidly and profitably developed, if allowed a natural market price, than that of the pulpwood and news print paper. Many pulpwood propositions which are not now attractive to manufacturers would become so under such conditions."

The exteet to which the industry has "suffered" as a resolt of price fixation is shown by a study of various tables, presenting a glad picture of the great development of the paper-making industry since the war began. To quote the circular itself, they "show more convincingly than mere words could do the expansion now well under way in the pulp and paper industries." One of these tables shows what happened during the first two years of the price regulatioo, which may be summarized as follows:

Expansion During War

Capital invested in the industry increased 39.9 per cent. in the two year period ended 1917; the value of total production increased 138.7 per cent.; the number of employees increased 50 per cent., and the salary and wage roll increased 94.5 per cent. There was an increase of three in the number of mills.

Official figures on the industry are not available for a later period, but export figures indicate that the increases shown above have since been pretty well maintained.

Newspapers of Canada use only about one-tenth of the paper produced by Canadian mills, nine-tenths being sold abroad—chiefly in the United States.

SUBMITS RATE CARD

Quincy Journal Declines to Run Government Advertising as News.

The Quincy (Ill.) Journal, in response to a request from the local Civil Service Commissioner for the publication of a Government advertisement as news matter, reminded the commissioner that the war is over, "and as the newspapers have been supporting the Government all along we feel that we are entitled to have pay for such advertising as is wanted. We should be pleased to insert the copy at our regular rate."

P. A. Speer, advertising manager of the Journal, is of the opinion that the publishers of the country, by declining to run Government advertising without pay, may bring to the officials at Washington a sense of the need of a paid advertising policy.

Pacific Papers Raise Prices on Sundays to 10 Cents

San Francisco and Los Angeles Publishers Find That Five-Cent Price Load Is Too Heavy

[BY TELEGRAPH TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER]

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., June 11.—Beginning June 15, the retail price of the Sunday Chronicle and Examiner, of this city, the Oakland Tribune, the Los Angeles Times and the Los Angeles Examiner will be raised to 10 cents a copy. In a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER today, the management of the Chronicle said:

"The increased cost of every material that enters into the production of a metropolitan newspaper finally has made it impossible to maintain the 5-cent price for big Sunday productions. Newspaper readers have become accustomed to a Sunday issue that surpasses even the 25-cent magazines in entertaining and instructive features.

"Publishers have continued to provide this service at a steadily increased loss. The actual cost of the white paper alone has been in excess of the price to the purchaser. The long rise that occurs in the productioo of newspapers might recede has not been realized. The load has become too heavy, and it is necessary to make this advance now to enable us to maintain quality and volume and reduce the publishing loss to a reasonable minimum.

"The papers want it distinctly understood that in making the price 10 cents for the Sunday paper there is no increase to the monthly subscription price for daily papers, which are now delivered to regular subscribers and which also include the large and expensive Sunday editions. This price of 10 cents a copy is only for single copies of Sunday papers bought from newsboys, or at the newstands, or Sunday editions alone delivered by carriers."

7 to 10 Cent Jump in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, June 11.—The Times and Examiner announce, beginning June 15, retail prices of Sunday editions will be raised from seven to 10 cents. The 10-cent retail price, however, has been in effect for some time past outside of Los Angeles and territory in radius of 30 miles of city. Monthly subscription price for delivery to homes on daily and Sunday will continue in Los Angeles at 85 cents a month. Sunday issues only, delivered by carriers, will be 40 cents a month. The Express does oot issue a Sunday paper.

Designs Advertising Trade Work

MILWAUKEE, June 10.—An insignia designed from a suggestion by A. B. Carrill, advertising manager of the Milwaukee Sentinel, has been adopted as the trademark of the Milwaukee Tire Dealers' Association. It will be used in a newspaper advertising campaign, which will be waged for the purpose of combatting misrepresentation, urging people to patronize certified dealers only.

Hapgood Arrives in Denmark

Norman Hapgood, new American minister to Denmark, arrived in Copenhagen, June 7, to take up his official duties. He was cordially received by the Danish press.

CONCEALED HIS IGNORANCE UNTIL HE MADE GOOD—NOW AD MANAGER

W. N. Bayless was oot always advertising manager of the Conklin Pen Manufacturing Company of Toledo, O., although he has been for ten years past —long enough to grow into the labrie of the institotion. It wasn't so very long ago, as time is estimated, nowadays, that he was clerk for a railway supply house in St. Louis and referred to his salary—or rather, wages—he then received, as a "weekly insult."

"I was kicked into the advertising business by fate," he coofides. "By that, I don't mean that I was dragged into the halter with my front feet stuck out the way cattle had to be. I merely answered a 'want ad' for a man to assist the president of the American Bed Company in St. Louis and found I was expected to take charge of a recently organized advertising department.

"I was so green that when the president asked me to have a zinc etching made of a line drawing, I didn't know what a zinc etching was. But I didn't let him know that. I asked someone who knew and had the etching made."

Later, Mr. Bayless went into the printing business, learned to "stick" type and run a press, and then to sell printing as a city salesman. He next went with the old advertising agency of Brownell & Humphrey, Detroit, then with another Detroit agency, the O. J. Mulford Company, and finally with the Conklin Pen Manufacturing Company, as assistant advertising manager.

A year later he succeeded to the position of advertising manager.

New Dress for Weekly

MONTREAL, June 10.—Beginning this month the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal, Que., is appearing just half of the old size, while the number of pages has been doubled. This change will give this Canadian weekly somewhat of a magazine appearance, and is calculated to permit of a more attractive treatment than was possible in the newspaper form.

Appealing to Chinese Business Men

The New York Evening Mail is sending to owners of Chinese restaurants a circular printed in Chinese, in connection with the development of the special page of advertising which that paper carries of Chinese eating places. It is an unusual advertising stunt.

BONUS PLAN SUCCEEDS IN NEW ORLEANS

The Item Provides Automatic Increase of Earnings Monthly for Members of Display Department Who Show Gains in Business Secured

The New Orleans Item inaugurated, about three months ago, the bonus plan in connection with the development of local display advertising. A. G. Newmyer, associate publisher, reports that it is working out finely. He gives credit to Walter Bryan, of the Atlanta Georgian, for the inception of the plan as now in use on the Item.

Each month bonuses are paid to members of the display advertising staff under the following conditions:

The Item pays into a central fund the sum of $50 for every 1,000 inches gained in local display. As more than 50 per cent of the local display business is created by the management, together with the copy staff, 40 per cent of the central fund is distributed to the executive department, including the local advertising manager, foreign advertising manager, copy department and promotion department. Sixty per ceot is divided among the sales organization of the display department, each solicitor filing a daily statement of the number of inches of business he had in the paper of the day previous to the report. The daily report is displayed on a blackboard. At the end of the month the volume of gain is computed and the amounts of bonus to each are determined.

It is the aim of the management to thus automatically increase the remuneration of those earning it.

William H. Henry Dead

William Hamilton Henry, 73 years old, one-time superintendent and business manager of The New York Herald, having arrived at that position after 25 years' service, died Tuesday night at his home in the Bronx. Mr. Henry entered the newspaper business in the advertising department when a young man, and served under James Gordon Bennett and of James Gordon Bennett until about thirty years ago, when he became connected with the World, later taking up work on the Rider and Driver. He soon left these publications and entered the mining business in New Mexico. The last few years he had been in retirement in New York owing to his advanced years. He was a member of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Milwaukee Staff Changes

MILWAUKEE, June 10.—Robert Knoff, head of the Journal's copy desk, has taken the state desk, and F. R. Green, make-up editor, has succeeded him. Joseph Dorney, who had been on the copy desk of the Wisconsin-News, is now on the Journal copy desk. William G. Schroeder has received his discharge from the Army, and has returned to the reportorial staff of the Journal. J. Lynn Fredenburg, who has been a reporter for the Wisconsin-News, has gone into the advertising and publicity business as an associate of J. E. Moriarity, former newspaperman.

G. W. Ford Starts Agency

ATLANTA, Ga., June 7.—The George W. Ford Company has been organized here, to conduct an advertising agency business, by George W. Ford, A. M. Ford and J. Williams. Mr. Ford was at one time with the Jefferson Thomas Advertising Agency, Jacksonville.

A·N·A NEWS AND VIEWS

A WEEKLY FEATURE COMPILED AND EDITED BY JOHN SULLIVAN

SECRETARY-TREASURER OF THE ASSOCIATION OF NATIONAL ADVERTISERS

U. S. ARMY PAYS FOR ADVERTISING

Part Played by A. N. A. in Bringing Change of Policy

It was the Association of National Advertisers that took the first step to bring the Division of Advertising of the United States Committee on Public Information into being. The immediate reason for the step was to come to the aid of government departments as all good men and true must do in cases of national emergency.

The United States was at war and the purposes of its entry into the war, as well as information about the activities of the various sections of the administration, had to be made known to the American public.

Although it was an objectionable thing for the A. N. A. to do, owing to its uneconomic character, the association asked for and obtained hundreds of thousands of dollars of advertising space from its members for the use of the government gratis.

A subsidiary reason for the step taken was a hope that a demonstration on a large scale of what advertising would do in public affairs would teach the political, administrative and official mind that the government of a democratic government is very difficult to run without information being conveyed to the people, not merely in the form of press notices, but paid advertising.

As has been said on this page before, an uninformed democracy is not a democracy at all.

There was also the hope that the political mind would learn so much about this economic factor in the conduct of the national life and of commerce that it would cease its attacks on this form of business, the immediate form of the attacks being in taxing the means by which business was promoted.

The A. N. A. builded even better than it knew. Government departments almost literally began to shout for advertising service and opportunity, and the signing of the armistice did not bring a cessation to the shouting.

The A. N. A. office has been simply bombarded since November last by requests for more free advertising space and for what is generally and usually called co-operation.

Now, in the determination of the United States Army, through its Recruiting Publicity Bureau, real money is to be spent in the recruiting of men for the army. Large space is being used in all the newspapers in 37 cities in recruiting territories, and the A. N. A. is doing all it can to give the Recruiting Publicity Bureau real co-operation. After fathering the Division of Advertising, the association can scarcely refuse to interest itself in the welfare of the first legitimate child, the paid advertising campaign of the United States Army.

It like to think, even if I run the danger of being accused of self-conceit, that it is probable that if the A. N. A. had not taken the initial step to bring about the appointment of the Division of Advertising, the United States Army would not now be paying a large sum of money for advertising a recruiting campaign, and the newspapers would not have the satisfaction that, of course, they all feel—outside, of course, the 57 cities in which the advertising will be carried on.

"PENNY WISE—POUND FOOLISH"

THIS is an English saying that is universally true, and the A. N. A. from time to time runs across illustrations of the saying.

Stories could be told that would make men wonder why any big company should decline to take membership in the association and lose, as a result, the large sums of money they do.

Here is one of these stories: some time ago a form of the collective idea in the merchandising of goods came to light in a corporation which conceived a plan on the basis of which a considerable number of national advertisers would be able to advertise their goods collectively instead of individually.

The cost to each advertiser was to be $5,000. The proposition was fundamentally unsound.

The Creator made men in units, not in masses, and they will have to work in units until the end of time, only co-operating in matters that admit of collective action and do not destroy individual initiative and enterprise.

The A. N. A. office was quickly informed of the proposition, and a number of inquiries about it from the members were received. The report that was made prevented about 20 concerns from making contracts. In other words, 20 concerns saved $100,000.

There was one concern, however, which, apparently, has never thought that an A. N. A. membership could be profitable. The aforesaid proposition "blew up" as was inevitable. This concern had made a contract with it, and it lost its $5,000. No firm that had an A. N. A. membership suffered loss.

QUESTIONS FOR PUBLISHERS

FOR some time the A. N. A. office has had in preparation a list of questions to be sent to newspaper publishers. There has been consultation with representative newspaper men and the questions are just about in their final form as follows:

Have you a Service Department?

What is your Service Department prepared to do?

What is the approximate number of wage earners or salaried employees in your city or town?

What is their average salary per day, or week?

What was the total of paid lineage advertising your publication carried in 1918 and 1917?

Total local advertising?

Total foreign advertising?

How many lines of classified advertising did your publication carry during the year?

What is the approximate number of motor cars and trucks in your city?

Cars.....Trucks.....

Give number of the following classes of stores:

Drug	Barbers
Grocery	Men's clothing
Hardware	Automobile and sup-
Jewelry	plies
Shoe	Confectionery
Dry Goods	Garages
Stationers	Photographers

Net paid daily average circulation compiled for the months of the year.

Can you furnish analysis covering merchandising possibilities of your locality along specific lines, if requested?

What is the present population of your city?

Give approximate number of families in your city?

What proportion of the population is foreign born, and which nationalities predominate in that proportion?

Give the total number of population owning their own homes in your city?

What are the prospects of future building activity?

What is the value of the total output of your city's manufactured products?

Give names of the principal industries.

Number of employees in each industry.

How many savings banks in your city?

How many state banks?

What is the average savings bank account per capita in your city?

In the course of the next week the questions will be printed and issued to newspapers all over the country, and if any publisher has anything to suggest as to the form of any question, as to amendments or additions, the A. N. A. office would be glad to hear from him promptly.

A. N. A. PHILADELPHIA CHAPTER

A MEETING of this chapter was held on Tuesday, June 3. Thirty-two members and visitors were present. W. E. Blodgett, advertising manager of the Autocar Company, was appointed on the executive committee of the chapter as successor to Mr. Whittemore, who has recently resigned from this company.

There was a discussion of various phases of the recent semi-annual meeting of the A. N. A. at Cleveland, Messrs. Lord, Dawson, Truslow, Blodgett, Rutter, Atkinson and Bowman all of whom were present at the convention, speaking on various features.

Meetings of the chapter will not be held during the summer. The next meeting will be on the first Tuesday in October.

THE officers of the Detroit Chapter of the A. N. A. are W. H. Marsh, of the Burroughs Adding Machine Co., president; F. N. Sim, of Timken-Detroit Axle Company, secretary.

In Pittsburgh, the chapter officers are F. S. Montgomery, of the National Metal Molding Company, president; W. L. Schaeffer, of the National Tube Company, secretary.

WILSON & CO., Chicago, have appointed James A. Robertson to serve as the accredited representative in the A. N. A.

Laundry Men at Last See Peril of Washing Machines

Turning to Advertising in Effort to Get Housewives to Continue Patronizing Their Establishments

ST. LOUIS, June 9.—Advertising to combat the efforts being made by the manufacturers of electrical appliances for washing in the homes was urged by several speakers at the annual convention of the Missouri Laundry Owners Association.

W. E. Fitch, La Salle, Ill., manager of the National Laundry Owners Association, pointed out that the American Laundry Machinery Company will place a national advertisement shortly urging the housewife to send her clothes to the laundry and he recommended that laundry owners follow this up with strong and liberal advertising in their local newspapers.

Hollis E. Suits, St. Louis, secretary of the Missouri Association, also urged the members of his organization, to use liberal space.

I. P. Goldrick, of the Grand Laundry, St. Louis, who has had considerable success in newspaper advertising, declared that constant, consistent newspaper advertising would prove the greatest factor in combatting the washing-machine competition.

HUGH ASHCE HAS RESIGNED FROM THE Kansas City Journal copy desk to become editor of Okmulgee Times.

WARRING ON FAKE STOCKS

N. Y. District Attorney Warns Newspapers Against Fraudulent Advertising

District Attorney Swann of New York has expressed himself as "very much pleased" with the action of city newspapers that have refused to accept advertisements of uncertified oil companies. In a statement just issued he says: "It is the duty of a newspaper to make an investigation of the companies whose stocks it advertises.

"The advertisement of these fake companies may be detected by any intelligent person, and there is no excuse for a reputable newspaper to publish any of them. The papers are very fond of suggesting to their readers that whatever they see in their prints is so, and many unthinking readers cannot differentiate between the various columns of a newspaper."

Bakers Favor Advertising

ST. LOUIS, June 9.—The Trans-Mississippi Master Bakers Association, in session here last week, adopted resolutions expressing the belief that a great good would be accomplished and "splendid results obtained from well-planned and well-executed campaigns of advertising in national advertising mediums to increase the consumption of bakers' bread." G. L. Jordan of Topeka, Kansas, is president.

The Pensacola Journal issued a 72-page edition to celebrate its 20th anniversary.

Over 61%

The pronounced trend of advertising toward the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT can be seen at a glance by contrasting the above gain figures with those of the other St. Louis daily-and-Sunday newspapers, which are as follows:

TOTAL PAID ADVERTISING

Republic Gained 86,472 Lines—Percentage Gain, 27%

NOTE that the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT'S percentage gain—61%—almost equals the COMBINED percentage gains of the Post-Dispatch and Republic.

Another Very Interesting Comparison Is This of the Gains Made in Paid Display Advertising by the Two Leading Papers:

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT Gained 358,167 Lines—Percentage Gain, 86%
Post-Dispatch Gained 347,973 Lines—Percentage Gain, 47%
Note that the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT Gained 10,194 Lines MORE in Paid Display than the Post-Dispatch

Total Paid Advertising in the Daily Editions of the Five St. Louis Newspapers—Sunday Excluded

The following figures are presented to show a complete comparative record for the entire St. Louis field, as two papers, Times and Star, have no Sunday edition.

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT Carried 681,261 Lines—A Gain of 268,680 Lines—A Percentage Gain of 65%
Post-Dispatch Carried 886,359 Lines—A Gain of 241,926 Lines—A Percentage Gain of 37%
Republic Carried 281,952 Lines—A Gain of 76,932 Lines—A Percentage Gain of 37%
Star Carried 500,865 Lines—A Gain of 59,235 Lines—A Percentage Gain of 13%
Times Carried 357,978 Lines—A Gain of 39,945 Lines—A Percentage Gain of 12%

NOTE that the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT gained 28,754 lines MORE than the Post-Dispatch. Also note that the percentage gain of the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT exceeds the COMBINED percentage gains of ALL THREE afternoon papers—Post-Dispatch, Star and Times.

The Trend of Advertising, So Plainly Shown by the Above Gain Figures, Is Due to the Fact That Most People in St. Louis and Its Great Trade Territory "Shop First" in the

ZONE THEIR PRICES TO MEET P. O. COSTS

List of Newspapers That Have Established New Schedule of Charges, as Compiled by the Publishers' Advisory Board

Charles Johnson Post, director of the Publishers' Advisory Board, 200 Fifth avenue, New York, and leader of the fight against the postal zone system in the interest of the magazine and periodical press, this week addressed the following statement to publishers:

Increased Subscription

"The following is the partial list, to date, of large daily papers that have changed their subscription rates to conform to the penalty postage of the postal zone law.

"It will be noted that some newspapers have raised the rates outside of their own state or adjoining states.

"Others have raised their rates outside of the first and second zones, or by averaging up the penalty zones in two general divisions, with the penalty postage applied to the more remote zones.

"Other newspapers have divided the country into three zones, with two penalty postage charges.

"Still others have divided the country into four zones, with three penalty postage charges.

"Some of the papers have gone further and arranged for an increased penalty postage to their readers in each of the eight zones—although this latter class is comparatively small, owing to the very great complications in accounting.

"As will be noted, the majority of these publications have divided the country into two zones and applied the penalty postage, computed on an average, to the more remote zones, as the simplest way of complying with the postage penalties of the postal zone law.

"If your publication is going or has gone on a zone basis, and if your name is not in this list, please send such information at once to the above address."

Mr. Post then gives the following as a partial list:

Issues 40-Page "Kiwanis Edition"

TRENTON, N. J., June 11.—The Trenton Times this week issued a "Kiwanis Edition" of 40 pages, 24 pages being devoted exclusively to the anniversary of the formation of the Kiwanis Club. This section embraced 36,904 lines of Kiwanis Times advertising, and represented 100 per cent membership of the club in the Kiwanis advertising columns. One hundred and seven display advertisements appeared. The whole edition has been favorably commented upon, indicating recognition of advertising by one of Trenton's most wide-awake clubs and the success of the Times in getting out so large an edition as a part of its regular work.

"Now to get down to the methods by which Liberty Loans have been advertised: I am sure I will offend no advocate of other forms of publicity when I say that the advertising achieved through newspapers and periodicals has been our main reliance. No other single campaign in the history of the world made such an elaborate use of Newspaper Space as the Fourth Liberty Loan."

—Quoted from a speech by Frank R. Wilson, Director of Publicity for the War Loan Organization, Treasury Department, Washington.

The Fourth Liberty Loan was the greatest popular subscription of any kind in all history, reaching within three weeks just eleven million dollars short of $7,000,000,000, bought by more than 22,000,000 persons!

Newspapers form one of the most imposing forces in all the world. Newspapers present over all competitive forms of advertising the greatest force.

This tremendous sales influence should be used by you for your merchandise.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Challenge to Other Towns

Anderson, South Carolina.

Editor & Publisher:

We have noticed a great deal in your publication in reference to the mail service and the experience of the different newspapers over the country, and will say that while this newspaper has not been asked to tell of small collections here, we volunteer this information, and will put it against any other town of its size in the country.

This is a town of nearly 20,000 people, with three railroads, running quite a number of trains each, but there is no train at any of these roads carrying our papers that even has a mail clerk. We have to make up a package in the office where we send papers, even if it is only one or two, and of course have had a great deal of business on this account.

This condition has existed for some two years, and this newspaper, together with some other business men of this and other surrounding towns, has tried time and again to get mail clerks on trains, without result. We have even offered to pay the salary of mail clerks, if the post office department will not do it, but that is refused. If any other town can show as poor a mail service as this we would like to know it.

Publisher Anderson Daily Mail.

Church Advertising Copy

We carry two pages of church ads and news every Saturday. We believe in frequency in advertising, rather than size.

A Union Publicity Campaign, run every day of the year, would tremendously augment and intensify the weekly advertising. We carried such a Union Campaign for several months, but it consisted of a half page, once a week. Our difficulty is:

Where can we get 365 church advertisements that will be, one and all, real advertisements?

Do you think a series of 50 or 60, repeated at intervals of two months through the year, would serve as well?

How would you suggest that we obtain the copy? From the local ministers?

Would the smaller ones feel slighted if not called upon?

You know, some most excellent ministers would be very poor copy writers.

Specimen of Bad Business

Editor & Publisher:

Here is a reason why advertising does not pull:

On March 18, 1919, a lady in a middle western state received a very beautiful catalog of spring dresses from a prominent New York retail house, with a check for prompt service was enclosed, features:

On March 19th she ordered two dresses, a petticoat and a pair of bloomers. On March 20th she received a letter from the credit department of the order, giving the mail order No. 24154. In her letter she gave the prices, sizes, having account of a breach of this New York store. About April 10th the petticoat and bloomers were received, but nothing was heard from the dresses. A letter, about April 15th, was sent to the store. On May 1st another letter was written, asking why the dresses had not been sent for, and that the date for the two items which were sent on May 5th was received in consequence of the postage, but no bill for the items sent, and the message about the dresses. On May 10th the same day, again giving the number of the order, and on May 12th she received a letter following letter:

New York City, May 30, 1919.

"Replying to your letter of May 10th we would say that the dresses were not forwarded at the time when the rest of the merchandise was shipped for the reason that the garments were not in stock.

"We are now in a position to fill your order for these dresses and we are sending them forward to you without delay. We trust that you will realize you promptly and be found entirely satisfactory.

"Regretting that there should be any delay and assuring you that it is our wish to serve you as promptly and as satisfactorily as possible, we are ——"

The dresses have not been received to date. Is it any wonder that some people claim advertising does not pay?

I enclose letter which came to me this morning circular from U. S. Labor Department asking for statistics on Government war advertising.

Don't why we should spend $50 to $75 worth of our accountant's time in going through our files for four years in order to furnish this information to any one.

Newspapers of the country have been most liberal in the use of their space for the government during the last four years. Why should they now wait additional contributing for the purpose of booking a gift horse in the mouth?

"EVERYTHING"

THE WORCESTER TELEGRAM has everything that the National Advertiser needs. It is the

KEYSTONE of his structure of Marketing Success in Worcester and Worcester County

Alertness!

A characteristic of THE TELEGRAM. Myron Townsend, nationally famous as a Sport Writer for Metropolitan Newspapers, is busy in Worcester selling SPORTS to the people through his column. His propaganda has enthused everyone. Baseball, Tennis, Golf—were never more popular. Higher personal efficiency, health, happiness, are the cornerstones of The Worcester Telegram's campaign to popularize athletic sports. Municipal athletics are being urged to provide pleasurable as well as healthful activities for all the people. The one great lesson of the war is that Americanus of the future must lead the strenuous life. This is the basic reason why the Telegram is publishing the facts about the supreme importance of sports, so that every citizen may have a wider vision about the value of the sporting life to America as a nation. To Massachusetts as a state and to Worcester as city and county. To drive this opportunity first indicates the Telegram's alertness Enterprise!

One of the unique and original features of the Worcester and county athleticization plan is the erection of playgrounds. No other city has held a big athletic council and consistently has invited speakers of the standing and stature of Walter Camp and Major Frank R. Cavanaugh to address the people on sports. Classes of instruction on theory and practice in all sports is another absolutely original idea and will be first put in force in Worcester. This is a tip to manufacturers and distributors of Sport goods and Sport clothes to cover Worcester County thru the Telegram at the psychological moment—NOW.

MOST Carrier Delivered Circulation
in the City of Worcester!

Carrier Delivered circulation means result producing circulation. Less than 10% of The Telegram's City circulation is sold on the street.

MOST
Circulation in Worcester County

The Telegram has more Circulation in the three cities and fifty-seven towns of Worcester County, which includes the suburban territory (as defined by the ABC), than both the other Worcester Newspapers combined. Most these towns are not more than an hour away by interurban trolley.

The Telegram's strength is proved daily. In a Coupon Test recently conducted, fifty-one stores participated using 1-inch 1-column ads all uniformly displayed and all made up into a two-page spread. No individual firm had more than two coupons, some had only one. Everything was advertised from Pianos to Potato peelers. In spite of the fact that the thermometer registered 101 in the shade and that the Largest Department Store in the city opened their Semi-Annual Clearance Sale on the same day, the results were satisfying to forty-four out of the fifty-one stores participating. You Can Cover the Rich and Responsive South Only Through the Newspapers Its People Read

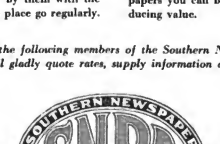
THE people of the South today have a greater buying power than at any previous time.

They believe in enjoying life while there is opportunity and are especially responsive to the appeal of goods which make them happier and healthier.

Southern people also are disposed to buy advertised articles that are brought to their attention in a convincing way, through mediums in which they have confidence.

The newspapers of the South offer by all means the most efficient means of reaching the great buying public of the South and this field can be covered only through them.



Secure the circulation figures of all the leading weekly and monthly magazines in any typical Southern town and compare the total number of homes reached by them with the number into which the newspapers of the place go regularly.

Then figure the cost of having your advertisement taken into the smaller number of homes in which one or more of the magazines are read with the outlay required to place the message it carries in the larger number entered by the newspapers.

In this way you will get a convincing and illuminating demonstration of two things—first, that to reach all the people of the South you must use its newspapers, and, second, that through them the whole South can be covered at smaller cost than is required to advertise to the portion of its people who read the magazines.

Nearly all the enterprising newspapers of the South have been rapidly increasing their circulations since war restriction were removed. Advertising rates have been advanced to correspond in but few cases. Now is a good time to start your campaign in the Southern States, since through the newspapers you can buy space for less than its real, result producing value.

Any or all of the following members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association will gladly quote rates, supply information and give co-operation.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World hold their next Convention in the South, at New Orleans.

All Records Of The Birm
With 1,139,278 Lin
And The News, As Usual, Had

Total Advertising For May

Here, expressed in lines, are the actual figures on the total advertising printed by the three Birmingham newspapers in May, compared with the same month last year:

	The News	Age-Herald	The Ledger
May, 1919	1,139,278	645,050	523,376
May, 1918	720,622	419,566	402,178
Gain	418,656	225,484	121,198

It will be noted that The News printed approximately as much total advertising as the other two newspapers combined and that The News' gain was 71,974 lines in excess of the combined gains of the other two newspapers.

Without a break for the five months of 1919, as for practically the entire twelve of 1918, The News has each month surpassed its advertising record of the month before, and has shown tremendous gains over the corresponding month of 1918. The News' total gains for the five months of this year are more than double its total gains for the entire twelve months of 1918. In this procession of advertising achievement, The News has repeatedly led all newspapers in the South and has taken high rank in the nation.

Local Advertising For May

Here, expressed in lines, are the actual figures on the local advertising printed by the three Birmingham newspapers in May, compared with the same month of last year:

	The News	Age-Herald	The Ledger
May, 1919	728,882	382,508	355,026
May, 1918	480,438	263,956	262,836
Gain	248,444	118,552	92,190

It will be noted that The News printed within 8,652 lines of as much local advertising as the other two newspapers combined, and that The News' gain was 37,702 lines in excess of the combined gains of the other two newspapers.

Advertisers Can Dominate Birmingham—At ONE COST—By Concentrating In The News

Topping the four successive record-bre every previous advertising mark in the histo lines, and became the third successive month News' gain over May of last year was 418,6

All three Birmingham newspapers pile renewed proof of the undiminished prosper published, but The News maintained its us and in every class of advertising.

National Advertising For May

Here, expressed in lines, are the actual figures on the national advertising printed by the three Birmingham newspapers in May, compared with the same month of last year:

	The News	Age-Herald	The Ledger
May, 1919	299,418	180,642	110,670
May, 1918	169,834	96,950	96,894
Gain	129,584	83,692	13,776

It will be noted that The News printed 8,106 lines more national advertising than the other two newspapers combined, and that The News' gain was 32,116 lines in excess of the combined gains of the other two newspapers.

For more than a year The News has ranked high up among the leading newspapers of America in total advertising and in gains scored. For instance, in April, according to the statistical department of The New York Evening Post, it stood third among American newspapers in point of advertising gains for that month, only The Chicago Tribune and Detroit News exceeding it, and was eighteenth in point of total volume of business carried. Such records emphasize the prosperity of Birmingham and the confidence of advertisers in The News.

Classified Advertising For May

Here are the actual figures on the total number of separate and distinct classified advertisements printed in the three Birmingham newspapers in May, compared with the same month of last year:

	The News	Age-Herald	The Ledger
May, 1919	15,504	7,111	4,174
May, 1918	7,456	5,675	3,447
Gain	8,048	1,436	727

It will be noted The News printed 4,219 more separate and distinct classified advertisements than both of the other two newspapers combined, and that The News' gain was nearly four times the combined gains of the other two newspapers.

FREE EDUCATION FOR STATE'S SOLDIERS

Senator Kaplan, of New York, Author of Bill Providing Special Scholarships for Former Soldiers at State Expense.

State Senator Abram Kaplan, of New York, introduced early in January of this year a bill providing for free scholarships in the colleges and universities of the State for returning soldiers or sailors who were residents of New York State prior to entering the war.

The bill also provided for free preliminary education with special classes created for the benefit of returning soldiers, sailors, marines or nurses, and for a sum to be paid to each successful applicant for such scholarships to assist in maintenance, purchase of text books and other necessary expenses during the period of education.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Education, where it was thoroughly discussed with the Commissioner of Education. The committee reported it to the Senate favorably, with amendments. The most important amendment limited the number of scholarships to 10 from each Assembly District each year. The Senate Finance Committee then reported the bill favorably, but reduced the number of scholarships to three for each district per year. The bill as finally reported carried an appropriation to provide for the scholarships in question.

Senator Kaplan had been impressed with the economic necessity of such a measure, owing to the fact that so great a number of women had been attracted to the usual vocations of men during the war period, presenting an industrial problem of no small moment. The returning soldiers, in many instances, felt that they did not desire to return to old ruts, yet realized their need of special education and training for bigger things.

The Government, through its convalescent station at Lakewood, has provided for just such training for wounded men; but this training does not extend beyond the period of convalescence. Senator Kaplan conceived it to be the State's duty to its returning fighters and nurses to afford to them, without hardship, such education in special lines as would enhance their usefulness to the community.

It is his hope that next year the bill may be amended to increase the number of such scholarships materially, until every returning soldier has had an opportunity to obtain for himself an education, either classic or professional, at the expense of the State of New York.

Stockholders Form Saguenay Company and Authorize Bond Issue

MONTREAL, June 10.—At a special meeting of the North American Pulp & Paper Company, the shareholders approved the organization of a working company to be called the Saguenay Pulp & Power Company. They also authorized the new company to make an issue of $5,500,000 of 6 per cent. bonds to purchase the bonds of the North American Paper Company, Chicoutimi Pulp Company and the Saguenay Power & Light Company's bonds as well as completed other financial matters associated with the Chicoutimi interests.

New directors were elected representing Montreal, New York and Buffalo interests. From New York R. F. Hammond, of Craig-Becker Company, and Lewis Chable, vice-president of the American Paper Exports Company were elected directors, and J. T. Steele of Buffalo. The new company will make a bond issue which will be offered for public subscription within the next few days.

The Master Key to the Greatest Market Unit in America!

According to the Census reports of 1910 there were 2,046,845 FAMILIES in the state of NEW YORK. The total population at that time was less than ten million.

The total circulation of the NEW YORK STATE NEWSPAPERS listed below is 6,112,920. These newspapers, therefore, circulate about three copies for every family in the State!

It will be noted that the great bulk of the circulations listed on this page are metropolitan circulations. The census figures show that, in 1910, 7,185,494 people of New York State LIVE IN CITIES; 1,928,120 live in the country.

Practically every farmer or country dweller in the State reads a city newspaper. The R. F. D. system brings to the farm folks their big or little city daily, upon which they depend for their information as to the news of the world and the prices to be obtained for their products and the prices to be paid for the things they require.

So that the dominant newspapers here listed REACH A VERY GREAT MAJORITY OF THE HOMES OF THE STATE EVERY DAY.

They afford the MASTER KEY to the GREATEST MARKET UNIT in America.

And the line rate for these combined newspapers—$9.55 on a 2,500-line order—spells the very moderate advertising expense involved in appealing to a group of more than six million buyers, in more than two million homes!

TRIBUNE RELEASES ALLIES' PEACE TERMS

up in New York on the transport Von Steuben, with a copy of the treaty, which he carried through to Chicago, arriving there last Saturday.

The Tribune might have published the document in its Sunday edition, but it was decided first to submit it to the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate.

This was done and its acceptance was taken by the Tribune and the New York Times as a signal for release, and on Monday morning about one-third of the document, or about 25,000 words, appeared in those newspapers.

On Monday a turbulent debate of nearly five hours' duration occurred in the Senate, and finally Senator Borah succeeded, by a vote of 47 to 23, in getting through a resolution to have the 80,000-word document spread upon the pages of the Congressional Record. This released the treaty for general publication in the United States, and there was a mighty scramble to get it to the wires.

In introducing the matter Senator Borah said:

Borah Credits Hunt

"I have in my possession this morning a copy of the treaty which I am going to ask permission of the Senate to print as a Senate document. I am permitted to make this treaty public by the consent of those who gave it to me. This particular copy which I am offering this morning was brought to this country by Frazier Hunt of the Chicago Tribune. It was taken to the Chicago Tribune office last week and retained there for some time, just how long I do not know, but the Tribune said for patriotic reasons that it ought not, upon its own initiative and without having first presented this treaty to the officials in Washington, print it, and so it withheld the printing of the treaty."

However, while Senator Borah was speaking, about one-third of the document had been printed in the morning edition of the Tribune under its own copyright and also in the New York Times, which had printed the section under Tribune copyright.

Senator Borah said that he had no reason to believe that the Tribune copy was not genuine.

Senator Johnson said that in view of the publication of a section of the treaty in Chicago and New York and evidence that it would be completed in subsequent issues, nothing was to be gained by withholding publication in the Record.

Senator Hitchcock vigorously opposed it in the interest of the President who, he said, was under pledge to the plenipotentiaries of the Allies to withhold the document until it was complete, and he alleged that an effort was being made to embarrass the President, and that the effect would be to aid the Germans.

Nine Democrats voted with the Republicans to print the document, while one Republican voted with the Democrats to suppress it.

One of the interesting features of the document as it finally appeared was that it was entered into by Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, "acting in his own name and by his own proper authority," whereas all other rulers were represented.

Too Much for Wires

Owing to the immensity of the document as it appeared in the Congressional Record proofs, the press associations could not carry it, and like most of the special representatives at Washington sent stories covering the chief points. However, it was franked to all press association clients on Tuesday.

The New York Times succeeded in publishing the full text on Tuesday morning. The Times announced that the report was transmitted to its office from Washington on twenty wires. It consumed 25 columns of space and was played to lead the second section of the Times, on this occasion a 40-page newspaper.

The Tribune did not publish the full text on Monday because, as Perley H. Boone, the city editor said, the sections left unpublished by the Tribune did not contain matters of surprising public interest.

Mr. Hunt, to whom credit is given for the scoop, was formerly of the staff of the New York Sun. He went to Europe for the Red Cross, and while there was engaged by the Tribune to replace Mr. Gibbons.

The treaties which have been printed and distributed in Germany are not complete copies and they contain a number of apparent misinterpretations, according to Mr. Hunt.

The copy which he brought with him was an official text with all maps and statistical data complete, he said.

He was doubtful of the reports that copies of the treaty could be bought on the streets of foreign cities.

Printed in Paris

It was true, he said, that there were copies being vended which purported to be the text, but so far as he knew none of them was complete.

He obtained the copy in a perfectly proper way, he said, but was bound in confidence not to reveal the source.

Newspaper dispatches from Paris say that the Bon Soir, a daily newspaper, printed the official text of the treaty and placed it in the hands of the members of the French Chamb of Deputies.

Mr. Hunt in a short introduction the "copy of the treaty published su that "by and large" the summary of t treaty as previously published su stantially carried the important poin of the full treaty.

Only in a few places, he contende were there omissions which "seem have been made deliberately." Perhaps the most serious of these was the ea of the Sarre Valley in regard to t ownership of the mines.

N. Y. Sun Copy Held Up

He added that a second instance which a serious indictment can brought against the official summa refers to the international labor o ganization which is formed under th general authority of the League of N tions.

The action of the British censor in r fusing to pass a copy of the Pea Treaty mailed by the London corr spondent of the New York Sun will, is announced in the Sun, be brought the attention of the Foreign Relation Committee.

The Concordia (Kan.) Blade, recen ly consolidated with Kansan, will l known hereafter as the Blade-Empire, order to preserve the name of old Co cordia Empire, founded 50 years ago.

Again in May—as in previous months—The St. Louis Star published more local display advertising of given classifications than TWO and sometimes THREE of its daily contemporaries COMBINED.

For thirty-four consecutive months the Star has published more local display advertising weeks days than the Globe-Democrat, the Times or the Republic.

The Star's gain in national advertising for the first five months of 1919 averages more than 96%, which is greater than that of any other St. Louis daily newspaper.

Whence Comes the Power?

FORMER President William Howard Taft in explaining, recently, why an immense army may not be required by the League of Nations to keep order, said: "Have you ever noticed over at the corner of Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue, that during a rush hour when there is a long line of cars, many of them driven by men headstrong and not averse to speeding, a single policeman is able to do a remarkable thing? He isn't as big as I am, but when he raises his hand that whole, long, impatient line of automobilists instantly comes to a stop. Why? Well it's not because they are afraid of the policeman, but because behind that policeman stands the entire force of the City and State of New York."

Occasionally, we are asked whence comes the power to make effective our National Vigilance Committe and local Better Business Bureaus as they patrol the avenues of advertising. It is not because they have any special power or desire to prosecute and punish offenders. Their function is corrective and constructive. The force behind all of our work comes from the fact that the great reading public is insisting upon having the Truth about the goods and the service they buy. Enlightened public opinion and the nineteen departments of organized advertising listed below, composing our National Advertising Commission, unite to give force to our work.

To Extend Scope of Texas Advertising Clubs

Associated Organization Will Strive for Pure Ad Law in State—Elects Lowry Martin

DALLAS, Texas, June 10.—Extension of the scope of the Associated Advertising Clubs of Texas by reorganizing the clubs that had become inactive during the war and by creating new clubs was decided on at the annual convention in Dallas. A determined fight for the enactment of a pure advertising law in Texas was also outlined, and ample finances for this campaign were said to be assured under the plans adopted.

Officers were elected as follows:

Lowry Martin, Corsicana, president; J. Howard Payne, Dallas, first vice president; Dr. Spurgeon Bell of the business administration department of the University of Texas, second vice president; H. H. Levy, Galveston, third vice president; Scott White, El Paso, fourth vice president; C. N. Olsen, Corsicana, secretary.

The new directorate consists of J. P. Westover, Houston; R. P. Schermerhorn, San Antonio; A. L. Shuman, Fort Worth; J. A. Kemp, Wichita Falls; B. W. Turnover, Beaumont; I. Friedlander, Waco; Joe Hirsch, Corpus Christi; A. Woldert, Tyler; J. C. Phelps, Dallas; J. B. Miller, Orange; M. B. Hanks, Abilene; J. F. Etter, Sherman; W. A. Grimes, Greenville; Ben F. CLEVELAND, O., June 10.—Sam B. Anson, one of the best known of Cleveland's newspaper men, announced today that he had formed a commercial propaganda publicity concern to be known as Sam B. Anson & Co., with offices in the Park building. Anson was long city editor of the Cleveland Evening News and later was editor and publisher of the ill-fated Columbus (O.) Daily Monitor.

With him in his new venture will be M. H. Laudon, of Bonbright-Herrick & Co.; Richard G. Collier, an editorial and political writer; and Lucy J. Price, a special writer.

J. T. Toal Starts Agency

CHICAGO, June 7.—Toal & Co. is a new advertising agency here, founded by John Herbert Toal, lately of the Personalized Sales Service Company and formerly with Valentine & Cd.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among non-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines of advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in new business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial in many ways—it has made new advertisers and helped circulation—it has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for twenty weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

Incomparable

THERE is nothing in the newspaper world to be compared with the Sunday edition of The New York Times—in quality of news—in pictorial features—in circulation—in advertising.

Its sale, in excess of 500,000 copies, gives to it one of the greatest Sunday circulations of any newspaper in the world. In five months of this year the Sunday edition of The New York Times excelled every other New York Sunday newspaper in volume of advertising.

I. C. M. A. CONDEMNS WASTE IN CIRCULATION

are released from the press and delivered to the post office just in time to be dispatched to Railway Post Office and express trains, therefore, it is necessary that these papers be made up by the publishers in such a manner as to avoid the necessity of any delay through distribution of the same in the local post office before being dispatched to outgoing trains.

"The most important rule is, that dailies be made up into direct sacks by the publishers whenever you have thirty pieces or more, or fifteen pounds in weight, for any one office and if you do not have a sufficient amount to warrant a direct sack for any office then Railway Post Office or route sacks should be made up to contain papers for all offices served by the Railway Post Office route so made up, the offices to be included in these route sacks being indicated on the publishers' schemes or by numeral key on the galley list, the subscribers being arranged alphabetically, by offices, for one route or routes.

"If your mailing list contains subscribers outside the state and are not of sufficient number to warrant a direct sack or route sack, then all papers for any one state should be placed in a 'state' sack, properly labeled, the residue to be placed in a sack labeled 'mixed,' which should be delivered to the post office as early as possible in order to permit of the distribution of the same in time for proper dispatch.

Checking Up Galley Lists

"Every publisher is requested to submit his galley list to the Superintendent of Mails or to a representative of the Railway Mail Service, if one is located in his vicinity, in order that the same may be properly checked and keyed up in such a manner that the publisher can make up proper route sacks. This should be done frequently to take advantage of any recent changes in train service. In labelling sacks great care should be taken to see that the same is legible and correct. A direct sack should be labelled, for instance, 'Pittsburgh, Pa., Enquirer, Philadelphia, Pa.' An R. P. O. or route sack should be labeled 'New York & Pittsburgh R. P. O., Pa., from Ledger, Philadelphia, Pa.' A state sack should be labeled 'New York State from Chicago Tribune,' and a mixed sack labeled 'Mixed, from Washington Post.'

"As practically all mails are handled at railroad stations by illiterate railroad porters, and with considerable haste, the department has requested all publishers of daily papers to use a distinctive label on sacks containing their publications, a pink label being suggested and adopted and every railroad and post office employe is instructed to give a sack labeled with a pink label particular attention, and handle the same with pouch mail in order to insure its proper connection or dispatch, and any publishers who are not using this pink label should adopt the same at once.

Proper Wrapping Important

"In making up outside packages great care should be exercised in the legible addressing of the same. Outside should be plainly marked 'U. S. Mail for Outside Delivery at Publishers' Risk,' and particular care should be taken that the addresses are properly pasted and dried before being placed in sacks, as experience has shown that the crowding of several large packages into a sack frequently results in addresses being torn off or obliterated.

"It is also most important that a club package contain at least one copy with the post office address of the subscriber so that proper disposition may be made of the package in case the outside address is missing. The manner of folding and wrapping papers is also important, and the Post Office Department has prescribed regulations for the manner of wrapping the same. White or manilla paper should be used at all times. The best method of folding and wrapping is to fold each paper to the one-eighth fold or about 8½ by twelve inches and wrap in a separate wrapper. The separately wrapped papers for any one post office can be tied in a bundle or enclosed in a club package addressed to that office. Unwrapped papers contained in club packages should be folded into a size not larger than five inches by twelve inches, which admits of their distribution in the pigeon holes in post offices without further folding. The advantages of this method are that publishers afford their patrons the best possible service and insure delivery in good condition, reducing missending to a minimum and assisting of rapid and economical handling in post offices.

"Wrappers should be addressed in a legible or plain type, not smaller than long primer. The name of the addresses should always appear before the name of the post office, but the name of the post office and state should be the most prominent part of the address. To secure the best service addresses should be printed in black ink in large boldfaced type, ten-point Gothic type preferred.

"Wrappers should never be written in pencil, as such addressed, upon any kind of paper soon grow dim, are affected by abrasions and become unreadable, resulting in nondelivery and subsequent complaint from the sub-

THE WEST VIRGINIA MARKET BY ITSELF

Nature has endowed West Virginia beyond ordinary comparisons.

Minerals, lumber, a rich soil, waterpower, and transportation facilities unequalled, all go to make the population of about 1,500,000 people nearly if not quite the best buyers per capita for whatever they want.

Of course they cannot find out about your goods by themselves, but you can tell your story in the daily newspapers for a very small cost per be taken good care of by the ten cities shown on the map.

Perhaps you have yet to become an advertiser! They why not make a trial campaign in West Virginia where a little money spent in these newspapers makes a BIG name?

For a Department of Advertising!

THE gravity of the wage problem with news-1, 1917, suggesting the creation of a Department of Advertising, contained this paragraph:

"The Congress should provide, through emergency legislation carrying proper appropriations, for the immediate creation of a United States Department of Advertising . . . to be made a part of the Department of Commerce. It should have a staff of men in charge of it who are experienced and expert in the art and science of advertising and whose judgment would be an asset of incalculable value to the nation."

Senator A. B. Cummins, of Iowa, in August, 1917, introduced a bill to establish in the Department of Commerce a Bureau of Publicity, to administer the advertising of the Government. In subsequent editorials this journal called the attention of the Senator to the titular defect in his bill, urging that it be amended to read and to mean a Department or Bureau of ADVERTISING, not "Publicity."

That original Cummins bill received scant consideration at the hands of a war-time Congress, in spite of the obvious great need for placing the nation's advertising on the same business basis applying to other Government affairs.

The bill recently introduced by Senator Cummins —now Republican leader in the Senate—retains the title and provisions of the first bill. The Senator may be excused for failing to properly differentiate between the terms "advertising" and "publicity." In the minds of Government officials the terms seem to be interchangeable. In the business world they are not. Of course, all advertising is publicity—but not all publicity is advertising.

Advertisers and publishers use the word "publicity" to designate the class of advertising which masquerades as news matter, and which press agents are paid to guide safely past the business office and into the editorial rooms. Here it sometimes happens that a strong appeal to an editor, based upon the "news value" of the matter, secures its publication in the news columns without reference to the advertising manager—who, in fact, should pass upon it.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has, on many occasions, shown the menace to newspapers of this publicity game, and the vast extent to which Government Departments and Bureaus have played it. During the war a flood of this matter issued steadily from Washington, franked, backed by official approval, and buttressed usually by an appeal to the patriotism of the publisher.

Thus, while utterly failing to recognize the legitimacy of paid advertising for Government purposes, and making no provision for it, Official Washington fostered and supported the press agency idea on a vast scale. Advertising was needed—urgently—to serve the immediate aims of the Government. But Uncle Sam's public servants failed to provide for it, choosing to rely upon press agents to secure without cost for the space the necessary "publicity."

It is an ugly memory, kept alive by the survival of a still considerable force of "publicity specialists" at Washington, who are even today urging newspapers to continue to play their unworthy game.

Senator Cummins came into public life at Washington with a record of progressiveness in Iowa state politics which often caused him to be classified as a radical. So far and so fast have we traveled that he is now looked upon as a conservative. This bill of his, while having its defects, is a step forward—a long delayed step.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER suggests to Senator Cummins, in the public interest, that his measure shall be so amended as to eliminate entirely from its text any reference whatever to "publicity." It should be made a straightforward bill for the creation of a DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING. Instead of carrying a salary provision limiting the Director of the Bureau to $6,000 a year, it should provide a minimum salary of $10,000. Men of the caliber needed for this work cannot afford to accept $6,000 a year. Even in accepting $10,000 such men would be making a financial sacrifice.

There is a further consideration which should have due force: Big men in the advertising world would decline to administer a Department of Advertising which is linked up with free publicity propaganda.

The Cummins bill specifies that the Bureau shall prepare and direct "all advertising" of the War and Navy Departments. No reference here to "publicity." But, as to other departments, advertising and publicity are coupled. This is a serious defect and should be at once remedied.

The Federal Department (or Bureau) of Advertising should have nothing whatever to do with Government "publicity." To associate the two branches of appeal would be to lead to not merely endless confusion, but would offer the strongest possible argument against the advisability of the whole proposition. If a Government Bureau of Advertising should not only have the authority to prepare and place paid advertising, but equal authority to prepare and offer to newspapers free publicity the fact would serve as a club, and might easily lead to ugly results. There would be the constant inducement to publishers to go to the limit in giving away space in order to secure the greatest possible volume of paid advertising.

If the Government feels the need of a corps of press agents, why not a separate bill aimed to supply that need? Why link up this alien matter with a straight business proposition? Why should a publisher feel that, in accepting paid advertising from the Government, his newspaper is morally obligated to accept and print a certain amount of press agent publicity?

Senator Cummins seems to have gotten these two propositions completely intertwined. He should straighten them out.

The I. C. M. A.

THE International Circulation Managers' Association, which has been in convention at Buffalo this week, is a shining example of the value of a representative craft organization.

It would be difficult to estimate fully the benefits accruing to publishers whose circulation managers are identified with this association. Supplemented by state and sectional bodies, the I. C. M. A. has been a powerful factor for economic efficiency in the conduct of newspapers.

Today, thanks to the effective labors of the organized circulators, waste and extravagance in this department of newspaper making have largely disappeared. Reckless and ruthless methods of competition are outlawed in the ranks of the I. C. M. A. members. Sound promotion policies have become the rule. The circulator who runs amuck with oldtime, discredited methods forfeits his prestige among his fellows. He can no longer "get by." His publisher, however, eager he may be to increase his distribution, realizes that his paper must conform to the legitimate methods of promotion now so generally followed. To do otherwise is to invite disaster.

The circulators who have journeyed to Buffalo this year will return to their tasks with new ideas and new inspirations. They will have gained new vision, better perspective, increased ardor.

Selling Advertising

THE gravity of the wage problem with news papers is happily balanced, in a majority of instances, by the demand for advertising space. With increased costs of production—due largely to higher wages for printers and pressmen—the solution must be found in increased revenues.

On the Pacific coast we now have ten-cent Sunday newspapers. This trend may continue until it includes a majority of metropolitan Sunday issues. But this additional revenue will not meet, of itself, the mounting publishing costs. There must be more advertising. And, obviously, higher advertising rates must come.

Newspaper space has always been sold too cheaply. The exceptions have been so few that they have merely proved the rule. Magazine and periodical rates are, and always have been, much higher. EDITOR & PUBLISHER is not an advocate of high rates for newspaper advertising, but of reasonable rates. Prevailing rates are not, in the main, reasonable—for they do not take into account the doubled publication costs of today as compared with those of the pre-war period.

Publishers of newspapers have been the most reluctant of all business men to advance their selling price in conformity with advancing basic costs. Naturally, advertisers are not likely to rebuke them for this reluctance. Yet few advertisers would seriously protest against paying a rate which is based upon cost of production. They pay for everything else they buy on that basis.

Newspaper advertising was never before so fully recognized as a commercial necessity as it is today. The big business expansion in all lines upon which the country is entering requires a greater use of newspaper space by business men than ever before. Upon adequate advertising the whole program of readjustment and development of markets depends.

Newspapers have for sale, in their advertising space, one of the finest of all commodities. Indeed, what they have to sell is at once a commodity and a service. It is a direct channel of communication for the seller with his customer. It is the primary, the BIG business of mass communication. But this service-commodity must be sold on a business basis—cost, plus a fair profit—and BY BUSINESS METHODS. This means that it must be, like every other good product, ADEQUATELY ADVERTISED!

The day has gone by when ANY business, of a competitive kind, can succeed without adequate advertising—and this applies with peculiar force to the business of SELLING ADVERTISING. And, in advertising ADVERTISING, the publisher must use the method which he urges upon those who buy his product. He must use circulars only to the extent that he would advise other advertisers to use them. To appeal for advertising through the medium of a poster or a circular is to indicate to the prospective advertiser the publisher's own preference as to advertising media. His selling argument thus defeats itself. To advertise his advertising effectively and consistently the publisher must use a medium which the buyers of advertising space buy and read for its service value to them.

MRS. William Randolph Hearst, chairman of the Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defence, has received from associates on that committee a loving cup in recognition of her unselfish and generous services during the war. Thousands of our boys of the Army and Navy, befriended, in her hospitality, extended to them through the canteens here in New York to whose maintenance she contributed so largely, will say, "Good work!"

JOHN Sullivan, Secretary of the A. N. A., writes, in his weekly page of news and views in EDITOR & PUBLISHER: "The A. B. C. has made good, and is, without question, the outstanding operating factor in the circulation audit movement." If the Audit Bureau needed any more valuable testimony that this is to the usefulness of advertisers—and it does not—it might be hard to find it.

scribers. If the Dick or any similar method of addressing is followed the strips should be printed in black ink on white or yellow paper and never on paper of any other color. Publishers using the stencil method of addressing should use a sufficient quantity of ink to produce legible impressions, as poorly stenciled addresses result in delays and non-delivery and cause unjust complaints against the postal service. The addresses should be printed on the flat side of the wrapper and never on the edge of the fold.

Correct Train Labels

"Publishers making up Railway Post Office sacks showing train numbers to which dispatched should see that labels bearing train numbers are corrected whenever changes are made in Railway Post Office service whereby former train numbers become obsolete, as the failure to show the proper train number will invariably result in mishandling and delay to papers. The Post Office Department has prepared numerous printed forms for use of Circulation Managers in making reports of irregular or delayed receipt of papers, which forms call for definite information as to the name and address of adressee, manner of dispatch, etc., and our experience indicates that frequently these form tracers are sent out to post office employes on receipt of complaints from subscribers before any action, whatever, is taken by publishers to ascertain whether the paper in question is actually being properly dispatched from office of publication.

"Such procedure results in unnecessary routine work and I would respectfully suggest that in order to reduce correspondence in this connection to a minimum that, upon the receipt of a complaint of irregular or delayed receipt of papers, that you first check up your records and ascertain whether the subscriber's name and address appears upon your mailing list and whether paper for that party is being properly made up and dispatched in accordance with publishers' scheme or prepared Galley List. There has also been provided for use of publishers, a pink tracer slip for use in tracing papers through to destination where it has been found that receipt has been irregular, and such tracer forms will be furnished Circulation Managers for attachment to copies they desire traced to destination, these forms bearing the endorsement of all parties handling the paper en route, thereby establishing definitely the cause of delay, if any.

How Easily Identified

"Our experience has shown that papers received in ROUTE, STATE or MIXED sacks direct from the publishers are easily identified and given preference in distribution, but when these papers are worked in the sacks for connecting R. P. O. lines or distant distributing offices with other classes of mail their identity as daily papers become lost, making it difficult for postal employes to recognize and handle the same as such and in order to devise some plan whereby complaints from publishers might be reduced to a minimum a recent conference of Division Superintendents of the Railway Mail Service was held at Washington, D. C., for the discussion of this matter and under date of June 4, the Second Assistant Postmaster General sent out a Q.—In your next issue, under "Q & A," will you please tell the writer what "thirty" means and what its origin is? E. K. Baum.

A.—We can tell you what it means, but blest if we can be positive about its origin, and we are going to pass this interesting query to our readers. Within our memory "thirty" has represented in newspaper parlance the end of a day's or night's work—the job finished. It is also sometimes used to signify the end of a story. A former Chicago newspaperman tells us that throughout his long career he has associated "thirty" with 2:30 A. M. when morning newspapers went to press, and the press association key went silent. But a man in press association service for more than 20 years says that "thirty" was used as a wire flash to end the evening service, as long as he can remember. Another friend of Editor & Publisher insists that the origin of "thirty" in newspaper parlance relates to the Thirty Years War, "the struggle over." Mr. George Naeder, of the Associated Press, one of the best authorities on press association lore, tells us that "thirty" originated in the early press association days when press reports were written in pencil or stylus on long sheets of flimsy. Thirty sheets of such writing constituted a day or night "trick" and when the thirtieth sheet had been written the receiving operator flashed "30" or "good night." Mr. Naeder says that "30" is a code word just as "73" is a code word meaning "regards," or as "13" is a code word meaning "Do you understand?" We believe this explains the origin, but some of our associates insist that "thirty" antedated the press wire in newspaper offices.

Q.—What sort of staff organization must be maintained in the Display Advertising Department of a daily newspaper having, say, sixty to seventy thousand circulation? —Want-to-Know.

A.—One live daily of this class, in a Southern city, finds the following plan of organization adequate: (1) An Executive in Charge (the Business Manager); (2) Local Display Ad Manager, directing a staff of five solicitors, one of these a woman; (3) Special Feature Advertising, directed by a manager; (4) Copy Department—one man and one woman; (5) Foreign Department, whose manager attends to localized national accounts; (6) Promotion Department, one man; (7) Stenographic Department—head stenographer and three assistants. Promotion manager works with Special Feature Advertising Manager, also having charge of all details of plans for advertising the paper. Head of copy department calls upon other members of staff for special work when needed. Head stenographer handles all foreign orders, receives and distributes mats and has supervision over office boys.

PLAIN DEALER STAFF CHANGES

CLEVELAND, O., June 10.—There was a shifting in the editorial and copy desks of the Plain Dealer effective today.

Fred Charles, State editor, went to the head of the local copy desk, being succeeded by Russell T. Herrick; Stanley C. Knisely, of the copy desk, succeeded Richard C. Cull, day city editor for about a year, Mr. Cull going to the Sunday and feature department, succeeding Ward Marsh, who becomes a copy desk reader.

C. W. Larsh, of the local copy desk, was transferred to the telegraph desk, while D. H. Kirby, copy reader, goes to the local repertorial staff.

Edwin Herwig, formerly telegraph editor of the Youngstown (O.) Telegram, has joined the copy desk of the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Kenneth C. Craig, city hall man for the Plain Dealer, has returned from Arizona, where he spent a month with his mother.

W. S. Parr, for twenty-six years an the editorial staff of the Plain Dealer, most of the time as market editor, returned to his work this week, after an absence of ten weeks, due to rheumatism.

Runs Stories from Scotland.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 6.—The Knickerbocker Press has begun a series of articles from a former Press reporter, William T. Whittemore, a Y. M. C. A. worker now touring Scotland with a party of Albany men, who recently finished their work in France in the fighting area.

"Horse and HORSE!"

They do not put the wagon before the horse in Wisconsin but they are proud of both products of the state.

Curiously enough, the Wisconsin idea is to be two-handed in all things.

Thus in a world reduced in live-stock to the number of a couple of hundred million horses, cattle, sheep and swine; and manufacturing enterprises seeking a sun-spot for readjustments, Wisconsin finds its two-handed idea very practical and profitable.

Wisconsin raises the horse and feeds him, and it makes the machinery that cultivates the soil for the crops, and harvests them, and then it makes the wagons for the horse to pull his load.

It turns much of its lumber cut into home-made utilities, and sends them to other markets. It exports galore.

And if you have anything good to offer and will make its advantages KNOWN to Wisconsin people by newspaper advertising, here is a market that cannot only BUY it but can PAY for it.

GOULD, PAPERMAKER, DEAD

Had Supplied Many Publishers with News Print During Busy Career

Gordias H. P. Gould, president of the Gould Paper Company of Lyons Falls, N. Y., and president of the Donnaconna Paper Company of Donnaconna, Quebec, died at Clifton Springs, N. Y., of inflammatory rheumatism. He was 71 years old.

For many years Mr. Gould had been a prominent figure in the news-print manufacturing business, and he was widely known among manufacturers and publishers. Born in New York State, he was early engaged in the lumber business, and about twenty years ago he established a paper mill in Lyons Falls, the plant being enlarged until it reached its present capacity of 85 tons a day. Later he acquired a mill in Canada, which has a capacity of 100 tons a day.

Mr. Gould was a member of the Executive Committee of the News-Print Manufacturers' Association, which was dissolved in November, 1917.

CUBAN SOLDIER-EDITOR DEAD

Don Munix for 24 Years Published Havana Newspaper

HAVANA, June 3.—Nicholas Rivero Muniz, for twenty-four years director of El Diario de la Marina, one of Havana's oldest daily newspapers, died June 3. He was seventy years old. He had just received a cablegram from Madrid notifying him of the bestowal upon him by King Alfonso of the title of Marquis.

Born in Villavicinas, Spain, Don Nicholas took up arms in 1872 on the side of the Carlists, was captured and sent to Cuba as a political prisoner, along with several hundred others, to fill vacancies in the Spanish colonial forces. Three months later he escaped to Spain and again joined the Bourbon cause, taking part in the first battle of Montejura. For conspicuous service he was promoted to major and later was decorated with the grand cross of Alfonso III. In 1880 he returned to Cuba and entered the newspaper field.

Obituary

JOSEPH ALEXANDER ALTSHELER, editor of the Thrice-a-Week Edition of the New York World, died May 5. Born in Three Springs, Ky., April 29, 1862, he was educated at Vanderbilt University, and from 1885 to 1892 he was on the staff of the Louisville Courier-Journal. He then joined the staff of the New York World, and after a period of political reporting became editor of the Thrice-a-Week World. He wrote several books of adventure and an American history.

JAMES JOSEPH JARNAGIN, seven-month-old son of Roy A. Jarnagin, advertising manager of the Spencer (Ia.) News-Herald, is dead.

DAVID BRANT, publisher of the Iowa City (Ia.) Republican died June 4. He was born in Indiana in 1850 and took up newspaper work on the Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Republican in 1880. Later he established the Walker News and was connected with the Cedar Rapids Gazette, becoming publisher of the Iowa City Republican in 1902. He was the father of Irving Brant of the St. Louis Star and Archer Brant of the Iowa City paper.

RALPH K. STRETCH, a former newspaper man of Macon, Ga., was drowned recently while swimming in the Harvard University pool.

MRS. EDITH SMITH, wife of Edward R. Smith, a special writer for the New York Sunday World, died June 5, aged 34 years.

THOMAS R. MCQUADE, founder of the Utica (N. Y.) Evening Telegram, but for many years retired from newspaper work, died May 23, aged 88 years.

FRANK F. SCRIBE, for years a proof reader on the Brooklyn Eagle and New York city newspapers, died June 5 in his 74th year.

FRANCIS B. MURPHY, one of the oldest newspaper men in Albany, N. Y., in point of service, died last week. For more than thirty years Mr. Murphy had been connected with the Times-Union, chiefly in the advertising department. He started newspaper work on the Leadville (Colo.) Sun, and came East to be connected with the Knickerbocker Press of Albany.

GEORGE C. HELD, aged 47, staff photographer of the Portland Oregonian and more recently cameraman for a moving picture company in Portland, was recently killed in an automobile accident.

JETLEF B. NORDHEM, for 20 years past vice-president of the company publishing Skandinaven, a Scandinavian daily newspaper of Chicago, died June 3. He was a cousin of Victor F. Lawson, publisher of the Chicago Daily News.

ERNEST P. ORR, Denver manager of the International News Service, died June 7. At one time he was in charge of the I. N. S. bureau in Paris.

WILLIAM H. HARDING, advertising manager of the New York Times Book Review, died June 9, at Breakwaters, N. Y., aged 65 years. He was born in England. While still a young man he settled in America and became cable editor of the New York World, and then of the Herald. Thirty-five years ago he was a reporter for the Times. Later with the Associated Press Mr. Harding was for seventeen years foreign editor. From 1902 to 1902, he became associate editor of the Fourth Estate. Mr. Harding in October, 1909, rejoined the staff of the New York Times, and was associated with the business department until the time of his death.

J. LEO SAUER, one time city editor of the Elizabeth (N. J.) Daily Times, was killed by lightning at Augusta, Ga., June 8, while playing golf.

DANIEL H. MAHONY, once a publisher of the Catholic Standard and American Catholic Review, died May 27 in Philadelphia.

LIEUT. JAMES HICKMAN, formerly a classified advertising solicitor for the Chicago Daily News, was this week reported killed in an airplane accident in Coblenz, Germany.

COL. HARVE P. NELSON, owner and publisher of the Greenville (Tex.) Evening Banner, died at Greenville May 29. Col. Nelson was born in Alabama in 1872. He also founded the Wolfe City (Tex.) Sun, and published the Farmersville Times.

ANTHONY DONOHUE, for many years employed in the New York Evening Telegram's composing room, died June 4.

GUY MAGEE, at one time a prominent newspaper man, died in Chicago June 5, aged 77 years. Mr. Magee, who was born in Philadelphia, went to Chicago more than thirty years ago. He was at one time city editor of the Inter-Ocean and prior to that was with the Tribune. During the civil war he was correspondent with both the Northern and Southern armies. He is said to have been one of three newspaper men who accompanied General Sherman on the march from Atlanta to the sea.

WINS NAME OF "SCOUTS"

Supreme Court of N. Y. State Upheld in Its Contentions.

After having fought in courts since the summer of 1917 to protect the names "Scouts," "Scouting," etc., the Boy Scouts of America finally has been granted by the Supreme Court of New York all for which it fought.

Thus ends the famous case of the Boy Scouts of America vs. The United States Boy Scout. The latter organization has changed its name, eliminating any suggestion of the scout idea, which has come to be particularly identified with the great nation-wide Boy Scouts of America and the organizations with which it is affiliated throughout the world.

EDWARD P. BELL HONORED BY LONDON PRESS

war of getting news and views which would enable American readers to understand the situation here there was never a single instance, either in the Army or in the Navy, or in the flying service or in the great public departments, where any official or any Englishman at all in any position tried to bring the slightest pressure upon us to color our reports in any way whatever.

"Again and again we were taken over the Fleet; a good many of us were given flights in battle-planes and seaplanes; we have been in the British front line time after time, and we were shown everything. We went also to a very great many munition factories. Absolutely nothing was kept dark from us.

"We had some highly confidential conferences, too, with practically every member of the Government from the Prime Minister downwards. And so far as I know the whole of the work gave complete satisfaction both to the officials and the public men who gave us the information, and to our papers and our readers. The result, in fact, was thoroughly good in every way.

Truth the Quest

"In order to interest readers on the other side it has been necessary to work here to get the truth and to do one's utmost to tell it, because I find that readers everywhere are instinctively more interested in the truth than they are in anything else in the world.

"I think the truth is more dramatic than anything else, and people respond to it instinctively as they never do to anything that is artificially colored, or insincere, or faked.

"In the United States there is the keenest possible desire on the part of the people to see the British nation as it is, and to understand what the masses feel and think. Intuitively throughout the United States there is a realization that what the masses of the British nation are feeling and thinking agrees absolutely with what the masses in America are feeling and thinking.

"They feel a perfectly natural occurrence of sympathy. The broad general interests of the American people are the same as yours, and their purpose is the same. Obviously, therefore, it is the business of correspondents on both sides of the water to seek for the truth and to tell it.

"A great deal of harm has sometimes been done by correspondents who reflect certain currents of thought that are not typical and cause irritation, and omit to indicate that these sentiments do not spring from the hearts of the people.

"My whole purpose has always been to emphasize all the friendly sentiments, all the good will, and all the sanity I find in this country.

"Everything that is excellent I try to show fully and clearly all the time; and, when I must touch upon other things—things that reflect malice, envy, jealousy, or ill-feeling, if I feel really compelled to touch on them at all—and I am not a believer in suppressing anything—I take occasion to remind my readers that it has nothing to do with the fundamental feeling of the country.

"We are interested in every bit of criticism that is published about us. We do not want a word of it suppressed.

"Whatever it is we want to hear it, but a correspondent who sends over criticism of a malicious character without reminding his readers of the real character of its source is guilty of an omission that is most unfortunate.

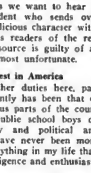
Boy Interest in America

"Among my other duties here, part of my work recently has been that of speaking in various parts of the country to English public school boys on American history and political and moral ideals. I have never been more impressed with anything in my life than the amazing intelligence and enthusiasm of these boys.

"If I have run into prejudices and preconceptions among other people, and have found any difficulty in getting really into touch with them, I never found any difficulty at all with these boys. And they before any great time are going to be running the Empire.

"Absolutely nothing gives me more hope and confidence that we shall get rid of all nonsense between the two nations and that we shall have common sense and that they possible apex prevailing between them than the robust humanity and enthusiasm of these boys. Up to the time I spoke to them many seem to have had a picture of America that was not the America I know at all.

"I am perfectly certain that they are going to sweep aside all preconceived ideas, and that they are going to look upon our relations, not from the point of view of the eighteenth century or the nineteenth century, but from the point of view of the present moment in which we are living, without any prejudices whatever.



"All the intellectual forces of the United States are also calling to our boys and girls to study Anglo-American relations from the point of view of the present moment.

"And so, I think, forces like these working on both sides of the water are going to bring us within measurable time to a perfect understanding. For these ill-conditioned persons who want to sow discord between Britain and America there will no longer be any room. The time is fast approaching when the peoples of the two countries will refuse to listen to them."

No Relief Yet for R. F. D. Mail Route Victims

More Strenuous Protest Meetings Planned in N. Y. State—Farmers Walk Miles for Mail

TROY, N. Y., June 10.—Believing that the results of the last hearing on the postal route changes were not satisfactory, another meeting of protest, in which newspapermen, postal workers and patrons throughout northeastern New York will participate, is planned for this city in the near future.

Continued protests from rural delivery patrons, who are opposed to the changes effected in Rensselaer, Washington, Fulton and Montgomery Counties, are expected to result in a rehearing by postal officials. Newspapers in Troy and Albany, notably the Knickerbocker Press and the Times Record, which have taken up the fight waged by the mail patrons, report that they have received hundreds of letters of protest against the changes.

Grangers are protesting at the manner in which the post office inspectors are rearranging the routes. They contend the inspectors have not personally inspected the routes, leaving the work to incompetent assistants. At Medway, N. Y., according to protests reaching this city, the post-office was closed, and the boxes placed at the Medway fourcorners, with the result that many of the residents of this vicinity are forced to travel two additional miles for their mail.

circular letter to all Division Superintendents, copies of which were transmitted to Chief Clerks, reading as follows:

Suggests Pink Wrappers

"In order that daily papers may be given further preference in handling at origin and in delivery, Division Superintendents will please request publishers of daily and all other publishers to use pink wrappers for dailies so that they may be readily identified and delivered as addressed. In addition to the use of pink wrappers for single wraps and club packages publishers should continue to use pink labels on the outside containing dailies.

"Railway Postal Clerks and other postal employes distributing daily papers will give the same dispatch to dailies as is given first class matter wherever practicable. Where separate dailies in separate 'State' sacks and line sacks and not combined therein with other classes of mail, except that dailies may be included in direct sacks with other classes of mail, but in every case where sacks contain dailies the label on the sack must be so marked.

"Where the quantity is insufficient to justify a separate sack of dailies, they should be tied in a bundle and dispatched with letter mail in the pocket or manner in daily practice for the connecting line. Where the conditions in a Railway Post Office, or Post Office, are such that it is impracticable to make separate distribution of dailies, special instructions from Division Superintendents should cover such cases. All failures to properly mark labels of sacks containing dailies should be reported and charged in sole-lettered cards, and all dailies dispatched with other classes of mail in State or line sacks without special instructions from the Division Superintendents should be checked as 'error.'

"It is one of the duties of employes of the Post Office Department to give publishers every possible assistance and information which will tend to improve the handling of their mail, and I cannot urge too strongly, the advisibility of Circulation Managers soliciting such information from the local post office employes. If your papers do not now being properly delivered there is a possibility that they are improperly routed in your office, and by talking these matters up with the local post office representatives a great many of your complaints can be eliminated. Generally these employes can advise you as to how you can improve your present delivery or how you can reach a locality through the mails which you are now doing by baggage or express service, at a considerable expense for auto hire, etc. It has been my personal experience that a great deal more can be accomplished along constructive lines by co-operation than by destructive critiesm, and by the fostering ot 2 co-operative spirit in our dealings, one with another, we cannot but only effect an improved service but reduce irregularities and complaints to a minimum."

Realise Need for Co-operation

The Post Office Department undoubtedly feels the necessity of improving the delivery of newspapers, which service has been so seriously impaired throughout the war period. Relief appears everywhere in a measure, but there is much to be done yet to bring back the old schedules and the old efficiency.

Members of the I. C. M. A. realize that close co-operation with the express and post office services is necessary, and plans are afoot to overcome many obstacles. The Association, more than ever individual, will be able to cope best with this situation.

Many problems are solved for the individual here and there through this organization and its strength is being felt more and more every day.

One member, who was asked how he succeeded in procuring 23 new members during the past year, said: "I visited newspaper offices throughout several states, and when I found a circulation manager not a member, I simply laid reports of the association and its accomplishments before him and before his publisher, and the rest was easy."

Biggest Attendance on Record

When members of the I. C. M. A. arrived at headquarters, the I. C. M. A. flag dominated the masthead of Hazel Statler, and waved a greeting. Members began pouring in to such a number that almost one-half of the capacity of the big hotel was taxed to accommodate them.

The 21st annual convention topped the attendance record of all meetings of this association, there being nearly 200 on hand, and speaks volumes for the interest aroused in the publishing world by an organization which, by constancy to purpose, has steadily grown in importance over a period of nearly a quarter of a century.

The circulation managers are attracting to their meetings the attention of the owners, publishers and business managers of newspapers, and no longer is it necessary to plead for co-operation—the business-like character of the programs, the studied search for light on problem and the open and frank discussions prevailing, make it plain to the higher executive that his circulation manager must become a participant in these sessions.

Serious-Minded Men

No man comes back from an I. C. M. A. meeting without a solution of his problems and his office throughout it bound to feel an impetus from contact with studious and serious-minded men he meets and exchanges ideas with at the convention.

Every man in the meeting is reporter for himself, asking questions and taking notes and throwing himself into the spirit of the meeting. The programs are crowded with pertinent topics for discussion and are the result of the study of many minds directed to the solution from every standpoint of a newspaper's circulation needs.

Banquet "from the Shoulder"

The convention opened at once upon a plan calculated to get the most profit from the necessarily short session. Luncheon Tuesday was served at the meeting, so that a continuous discussion might result. The number of topics discussed more than met the expectation of the directors, who devised at a meeting the night before hand plans for disposal of the greatest amount of work the first day.

After the formal opening, the acting Mayor of Buffalo greeted the members, and made it plain that every help would be afforded them in all their plans.

The visiting ladies of the party had every facility for enjoyment during the time the gentlemen were at the meetings. Theatre parties, visits to prominent places, special luncheons, and attention to their most cherished desires marked the arrangements.

Luncheon for the ladies and delegates as guests of the Chamber of Commerece left nothing more to be desired in that direction.

A moonlight trip to Crystal Beach for the ladies and members was provided by the Publishers of Buffalo newspaper publishers. Every possible contribution to the entertainment was embraced in the complete arrangements for this trip.

Reading of papers and discussions brought out many points of advice and suggestion.

Factors in Circulation Growth

In a talk on "What is the greatest and best factor in growth of circulation?" Fred C. Schmid of the Indianapolis News said:

"To my mind, there is no one factor responsible for the growth of circulation. "First of all, a newspaper in order to grow legitimately, must be in demand, therefore it must be a GOOD newspaper. It must be possessed of an editorial policy that will make it appeal to all well-thinking people.

"With a good newspaper, one that will sell upon its merit, there must also be a well-organized Circulation Department. This is absolutely necessary in order to establish service between the publisher and the subscriber.

"A good newspaper without a well-organized circulation department would be like a tree filled with ripe fruit which would be allowed to rot because there is no way of harvesting it for the market. No fruit-grower will go to the trouble and expense of spraying his orchard and spending his valuable time during the summer season, bringing the fruit to the harvesting stage, without making preparations to take care of the fruit after it ripens.

"So it is with the newspaper. Of what value would the newspaper be if there were no efficient distributing system, or how successful would the circulation department be if the newspaper were not up to the standard required of the community, or if in bad odor on account of its business or editorial policy.

"It is a known fact that no one single factor will make a newspaper, although very often the lack of one essential feature will break it. I have known circulation managers who thought that they could successfully market any newspaper and I have seen some of them fail because they did not have merit in the paper they represented.

Keep the Boys "Pepped Up"

"A poor editor and a good circulation manager makes a poor combination, so does a good editor and a poor circulation manager. They must both be of high caliber or one will fail with the other."

F. J. Kavanaugh, circulation manager of the Dayton, Ohio, News, dis-

Dear George:

It is beyond me to answer your question "why more foreign advertising isn't run on Sunday." Take the smaller Sunday papers, ours for instance, lots of good reading, plenty of time to read, ads all in good position, and you have the best proposition an advertiser could desire. While neglected in the past, it is encouraging to note the drift of some large national advertisers to the Sunday issues and I predict a big following. We expect to reach 30,000 copies this coming fall.

cussed the problems of a paper that does not use premiums or contests as a means of increasing circulation.

"When you are on such a paper, you must keep yourself in the closest touch with your sales organization by establishing stations in charge of capable men who get the right boys interested and keep them 'pepped up' by the many good things they hear about the paper they represent," he said.

"We realize that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy and therefore the live circulation manager must constantly scheme to stimulate the carrier by offering small prizes, excursions, picnics, theatre parties, and the like. Our paper is always keeping the boys guessing what is next in prospect."

Contest Men Have Advantages

Newspaper premiums and contests also were discussed by James L. Farley, circulation manager of the Philadelphia North American.

"The quality or personnel of the men engaged in the work should have a decided bearing on whether results are permanent or not, and in this particular phase of the case the contest men have a decided advantage," he said.

"They come from all walks of life, and include bankers, merchants, clergymen and successful salesmen in all lines of trade, who use the same diplomatic arguments on a prospect that they use in their own line and thus create a better and more lasting impression than is possible in the case of the house-to-house canvassers, many of whom are old men who have almost outlived their usefulness and are physically incapacitated for any other kind of work."

Darby Likes Features

Syndicated newspapers features are efficacious factors in holding and building circulation," W. J. Darby, circulation manager of the Mail and Empire of Toronto, declared in the course of an address before the convention.

"A feature need not have instructive value to be capable of great popularity, as with comic cartoons in which the lighter vein of human nature seeks outlet and expression," he said.

"It may be contended that this grotesque form of extertainment is little appreciated by sober-minded readers, but this objection can scarcely be supported as all indications point to the fact that a comic feature by a gifted cartoonist grows upon those who regularly see his work until it becomes an acquired taste like olives or caviare."

Circulators Should "Mix"

The best way of attaining cooperation between circulation managers and the heads of other departments was discussed by J. J. Lynch, assistant business manager of the Cleveland Press.

"It is absolutely necessary to maintain a good feeling among all employes in order to bring about the best results in getting regular and extra editions handled in the shortest time possible," he said. Meetings ought to be held as often as possible with the foremen of the different departments when plans can be gone over and suggestions made that will be beneficial. In other words, the circulation manager must be a diplomat, a good mixer, an associate of employees of the different departments, helping them iron out their difficulties, which will earn their good will and bring excellent results."

Carriers as Agents

Agitation favoring the repeal of the law prohibiting rural route mail carriers from acting as subscription agents for newspapers was urged by John T. Toler, circulation manager of the Atlanta Constitution.

"There can be no doubt that rural route carriers acting as subscription agents are an accommodation to rural route patrons," he said. "The farmer is not provided with writing conveniences and often fails to subscribe to a newspaper solely because of the inconvenience of locating writing paper, writing the letter, and posting it.

"I do not believe there is a circulation manager who will not admit that if rural route carriers were free to act in this matter, it would mean a considerable increase in circulation."

Bad Times for "Schemes"

Premiums, contests and other means of increasing circulation were discussed by Joseph H. Lackey, circulation manager of the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner.

"Money hazarded on a contest at this time would be like throwing it into a rat hole, because the minds of the people are so fixed on things of a serious nature that a contest would shock rather than get their sympathetic co-operation. The public is reading newspapers because it wants the news, and no artificial stimulus is needed.

"Special rates cannot be considered in the same class with contests and premiums. They are a legitimate means of getting new business. The high cost of living has developed a keenness on the part of the public for any sort of bargain. In normal times, it certainly is worth while to make special rates on mail subscriptions in order to get new business."

Favors Unlimited Circulation

Whether circulation outside of a zone of 150 miles is of any benefit to an advertiser was discussed by W. L. Argue, circulation manager of the Toronto Daily Star, and answered by him in the affirmative, so far as Toronto is concerned.

"Toronto local stores, particularly those centrally located, have thousands of people in and out of them daily, who are in the city for shopping, business, or pleasure," he said. "These people seem to know where to go for what they want to buy, as well as the residents of the city, because they keep themselves familiar with the store news appearing in the advertisements in Toronto newspapers. If they do not buy by mail, they go to the store whose advertisements appeal to them whenever they visit Toronto."

"The successful circulation manager, must be not only a capable salesman but a good organizer, as well," said Albert R. Michener, circulation manager of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph. Mr. Michener considered particularly the problems of the circulation manager on the small-town newspaper.

Drop "Detail" Worries

"Don't burden yourself with the petty things in your work," he advised. "You must have the vision that permits you to look into the future and carefully plan new fields that constantly are opening for development. You must keep abreast of the times, and when necessary be a pioneer. To do this, you cannot handle details, and you will be surprised how easy it is to train assistants who can handle them as successfully as yourself.

McKernan Probable President

The directors' meeting, held Monday night, could not decide on the new officer list, but James McKernan of the New York World will doubtless be called upon to accept the presidency, with W. L. Argue of the Toronto Star for first vice-president, and A. G. Lincoln of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch for second vice-president.

There seems to be very little opposition to J. M. Annenberg of the Albany Knickerbocker-Press and it is expected that he will be selected for secretary-treasurer. There are four directors to be elected, but there is no definite indication at this time as to who they will be.

the Bolsheviki in his home city and elsewhere and paid a tribute to the press of the country in its fight for good government. He also denounced those capitalists who by their attitude toward labor imperil the peace and prosperity of America.

"So far as I am concerned I don't believe in any skim milk policy towards the man who wants to overthrow the government of the United States," shouted Hanson. "But I want to say to you that we are not afraid of revolution. I've seen the citizens stand up and be counted."

Press Version Upheld

Seattle's labor troubles were also the basis of a sharp verbal clash at the Monday session, when Rabbi Johan B. Wise, of Portland, in an address on "The Moral Side of Reconstruction," maintained that the press had misrepresented the Seattle strike in referring to it as a revolution. He declared it was a legitimate labor demonstration.

An immediate reply came from Gordon C. Corbaley, executive secretary of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, who upheld the press interpretation and declared that the strike was a deliberate attempt by radicals to take over industry and government.

The present prosperity of the advertising business, which was reflected in every session, was attributed by Rollin C. Ayres, of San Francisco, director of the association, to the way in which advertising "sold the war." Never has there been such a convincing demonstration of the effectiveness of display space, he declared, as the manner in which it sold war bonds and aided every other patriotic cause.

Truth in advertising and kindred topics were touched on by many speakers who discussed the progress of this campaign and the benefits derived.

Careless Exporters Hurt United States

A variation of this topic was the advocacy of conservatism in advertising in a talk on "Advertising Overseas" by Wilford Beaton, editor of Pacific Ports. Mr. Beaton told of the excellent results obtained in England in advertising without sensationalism. The most impressive feature of his address, however, was an attack on the haphazard methods which many exporters have followed in packing goods for overseas.

Such carelessness, he declared, offsets the benefits of much advertising and advertising men should unite in seeing that better methods are adopted.

Confidence in advertising in the chief goal to be sought by advertising clubs, asserted Elliott M. Epsteen, attorney for the Better Business Bureau of the San Francisco Club. "It took time," said Mr. Epsteen, "to secure truthful advertising. We must now secure confidence in advertising, for without confidence truthful advertising is worth nothing."

That newspaper advertising is read by the great majority of women has been ascertained through the compilation of a market report in Oakland, explained to the convention by George A. Hughes, advertising expert of that city. Mr. Hughes recommended that all cities be canvassed for information that would be of value to advertisers, and that the Oakland market report plan was one of the most feasible. He suggested that advertising men throughout the country communicate with the Oakland Club in regard to it.

Women Favor Newspaper Ads

The convention brought together many speakers of prominence who participated in the departmentals as well as the general sessions. It was the general impression that no previous convention has done as much in taking up the serious problems of the advertising man.

All the speakers who entered into the subject predicted still further increases in the advertising business. The doom of the business firm, large or small, that does not keep pace with the progress of newspaper advertising was freely predicted.

Cups offered for excellence in attendance, exhibits and other phases of the convention added much interest. One of the real contests was for possession of a handsome trophy offered for the best speech on "Why Industries Should Come to the Pacific Coast." It was won by Frank Butterworth of Los Angeles, with R. E. Bigelow of Spokane second.

Rev. Harvey Miller of Sacramento won a trophy offered for the best presentation of merits of the delegates' home cities.

Butterworth Wins Speech Cup

The social features of the convention, particularly the annual banquet, were greatly enjoyed. The visiting women were entertained by the Advertising Women's Club of Portland, recently organized.

Today, the closing day of the convention, merged into the opening day of the Portland Rose Festival. A great advertising and industrial parade was the feature.

Stockton and Los Angeles are both candidates to become the convention city next year. This contest will be decided tonight.

If Los Angeles wins, Fred J. Wadley of that city will be elected president.

If Stockton is selected, David S. Matthews, a Stockton man, will head the organization.

The sentiment for the cities is about evenly divided.

DAILIES SUSPENDED IN TWO CAPITALS

went about the shop, regularly, and inquired whether the employees were hungry or thirsty, or wanted to smoke, and if so, what they wanted—and it was all "on the house!"

Enter Bolshevism

Then Bolshevism came to Buenos Aires. The men in the editorial department of La Prensa formed a union. A printer was discharged and the men in the mechanical department organized. There was a strike that lasted a week and then all the men who had been out came back to work, and then there was another strike which has made Buenos Aires a metropolis without news of the outside world for more than two weeks.

There is a big department store in Buenos Aires, known as "Gathchaves." The employes of the store went on strike for higher wages and enlisted the sympathy of of the newspaper workers. The employes of La Prensa and the other daily newspapers served notice on their employers that they would not set up or print advertisements of the store where the employes were on strike and Ezequiel P. Paz, the director general of La Prensa, decided it was time to fight.

Suspended Publication

He held a conference with the other publishers of newspapers in Buenos Aires and all of them printed an announcement the following day that they had suspended publication, indefinitely. They let it be understood that the presses could rust before they would give in.

Then they learned that a similar situation existed in Mexico City. The cabled news of the troubles they were encountering in Buenos Aires to the capital of the Mexican republic and suggested that the newspaper proprietors there take a similar stand. And they did. They issued a bulletin which said:

"We, the editors who defend ourselves against unjustified attacks, the managers of 'Companias Editoriales Mexicanas, El Heraldo de Mexico, El Excelsior, El Democrata, El Nacional, A. B. C., and El Universal, declare that we will not recognize groups of the so called Newspaper Union of Workingmen and Lynotipographic Union," because their organizations have failed to recognize there just obligations, quitting their work without any just grievance but only because of a general strike.

"We consider this an act of hostility for which we are not responsible and we have decided that from now on, we will not negotiate with any delegation from the so-called union, but will suspend publication of all our newspapers until all our departments are filled by individual contract.

"We agree that in these contracts we will establish the same scale of wages and the same rules shall apply for the operation of workshops of all newspaper workshops.

"We agree that none of us will print a newspaper until all are in a position to do so."

That pronunciamento ended the newspaper strike in Mexico City. The latest cablegrams from Buenos Aires indicate that the strike there will soon be ended as the result of similar tactics.

PUT THE KEYSTONE STATE IN YOUR PYRAMID OF MARKETS!

Pennsylvania newspapers measure up to Pennsylvania standards of achievement in every line of endeavor—and that is high praise!

For the Keystone State is a vast industrial community, in which are produced on a large scale commodities needed by the people of all the States and of all progressive countries. It is a wage-paying and a wage-earning State, inhospitable to drones and offering a cordial hand-clasp to every capable worker.

Pennsylvanians are sophisticated. They know good products—and buy them. They demand good newspapers—and get them.

This great commonwealth offers an excellent trial territory to any advertiser who seeks to test the appeal of his commodity to Americans of the substantial, discerning kind.

The newspapers named below present an admirable try-out list. They are leaders in their fields—newspapers of prestige and influence, thriving on reader-confidence. Through a campaign in their columns, linked up with dealer distribution, you may win a lasting foothold in the great Keystone Market. And the initial expense in thus entering one of the richest markets in the world is, as shown by the line rates quoted, moderate indeed!

Pennsylvanians are ABLE TO BUY—and if your product is one that prosperous and progressive people SHOULD BE INTERESTED IN you will find them quickly responsive!

THE NEW YORK GLOBE

Sells its advertising space as a commodity at the same rate, local or foreign, for the same service.

The Globe believes that the advertiser is best served by employing the service of a competent advertising agent, and accepts no order direct from new advertisers at net rate for less than 50,000 lines of space.

By thus protecting the advertising agent in his business. The Globe is confident that it is fostering the best interests of the industry of advertising for best service to the advertiser.

While other metropolitan newspapers adhere to pre-war conditions of 10 per cent. commission to agents when it costs them 11 and 12 per cent. to do business, The Globe on Nov. 1, 1918, increased its commission allowance to 15 per cent. and 2 per cent. cash discount.

SATURDAY BARGAIN RATE

To convince advertisers of the productive value of general advertising in its Saturday issues, The Globe recently established a special flat rate of 25 cents a line for Saturday only. This rate applies only to general business run of paper and not to any advertising listed under Classification Section No. 2 of the current rate card of The Globe.

BLAZING THE TRAIL FOR THE A. B. C.

Less than ten years ago the buyer of newspaper circulation often paid for some mythical thing. What or where it was he had no way of definitely determining. Despite the efforts of a few forward-looking publishers who told the truth about their circulations, advertisers were helpless in the hands of the many publishers who met the questions of circulation with generalities.

Today the newspaper advertiser may know the circulation he is paying for—know to the fraction of a cent the cost of reaching every reader.

Thanks to the A. B. C.

In those Dark Ages of newspaper advertising, years before the Audit Bureau of Circulations was thought of, The Chicago Daily News blazed the trail for such an organization.

The Daily News was the first newspaper in America to publish its circulation figures day by day and never omit them. For over forty-two years the circulation for each month has appeared at the head of its editorial columns.

There is no secret, no "camouflage" here. These figures have never been "averages"—they have always been exact. They show losses as well as gains; the number of papers actually sold as well as the number printed.

This open policy—the germ from which the present efficient and trusted A. B. C. sprang—has firmly intrenched The Chicago Daily News in the confidence of advertisers generally.

The Daily News not only permits but invites examination of its circulation books.

and advertising in the daily newspapers (the greatest potential business building force) is the logical and practical method of promoting the market.

Canadians flock to see motion picture films starring United States actors and actresses in scenarios prepared by United States playwrights for United States audiences.

Canadians patronize baseball games regardless of the fact that nearly all the professionals have been recruited from the United States.

For post-graduate courses thousands of Canadians attend United States universities. International conventions are the vogue. Canadian public men take their cue in no small measure from the United States.

Canadians promptly adopt the newest United States slang. They look to New York as the commercial center of the continent.

New York or Chicago experts are imported by Canadian municipalities to advise on transportation and other questions.

Canadian exporters to a very large extent ship their products to overseas markets via New York or other United States ports.

Large quantities of Canadian commodities reach foreign destinations as products of the United States, and are so recorded in official trade statistics.

Canadians respond just as readily to advertising as do the citizens of the United States, and they have just as great a respect and confidence in their home newspapers.

The following newspapers cover the most populous portion of the Dominion and would be pleased to supply information about local marketing conditions in the area reached by their circulations.

How to Get More Revenue from Your Local Advertising

Twenty leading newspapers paid GREIG & WARD, Inc., more money for promotion service for the year ending April 1st, 1919, than all the member-newspapers in the United States paid the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A. during the same time for the same purpose.

THE men in the Greig & Ward, Inc., organization who prepare its newspaper-promotion copy know their business, and fairly may be called "specialists" in the difficult field in which they are working.

CARLISLE N. GREIG is recognized as one of the country's leading copy-writers and advertising counselors. In newspaper publishing and promotion, Mr. Greig occupies a unique position, having been employed in an executive capacity by five of the most celebrated newspaper publishers in the world.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT employed Mr. Greig in Paris in an advisory capacity and later (1916) as Advertising Counsel of the "New York Herald."

JOSEPH PULITZER employed Mr. Greig as Advertising Manager of the "New York World."

C. ARTHUR PEARSON—now Sir Arthur Pearson—employed Mr. Greig as business advisor of the "Daily Express" and C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST employed Mr. Greig as Advertising Counsel to his New York and Chicago newspapers (1917-18).

FRANK LLOYD, Managing Director of "Lloyd's Weekly" and "Daily Chronicle," London, sold the Encyclopædic Dictionary in Great Britain in partnership with Mr. Greig and with copy prepared by the latter.

ALBEE SMITH, Jr., Vice-President of Greig & Ward, Inc., is now devoting his unquestioned talent to the furtherance of our newspaper promotion service. Mr. Smith was Chairman Publicity Committee, Chicago and Cook County, on Fourth Liberty Loan—also directed special 1917 Canning Campaign at Washington, D. C., for Secretary of Agriculture; Manager of the Railway News Bureau, Chicago, organized in connection with the "Railway Age" by 25 leading railroads; Railroad Editor, N. Y. Evening Post, and Newspaper Editorial Department work in Chicago, Springfield Legislative Correspondence, with N. Y. Sun at Washington, D. C.

Mr. Smith has been associated with leading advertising agencies in New York and Chicago and has prepared copy for American Tobacco Co., United Cigar Stores, United Drug, Regal Shoe, Stewart-Warner Speedometer, and other leading national accounts. A convincing writer and an experienced counselor, Mr. Smith's contribution to any newspaper's promotion is bound to be of constructive value and free from theory.

IRWIN SPEAR writes the kind of copy that "starts something"—in this case the reader is induced to read and believe the advertisements in a newspaper and the advertisement itself is given a double power.

Whenever the need arises for special copy, the best advertisement writers available (other than those named) are specially engaged. GREIG & WARD, Inc., already has enjoyed the valued co-operation of these nationally famous business-writers:

Prof. George B. Hotchkiss, School of Commerce, New York University; Paul E. Faust, of Mallory, Mitchell & Faust, Chicago; F. R. Feland, of George Batten Company, New York; Richard A. Foley, Foley Advertising Agency, Philadelphia; James Howard Kehler, Chicago; J. H. Collins, Washington, D. C.; J. J. Greisinger, Federal Advertising Agency, New York; J. D. Adams, Corman Advertising Agency, New York, and Wilbur D. Nesbit, Vice-President of Wm. H. Rankin Co., Chicago.

The newspapers mentioned in the center of this page—and others—have invested several hundred thousand dollars of high-priced space to display advertising promotion-copy prepared for them by Greig & Ward, Inc. We are in our third year with some of them—and now we want to work for you.

SIXTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF AUDIT BUREAU NOW IN SESSION MARKS NOTABLE PROGRESS

ANNOUNCE NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS

Chicago Tribune Publishers Will Print Morning Daily Pictorial Similar to London Graphic Dailies, Starting July—To Use Mail Plant

Formal announcement is made that a new venture in American newspaperdom is scheduled for July 1, or thereabouts, when the Chicago Tribune Company, operating as a New York corporation under the name of the News Syndicate Co., Inc., with headquarters at the Evening Mail Building at 25 City Hall Place, will begin publication of a 6-day daily illustrated paper, to be known as the Illustrated Daily News, similar in style and make-up to the London Daily Graphic and the London Daily Mirror.

It will be printed on the New York Evening Mail presses at night and will appear on the news stands early in the morning with the other New York City morning newspapers. It will be sold for 2 cents. Arthur Clarke, one of the best known newspaper men in England, will be managing editor, and George Utassy, formerly general manager of the Hearst magazines, will be publisher and general manager.

Officer Personnel

The president of the corporation is J. M. Patterson and the vice-president, R. R. McCormick. They are the publishers and co-editors of the Chicago Tribune. The second vice-president is William B. Field, who is eastern business representative of the Chicago Tribune.

The new publication, which may be duplicated in other cities of the United States when its success in New York City is assured, will consist principally of illustrations of events of world-wide interest, but will also contain many of the special news, literary and comic features which have made the Chicago Tribune famous and distinctive.

Contributions of Bert Leston Taylor, who writes the "Line O' Type or Two" column for the Tribune; of Arthur Henning, in charge of the Tribune's Washington staff, and of Jack Lait, the Tribune's sports writer, will be received by telegraph for every issue. There will also be articles by Dr. W. A. Evans, who for many years has had a column in the Tribune on "How to Keep Well."

George McCutcheon's cartoons, which have been a big feature of the Chicago Tribune and have helped to gain for it international fame, will appear in the new paper regularly and another regular contributor will be the novelist, Frederick Upperthorn. His latest detective story, which will be continued from day

A. B. C. Has, Within Period of Five Years, Achieved "the Impossible" in Work of Affording to Advertisers Definite and Indisputable Information on Circulations—Considering New By-Laws

THE Sixth Annual Convention of the Audit Bureau of Circulations takes place at the Hotel LaSalle, Chicago, today and tomorrow. The event commemorates the fifth anniversary of the organization.

Divisional committee meetings will fill in the first day, and the convention sessions proper will open on Friday morning. The chief business before the convention will be the consideration and ratification of the new constitution and by-laws, formulated as a result of the experience of five years in meeting the service needs of the membership. These revisions, clarifying the existing rules and regulations of the Bureau, have met with the approval of the Board of Directors and of a majority of Class A members.

Up for Ratification by Membership

Ratification by the convention and by the new Board of Directors—which will include the directors to be elected at this annual convention—will serve to give full force and effect to the revisions.

Advance indications are for a large attendance of members. It is felt that the experimental period in the history of the Bureau is now definitely ended, and that the great service-enterprise will date its maximum usefulness from this formal closing of the first five-year period of its life.

Banquet Big Feature

The dinner to be given on Friday evening, it is already assured, will mark impressively the importance of the organization and the high status it has attained as a factor in the great business of buying and selling advertising. Nellie Bly, famous newspaper woman of twenty-five years ago, remembered for her sensational globe-circling stunt under the auspices of the New York World, will be a speaker at the banquet and will describe her most thrilling experiences as a newspaper correspondent. Other speakers will be Dr. Gunsaulus, author and lecturer, and Harry F. Atwood, an attorney, who will discuss Bolshevism.

A Year of Real Progress

The story of the Bureau's work during the past year, which will be told fully in the report of the Board of Directors, is one affording no small measure of satisfaction to the Managing Director, Stanley Clague and to all those whose unselfish cooperation with him has made the record of the year so gratifying.

Of the men who have shared with Mr. Clague the burden of Bureau service the directors are entitled to chief honors. Their work has been wholly

P. O. WANTS REVIEWS CHARGED AS ADS

N. Y. Publishers Contest Opinion and Threaten Court Proceedings If Order Is Invoked—Might Block Stock Quotations

All newspapers in the United States that print reading matter not considered by them to be advertising, but which contains mention of prices asked for commodities such as book reviews, stock reports, and food quotations, seemingly are affected by a new ruling of the Post Office Department, which classifies such reading matter as advertising.

This latest piece of news from Postmaster General Burleson's headquarters, which, if carried into effect, means increased postage on newspapers, under the Burleson postal zone law, has just been received by the Publishers Association of New York.

Seems to Have General Application

It applies specifically, according to a letter from the head of the Division of Classification of the Post Office Department, to book reviews in which prices are mentioned, but it is construed by legal counsel for the New York City publishers to have a general application to all newspapers of the country operating under the second class mail provisions and to all news items they may print, mentioning prices.

The New York City publishers have protested to the Post Office Department against the enforcement of the new ruling and there is a strong probability that if its enforcement is attempted, this will be fought to a finish in the United States courts, on application for an injunction against Postmaster General Burleson and the Post Office Department.

If such an injunction is sought, it likely will be on the plea that the new ruling of the Burleson regime is in constraint of the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press.

The attitude of the New York City publishers is that, while the additional postage expense to which they and other publishers would be put because of the new ruling would be comparatively trivial if it were applied only to book reviews, the ruling logically would have a wide application and would be an intolerable restraint on newspaper policy and precedent.

What Is Advertising?

In fact, it would seem from a letter transmitted by the bureau of classification to the New York City publishers from the Post Office Department that the Department is prepared to extend the scope of its new ruling indefinitely.

FIGHTING FOR FREE PRESS IN CANADA

Bolshevik Strike Committee Attempts to Censor News at Vancouver—Young Publisher of Sun Given Fight—Newspapers Suspend

One of the most extraordinary social and economic upheavals that has ever occurred on this continent, involving newspapers in a strange way, is today the plague of the great Canadian cities of Vancouver and Winnipeg.

News of the amazing strike, savoring of the desperation of Bolshevism and which has palsied industry in those cities while threatening the social order so radically as to amount almost to complete defiance of the constitutional scheme of government, was brought to New York during the past week by

R. J. Cromie.

R. J. Cromie, the brilliant young owner and publisher of the Vancouver Daily Sun, a morning and Sunday newspaper.

Mr. Cromie, who is one of the youngest of the publishers of great newspapers either in Canada or the United States, through diligent and intelligent effort has succeeded in a comparatively short time in revivifying and making both popular and profitable a newspaper which, though 35 years old, had for years been ineffective.

Enter Bolshevism

Radicalism, so like the doctrine of the dictators of Russia as fairly to be called Bolshevism, now steps in and says to this young man that he may not conduct his newspaper according to the dictates of his principles either in the matter of the economic conditions of his employes or, indeed, in the editorial policy.

A censor of news, selected from the mechanical forces of the Sun, was placed by a strike committee at a desk in the editorial offices of not only the Sun, but of the Province and the World, the remaining two important daily newspapers of Vancouver, with instructions to edit the news of the strike to conform to the preconceived ideas of the strike committee and all copy going to the composing room required to bear the "O.K." of this alien-selected "editor" before the mechanical staff would put the matter into type and carry it through the printing processes to newspaper form.

This radical action fell suddenly upon the newspapers of Vancouver. To prevent a strike and to function with discretion as the better part of valor, the editors of the Sun permitted the censor to "sit in" on two editions. This was also allowed by the editors of the Province and the World. In the meantime Mr. Cromie prepared a statement carrying the case to the readers of the Sun.

He insisted upon first-page publication of this document. The issues were therein made definite. The matter was put straight to public opinion as to whether the time had come when a newspaper publisher must submit to class censorship and thereby surrender his individual rights as well as the whole scheme of press liberty, or be put out of business by a small minority of the citizens of Vancouver, who were revolting against the economic system which working conditions in that city. It must be remembered that only about 5,000 people constituted the ranks of the strikers out of a population of more than 125,000.

Cromie's Stand

Publication of this appeal to the public was obtained by Mr. Cromie's insistence. Of course, he knew he would rather that his newspaper plant should lie torn down by the strikers around the heads of the staff than that the news of the strike or any other topic should be dictated by a self-constituted and irresponsible censorship.

He told the strikers flatly that he would suspend publication, if necessary, rather than submit.

Of course, public opinion swayed in favor of the newspapers when the facts were made known in the first statement which Mr. Cromie forced the "censor" to pass.

The Province and the World proprietors also stood their ground the next day. This solidarity seemed to frighten the strike committee off, but relief was only temporary.

On Saturday, June 14, about a week later, the printers went on strike, tying up the plants. The newspapers stood stoutly on the principle that they would prefer suspension of publication to censorship and that was and is the only issue involved.

A Mimeograph Newspaper

The Sun, unable to operate with its plant, is now coming out with one page printed on a mimeographing machine. Many of the Sun's advertisers are insisting upon paying for their regular daily space notwithstanding inability to print it. This information reached Editor & Publisher yesterday by mail.

The strike committee also extends to the telegraph wires and the fate of the other newspapers in Vancouver as well as the fate of the other newspapers at Winnipeg is not definitely known at the hour of writing. At last accounts the Winnipeg papers were not being published. Mr. Cromie left New York last Saturday.

On June 6, the day following the attempt to censor the Sun, that newspaper published the following statement on page one:

> Matters regarding the strike and all other matters of public importance will continue to be published in The Vancouver Daily Sun, and the editorial being removed by the representatives of the typographical union, will be left entirely to the public.
> "The Typographical Union has disclaimed any intention of censorship, intended to establish a censorship, and has preferred the explanation that the difficulty between itself and the newspapers during the past few days was entirely due to a misunderstanding.
> "Be that as it may, The Vancouver Daily Sun regards such a misunderstanding of yesterday that its own editorial staff will continue to have the right to declare as to what news and editorial comment shall or shall not appear in its columns.
> "In this connection the following, sent by President V. T. U. 226, has handed to The Sun, and is conveyed that it be published, the following document:

Statement by Union President

> "Realizing that a serious misunderstanding has taken place due to the attitude of Vancouver Typographical Union 226 with regard to the censorship placed on the daily issue of Vancouver in connection with the present labor troubles, I have requested the permission of the publication of the following statement:
> "Owing to the action of the Executive of Vancouver Typographical Union No. 226 in placing a censor over the editorial columns of the daily press in the matter of the publication of news articles published in The Daily Sun and the Daily Province of yesterday's papers, a misunderstanding of difficulty has occurred, as no information during a period such as that through which we are passing at this time, should be taken to mean that the reports appearing in the press would in any degree be prejudicial to the general resolution was passed at a recent meeting of Local Union 226, to the effect that no censorship whatsoever and can hardly be construed as establishing a censorship, but rather as a precaution to be taken to ensure the publication of reliable and unbiased reports, something which I am sure the press as well as the union men of the city are equally anxious to secure.
> "The resolution reads:
> "'That, for the duration of the present strike, the president, who shall give his whole time to the work, and a representative each of the Province, The Vancouver Sun and the Sunrise Publishing Co., Ltd., shall constitute a committee to censor the publication of the Province, The Sun and the Sunrise, and that all other publications be prevented; and that the newspapers be urged to publish reports submitted by same.'

NAVY TO FOLLOW LEAD OF ARMY IN POLICY OF USING PAID ADVERTISING TO STIMULATE ENLISTMENT

Secretary Daniels Assures EDITOR & PUBLISHER That Newspaper Space Will Be Used in Recruiting Campaign Early in Fiscal Year

WASHINGTON, June 17.—The Navy is not first in everything. It has permitted the War Department to beat it to recognition of the principle of paid newspaper advertising as an essential part of any recruiting campaign, but it ran a close second.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels assured EDITOR & PUBLISHER that paid newspaper advertising will be part of the recruiting campaign of the Navy, to be undertaken early in the new fiscal year. He declared the Bureau of Navigation has been instructed by him to include an estimate for newspaper avertising in the appropriation asked of Congress for recruiting.

The Navy bill, as it passed the House yesterday, carried a total of $9,000,000 for recruiting and transportation of enlisted men to original stations. This was one of the items in the bill which the Naval Affairs Committee did not reduce, but even at the figure it does not appear likely that any considerable amount of newspaper advertising can be undertaken by the Navy Department, without diversion of funds from other purposes.

Naval authorities who testified before the House Committee admitted that they are to be forced to meet the strongest kind of competition from the Army in the matter of securing recruits. The Army will have a large field organization while the Navy will have to depend upon retired officers, the provisions of the pending bill making it necessary to reduce personnel in every possible manner.

Efforts are being made, therefore, to have Secretary Daniels depend very largely on newspaper advertising to obtain recruits, the Navy having a slogan which would lend itself to an attractive newspaper campaign. It is "A cruise in the Navy is a liberal education."

Secretary Daniels having given his approval to the principle of newspaper advertising, it remains for the officers of the Bureau of Navigation to prepare their plans to that end, and the circumstances now are such that what might have been intended originally as a side-line of the general campaign will develop into the feature.

Publication of this appeal to the public was obtained by Mr. Cromie's insistence. Of course, he knew he would rather that his newspaper plant should lie torn down by the strikers around the heads of the staff than that the news of the strike or any other topic should be dictated by a self-constituted and irresponsible censorship.

He told the strikers flatly that he would suspend publication, if necessary, rather than submit.

Of course, public opinion swayed in favor of the newspapers when the facts were made known in the first statement which Mr. Cromie forced the "censor" to pass.

The Province and the World proprietors also stood their ground the next day. This solidarity seemed to frighten the strike committee off, but relief was only temporary.

On Saturday, June 14, about a week later, the printers went on strike, tying up the plants. The newspapers stood stoutly on the principle that they would prefer suspension of publication to censorship and that was and is the only issue involved.

A Mimeograph Newspaper

The Sun, unable to operate with its plant, is now coming out with one page printed on a mimeographing machine. Many of the Sun's advertisers are insisting upon paying for their regular daily space notwithstanding inability to print it. This information reached Editor & Publisher yesterday by mail.

The strike committee also extends to the telegraph wires and the fate of the other newspapers in Vancouver as well as the fate of the other newspapers at Winnipeg is not definitely known at the hour of writing. At last accounts the Winnipeg papers were not being published. Mr. Cromie left New York last Saturday.

On June 6, the day following the attempt to censor the Sun, that newspaper published the following statement on page one:

> Matters regarding the strike and all other matters of public importance will continue to be published in The Vancouver Daily Sun, and the editorial being removed by the representatives of the typographical union, will be left entirely to the public.
> "The Typographical Union has disclaimed any intention of censorship, intended to establish a censorship, and has preferred the explanation that the difficulty between itself and the newspapers during the past few days was entirely due to a misunderstanding.
> "Be that as it may, The Vancouver Daily Sun regards such a misunderstanding of yesterday that its own editorial staff will continue to have the right to declare as to what news and editorial comment shall or shall not appear in its columns.
> "In this connection the following, sent by President V. T. U. 226, has handed to The Sun, and is conveyed that it be published, the following document:

Statement by Union President

> "Realizing that a serious misunderstanding has taken place due to the attitude of Vancouver Typographical Union 226 with regard to the censorship placed on the daily issue of Vancouver in connection with the present labor troubles, I have requested the permission of the publication of the following statement:
> "Owing to the action of the Executive of Vancouver Typographical Union No. 226 in placing a censor over the editorial columns of the daily press in the matter of the publication of news articles published in The Daily Sun and the Daily Province of yesterday's papers, a misunderstanding of difficulty has occurred, as no information during a period such as that through which we are passing at this time, should be taken to mean that the reports appearing in the press would in any degree be prejudicial to the general resolution was passed at a recent meeting of Local Union 226, to the effect that no censorship whatsoever and can hardly be construed as establishing a censorship, but rather as a precaution to be taken to ensure the publication of reliable and unbiased reports, something which I am sure the press as well as the union men of the city are equally anxious to secure.
> "The resolution reads:
> "'That, for the duration of the present strike, the president, who shall give his whole time to the work, and a representative each of the Province, The Vancouver Sun and the Sunrise Publishing Co., Ltd., shall constitute a committee to censor the publication of the Province, The Sun and the Sunrise, and that all other publications be prevented; and that the newspapers be urged to publish reports submitted by same.'

"While accepting the explanation of the president of the Typographical Union that the dispute was caused by a misapprehension, The Sun points out that for two nights strike news appearing in this paper was subjected to censor ship by members of the Typographical Union.

"The Sun will always do its best to get the news accurately and to be fair to all persons or interests it may have occasion to mention. But it will submit to no dictation from anybody as to what it is to print or to omit.

"The statement published above in order that our subscribers may know that the danger of our paper being compelled to cease publication because of a dispute with the Typographical Union is past."

Despite the lame explanation of the union that its positive control of news was not a "censorship," the fact remains undisputed that men from the mechanical forces of the three Vancouver newspapers did present themselves to the editors of the newspapers and demand and for two days did obtain the right to "O.K." editorial matter before it was sent to the composing room, the threat being that unless such vise by this censor was secured the printers would not handle the copy.

What Situation Portends

In discussing the situation in general Mr. Cromie, to whose courageous stand the publishing world owes acknowledgment as a valiant defender, gave the following interview to Editor & Publisher:

"This is our taste of Bolshevism. It is undisguised in Winnipeg and Vancouver. The situation is not understood in the East of your country. But unless the underlying causes of these ugly symptoms of a social disorder are met with something more than discussion I am perfectly confident that you will taste of it as we are.

"Perhaps the time has come when a minority of the working men of a city can bind them-selves together in a strike and confiscate the responsibilities and the property of a newspaper publisher. That is the issue in Vancouver. I do not concede that that time has arrived or that the method is in any way just or fair. Therefore, I am fighting this battle to the best of my ability. I may crash and lose that which I have worked pretty hard to uphold. That is the test.

"I do not for an instant lose faith in the integrity of the average man and I do not believe that public opinion will long sustain the violent and unjustified conduct of the strikers at Vancouver, nor do I expect that the people of this continent will accept Bolshevism, which is oppression through class dictatorship just as much as tyranny as any oppression by any other class.

Meet it Fairly

"I fully recognize the fact that it was not a weak or vacillating spirit which built up the West. Our people are inclined to be positive in nature. There is a deep-seated radicalism among a minority. In their own interest the unions must be shown that they are working along mistaken lines. No satisfactory adjustment can be had through meeting violence with violence, or by attempting merely to suppress the desires of these striking people. I believe the Bolsheviki and their supposed objects are unworthy and that a process of real investigation will so demonstrate the fact to them. In the respect upon them in respect to such actions as an attempt to censor the news, which, of course, if effective, would mean that I would enter with them into a new social order of the public, for we know that newspaper publishing on the basis of such a censorship would mean that only a biased and partisan report could be made to the readers of the newspaper permitting such a system.

"Speaking generally, it is my thought that these manifestations of Bolshevism, if they are to be defeated and if our

I. C. M. A. PUTS NEWSBOY WELFARE WORK FIRST ON 1920 PROGRAM

St. Louis Wins Next Convention—McKernan, Argue, Lincoln and Eyster Elected Officers—Publishers Praise Association's Work and Urge Affiliation with A. N. P. A.

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 13.—Newsboy welfare was the outstanding theme of discussion at the final sessions of the 21st annual convention of the International Circulation Managers' Association, which closed here yesterday. The growing desire of well meaning women of the country to prevent boys under sixteen years of age from selling newspapers on the street and legislation in various States—all tending toward a curtailment of circulations—testified to the C. M. A. members to action.

Circulation managers from many cities reported menacing activities in their communities and brought evidence of court and legislative activities that menace their work. It all served to accentuate that welfare societies mean to pursue their work and that it remains for the newspaper circulation managers to do their part and throw protection around their boys—moral and physical.

Canvass of Welfare Ideas Taken Among Members

It was unanimously agreed that every circulation manager, if for nothing else than fairness to his newspaper, must enter seriously into welfare work.

W. L. Argue, 1st Vice-President I. C. M. A.

The Association made a complete canvass of the members for ideas on the best means of meeting the situation, and officers will give their immediate attention to developing them to the best possible advantages of all members.

Newly elected directors are: M. D. Treble, Buffalo Times; Jack Crawford, Chicago American; William Elder, Toronto Telegram.

Two Amendments to By-Laws

St. Louis was selected as the 1920 meeting place on the unanimous invitation of the Publishers' Association of St. Louis, which was presented by A. G. Lincoln. Columbus, Ga., was a serious contender, but the interest in the I. C. M. A. expressed by the newspaper publishers bore most weight.

The following amendments were made to the by-laws:

New Section to Article 3, being Section C. All Past Presidents of this Association in good standing shall constitute a special Committee to be known as an Advisory Committee. They are to attend the meetings of the Executive Committee, and in have voice, without vote, in the deliberations of the Executive Committee, and to act in an advisory capacity for the general good of the I. C. M. A.

Amendment to Article 5—Section 6.

In the event of the incumbency Treasurer retiring as Circulation-Manager of a newspaper, he shall notify the Executive Committee and the President will notify the Board of Directors.

The Buffalo convention was the largest in the history of the I. C. M. A.

Publishers Praise I. C. M. A.

The recognition the I. C. M. A. has won for itself from the newspaper publishers was impressed by a luncheon given by the members of the publishers of the Buffalo newspapers. James McKernan was toastmaster, and at his request each of the hosts made a short address.

Mr. McKernan announced that the Courier and Enquirer would not be represented because of illness in the family of William J. Conners, Jr., who was to have been present.

E. J. McCone, general manager of the Buffalo Commercial was the first speaker called upon. He welcomed the circulators to any assistance that he could give them to further their pleasure and comfort during the remainder of their stay in Buffalo, and said that he was confident that in coming here they had picked out the best summer convention city in the country and hoped that they would return another year.

E. H. Butler, publisher of the News, who was next called on, seconded the welcome which Mr. McCone had extended to the circulators and expressed his gratification at the splendid part a large number of them had played in the deliberations of the present.

A. G. Lincoln, 3d Vice-president I. C. M. A.

"There has been too little co-operation between the publishers and circulation department of the newspapers in general in the past," said Mr. Butler, "not in Buffalo, for I am sure that the publishers here take too deep an interest in their organizations to neglect any department of them. But nationally that end of the game has been neglected by publishers.

Favors A. N. P. A. Affiliation

"The American Newspaper Publishers' Association has standing committees relative to any and every branch of the business with this exception, and I will do my best to further the establishment of such a committee for the alleviation of your problems. I also wish that you would allow an associate membership to your organization for publishers to be created so that we can become more intimate, and that the younger publishers especially may benefit by attending your conventions."

In introducing Norman E. Mack, editor and proprietor of the Times, Mr. McKernan said that when the first meeting of the state association of circulators was held in Buffalo, attended by about 25 members, Mr. Mack had extended every encouragement to the younger organization, and had done much to assist it.

Mack Started as Circulator!

"I was once a circulation manager myself," said Mr. Mack, "and I was such a poor one that ever since I have a profound respect for that end of the newspaper business. I believe that it requires more ability to be a good circulation manager than to be an editor or a publisher either. Without a good one almost every newspaper would fail. Without circulation advertising cannot be obtained, and the paper cannot continue.

"We are all dependent on each other, however. There is too much talk concerning the differences of capital and labor at the present, which I hope will not continue. Without the assistance of the working man, the capitalists, or the man with intelligent to get money, even if he has none, could not push his projects.

"It is with such organizations as yours that employees prove their loyalty to themselves and their employers, and I wish your organization, as I always did, every possible success, and I join with Mr. Butler and Mr. McCone in extending to you a most cordial welcome."

Accepting the presidency, Mr. McKernan said:

President McKernan's Inaugural

"I thank you for the great honor you have bestowed upon me and I will do my best to promote the interests of our organization during my term of office. It is a wonderful feeling of satisfaction that comes to me to have been selected to preside over this organization.

"I have never seen a more interested or earnest body of men and it is indeed a great privilege to serve you as presiding officer.

"In accepting this office I am not unmindful of the responsibility that goes with it and the enviable records made by my predecessors. I intend to do my utmost to continue this good work and in this, as indeed in all other matters, I seek your hearty co-operation. If each member would do just a little work for our organization the accomplishments would be assured beyond any doubt; suppose each and every one of us pledge ourselves to bring at least one new member into the I. C. M. A. during the coming year.

"Surely this is not a great or hopeless task and if we could succeed in a membership of five hundred, we would have over a thousand members. We ought to have at least that number and we will have if each member acts on this suggestion.

"In closing me to this office you have given me a distinction which I seldom fail to the lot of any circulation manager and I must admit that I am greatly honored by it.

"Through a set of circumstances, my present position in circulation managers' associations is unique. I have been presiding officer of three—the New York City Circulation Managers' Association, the New York State Circulation Managers' Association and last, but not least, the International Circulation Managers' Association.

"Surely no circulation manager could ask for greater honors and I think under the circumstances, I can be pardoned for feeling elated over the distinction bestowed in me by those whom it is my great pleasure and privilege to count as friends. I am proud to be one of my duties as Circulation Manager of that great newspaper, the New York World.

"Gentlemen, I thank you and in closing I urge each of you to give to your newly elected officers and to the chairmen of the various committees the hearty co-operation that they are entitled to and which you yourselves would expect under the same conditions."

SIDELIGHTS OF I. C. M. A.

The spirit of the members of the I. C. M. A., was fully manifested when Clarence Eyster, of the Peoria Star was elected secretary-treasurer. No one had Mr. Eyster been declared elected, than Jack Annenburg of the Albany Knickerbocker Press, who had been his closest rival, congratulated him and assured him of his help and co-operation at all times. That is one of the reasons why the I. C. M. A. has grown from a little gathering of thirteen members to an international organization of nearly five hundred, and with an influence second to none in the newspaper field.

For the first time in four years H. H. Friis of the El Paso (Tex.) Herald didn't get the honor of traveling the greatest distance to attend the convention. This year that honor was divided by his two "neighbors," Oliver King of the Republican, and Edwin Powell of the Gazette, both of Phoenix, Ariz.

"Bill" Page of the Columbus (Ga.) Ledger made a spirited fight for the 1920 convention. In order to show the kind of "peaches" they have in his town, unselfish and has called for personal sacrifice on their parts. These men, whose terms expire at this time and whose successors will be elected, are: L. B. Jones, W. Laughlin, Arthur W. Cushing, F. R. Davis, L. L. King, F. H. Squier, B. H. Bramble, A. W. Erickson, P. V. Troup, W. A. Strong, L. a Fayette Young, Jr. (resigned), F. W. Stone, William A. Whitney and E. R. Shaw. It is expected that most of these men will be persuaded to accept re-election.

SIXTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE AUDIT BUREAU

W. H. Fisher, Office Manager.

The fiscal year, ended April 30, 1919, served to bring to the Bureau an increased membership—despite mergers and natural losses; to see the work placed on a sound financial basis; and, for the first time, to find the service of the auditors firmly established on a field schedule. All audits are now on a twelve-month basis.

During the fiscal year 1113 audits were released, an average of over 92 audits a month, as compared with an average of 78 audits per month last year and 54 of the previous year. As an average of 89 audits per month will give an annual audit to all publisher-members, it will be seen that during the year just closed the Bureau has overtaken its audit indebtedness of previous years and is in a position to maintain an annual audit standard in the future. All audits have been made at an average of 45 days within the dues applicable to such audits.

A new form of publisher's statement has been adopted. A printed form has been arranged for, doing away with the duplicating process heretofore used. Prompt releases under this new plan will be assured from November 1.

Release of audits, after their receipt in the offices of the Bureau, have been established on an average basis of fifteen days.

Publisher-Membership More Valuable

Promotional and advertising campaigns have been carried on within the past six months which have materially increased the value of publisher-membership in the Bureau.

Substantial service to the Government has been rendered by the Bureau, through investigations made at the request of the War Industries Board. The former chairman of the Pulp and Paper Division of that Board, Thomas L. Donnelly, has written to the Bureau an appreciation of its cooperation in eliminating waste of paper during the last months of the war.

The financial report shows that on April 30, the Bureau had an available balance of $44,966.89, placing it in a position to enter on its work more effectively than ever before.

The auditing force now numbers thirty-six field men and eight office auditors, in addition to the chief auditor, E. W. Chandler. This force has been maintained at full strength throughout the year. At the present time there are no overdue audits, with a few exceptions in which the delays are due to reasons beyond the control of the Bureau.

Twenty-three members have been dropped; there have been ten consolidations, two publications discontinued, three ancies discontinued, thirty-four resignations, eighteen applications rejected. In spite of these reductions the total membership is now 1,294 as against 1,270 one year ago. It is expected that the convention date will find the membership a round thirteen hundred.

By-Law Revisions Not Drastic

The by-law revisions proposed for ratification contain no radical departures from the existing ones. The aim has been to clarify the rules and regulations and comply with necessary legal requirements. No changes in rates are involved with the exception of those specifically determining the standing of newspapers publishing morning and evening editions under one ownership. This matter is urged as one for full discussion in the divisional meetings and in the convention.

L. J. Delaney, Manager N. Y. Office.

The revisions proposed will make it possible for advertisers to analyze more fully than heretofore circulation data. The Bureau does not claim to afford such information as to circulations as will enable an advertiser to weigh completely the element of quality, but it does afford definite information as to quantity and as to how that quantity has been obtained. This enables the advertiser to judge for himself as to quality. It is expected that great advances may yet be made in the matter of throwing additional light upon quality of circulation, and the convention will have before it for consideration suggestions bearing upon this angle of the Bureau service.

Close Co-operation with A. N. A.

For years the Association of National Advertisers has considered the solution of the circulation verification problem as of prime importance. The circulation committee of that association has been in close touch with the work of the Bureau during the past year; and, at the semi-annual meeting last month the decision was made that hereafter the A. N. A. will rely fully upon the audit reports of the A. B. C. The two associations are in close touch and cooperate with mutual profit. The problems encountered are those common to both.

Closer cooperation has also been established between the Bureau and the American Association of Advertising Agencies. It is stated that the agencies now rely upon the audit reports of the Bureau as the final authority on circulations.

The balance sheet of the A. B. C. shows an investment of $15,000 in Liberty Bonds. There is shown in the balance sheet an excess of earnings over expenses for the year amounting to $9,022.12.

Members in attendance at the convention have been urged to make the new home of the Bureau—on the fourth and fifth floors of the Century Building—their headquarters. The invitation has been extended to them to become better acquainted with the actual operations of the Bureau and with those who have charge of the work in the home office.

The by-laws proposed are as follows:

VIEW OF "A. B. C.'s GENERAL OFFICES IN CHICAGO.

I.—OBJECTS.

The objects of the Audit Bureau of Circulations shall be to issue standardized statements of the circulation of publisher members; to verify the figures shown in these statements by auditor's examinations of any and all records considered by the Bureau to be necessary; and to disseminate data for the benefit of advertisers, advertising agents and publishers.

II.—MEMBERSHIP.

1. Any advertiser, advertising agent or publisher may be admitted to membership by signing an agreement to abide by the By-Laws, Rules and Regulations of the Bureau and all amendments that may in due form be made thereto, and whose application for membership is approved by at least seven affirmative votes in the Board of Directors.

2. There shall be six classes of membership as follows:

Class A—Advertisers.

MEMBERS OF THE INTERNATIONAL CIRCULATION MANAGERS ASSOCIATION AND GUESTS AT 21ST ANNUAL MEETING IN BUFFALO

NEWSBOY WELFARE WORK PROGRAM OF I. C. M. A.

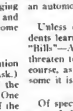
"Bill" shipped up several boxes of them, as well as brought a number along. "Bill" took no chances and only shipped the edible kind; the seedable kind he brought with him. The latter were as fair to the eye as the former were palatable to the taste. Keep plugging "Bill" and after we go to St. Louis, and maybe, Salt Lake City, we'll surely come to Columbus.

The biggest member at the convention was F. R. Folkes of the Regina (Sask.) Leader. Mr. Folkes was typical of the big outdoor country he represents. One of the new members, he was one of the most interested and interesting circulators there. He took an active part in all discussions and, his speech, inviting the 1920 convention to Regina, was the hit of the convention. Mr. Folkes went back to Regina firmly convinced that the I. C. M. A. is one of the greatest organizations in the United States and Canada and said before leaving that he felt fully repaid by the new ideas he had gained for the long trip he had made and for the time consumed.

One of the interesting speakers at the meeting on Thursday was A. F. Kunze, president of the Columbus (Ga.) Chamber of Commerce, who came up with "Bill" Page to help him take the next convention down to Georgia. When Mr. Kunze described the kind of watermelons that grow in his state, and the peaches, both animate and inanimate, it looked very doubtful for St. Louis. We all hope Mr. Kunze will favor us with another visit.



The ladies of the convention were unanimous in declaring that they had the best time ever given them at an I. C. M. A. gathering. The local entertainment committee did itself proud in looking after the comfort and enjoyment of their fair guests. The ladies have a warm spot in their hearts for Buffalo circulators.

After Mr. Folkes of Regina had invited the 1920 convention to his city, Al Lincoln of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch who had addressed the meeting in behalf of his city, said: "If I only had his words with my proposition, Oh, Boy!!!"

A number of regulars were absent through unavoidable reasons, among them being ex-President Sidney Long, who is seriously sick; ex-President John M. Schmid and J. U. Sears, who were detained on account of important business; Leslie Nearie of the Toledo Blade; Roy Hatton, Detroit Free Press; Ed. Dobson, Newark (N. J.) Ledger, and smiling "Willie" Hoffman of the New York Staats-Zeitung. The latter was detained at home on account of an accident to his son, who was struck by an automobile.

Unless our presidents and vice-presidents learn to distinguish them, the two "Hills"—Argue and Darby of Toronto—threaten to put signs on their backs. Of course, as both are so young and handsome it is hard to tell them apart.

Of special interest to members was a map of the United States prepared by President McKernan, showing the number of members in each state. Every one who nominated a city for the 1920 convention took occasion to refer to it as a reason why his particular city should secure the next meeting. It was of considerable help in furnishing statistics.

J. S. Evenson, New Director I. M. C. A.

The Wednesday night meeting started at 9 o'clock, after the trip to Niagara Falls, and continued until early Thursday morning. President McKernan, who evidently does not keep such late hours when he is at home, could not reconcile himself to the fact that it was Thursday morning and kept talking about what was to be finished "tomorrow."

The Niagara Falls trip was especially enjoyed by the ladies. Several of them said they had heard that Niagara Falls was a great place to spend a honeymoon, but had not realized it fully until now. Some of them declared that if they were ever married again they would try it out. Brother circulators, BEWARE!

In voting for St. Louis the members were greatly influenced by the fact that the publishers of that city were unanimous in tendering the invitation.

Fifty-three new members were added to the list in the past year.

Hardwood Dealers Get Big Results from Ads in Home Town Papers

MILWAUKEE, June 16.—A report on market promotion by M. P. McCullugh, Schofield, Wis., at a recent convention in Milwaukee of the Northern Hemlock and Hardwood Manufacturers' Association was a striking tribute to newspaper advertising. The report showed that the best results were attained by the local dealer using his home town paper. Next year the association will increase its advertising expenditures to about $50,000. This represents an addition of $5,000, which will be devoted chiefly to service to the retailers.

The White Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association, which met in conjunction with the hemlock manufacturers, decided to add a newspaper advertising campaign to its promotion. Advertisements will be placed in the home town newspapers of the retailers to whom the cedar manufacturers sell.

Saranac Dailies Consolidate

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., June 18.—One of the biggest newspaper changes in the Adirondack section in several years is the merger of the News and the Item, which will be published henceforth under the name of the Daily Item. The Item is the only daily newspaper in the Adirondacks. The Item will publish afternoons. E. C. Krauss, who will continue as publisher, effected the purchase of the News.

A. A. A. A. Rate Card in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, June 13.—The Evening Bulletin has adopted the American Association of Advertising Agencies' standard form of rate card. The Bulletin's May average daily circulation, 443,191 copies, was one of the six largest in the United States.

New Officers in Houston

HOUSTON, Tex., June 15.—The Advertising Association has elected the following officers: President, J. B. Westover; vice-president, Toval Marston; secretary-treasurer, A. S. Pimental; directors, G. B. Furtrial, W. T. Dennistion, N. O. Schexnayder, F. C. Wilhelm.

John H. Vaughn, of the Troy (N. Y.) Times, has been named confidential secretary in a Troy (N. Y.) banking concern.

SAYS CUBA BECKONS U. S. ADVERTISERS

First of Sanger Report on Latin-American Situation Issued by Government Department of Commerce—Peculiarities of People Must Be Met

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 18.—"No other country in Latin-America presents such favorable conditions as does Cuba as an experimental field for the American advertiser," says a report on "Advertising Methods in Cuba," issued today by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce. "Just as in the United States many advertisers cautiously test their plans by states and sections, so may the American advertiser use Cuba as 'trying-out' ground for all Latin-America."

"If discouraging results attend the advertiser's first attempts," continues Trade Commissioner J. W. Sanger, author of the report, "if his instructions are not carried out to the letter, and if irritating and apparently needless misunderstandings arise and delays occur, he will have to remind himself frequently that neither Cuba nor any other Latin-American country is adjusted to what may be called the 'American way' of doing things.

Can't Transplant Our Ways

"Neither is there any likelihood that American ways and business methods can ever be transplanted bodily so as to take root in any Spanish-speaking country, and the American advertiser who does not seek some practical compromise between what he would like and what he can get is building up trouble for himself from the very start.

"Cuba is buying American goods in increasing quantities every year. Advertising has been no small factor already in helping to broaden these markets, and it will continue to be of assistance in just so far as we take intelligent advantage of the means ready at hand and establish for ourselves more and better points of contact in Cuba for American advertising.

"The problems connected with foreign advertising, and for the time being inseparable from it, are many and various and are no more susceptible of short cuts and easy solutions than is the larger problem of foreign trade of which advertising is but one phase."

The Government's report is the first of a series on Latin-America and is entitled "Advertising Methods in Cuba."

A WEEKLY FEATURE COMPILED AND EDITED BY JOHN SULLIVAN

SECRETARY-TREASURER OF THE ASSOCIATION OF NATIONAL ADVERTISERS

AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATIONS

The A. N. A. Has Placed Whole Weight Behind Audit Organization

THIS is A. B. C. week, and further remarks as to the attitude of the A. N. A. towards the A. B. C. are in order. The A. B. C. is now about five years old, and the progress that has been made in bringing about greater order in the publication field has been surprising. It would be easily possible to say many good words for the A. B. C., but the fact that the A. N. A. recently abandoned its own plan of audit, which, good as it was fundamentally, has been held in abeyance for years past in view of the desire of the A. N. A. to give the A. B. C. a fair field, is eloquent enough; and still more so is the fact that the A. N. A. at its Cleveland meeting in May, went on record as placing the whole of its weight behind the Bureau.

The A. N. A. will co-operate with the A. B. C. When the A. N. A. says that it will co-operate, it will co-operate. That doesn't mean that it will stand on the other side of the way, sit on the fence, as the saying usually goes, and wish the A. B. C. "Good Luck" or "God bless you." Nor has the A. N. A. got to the stage where, having passed a resolution, it is going to say to the A. B. C., "May you live happy ever after." There will be no equivocal blessings such as the Irish one, "May the crows never peck your haystack!"

WHAT CO-OPERATION WILL MEAN

NOT at this stage is it possible to say all that it will mean. We are, wisely, shy of the initial perfect plan. There ain't no such animal. We also know that it is just as impossible to evolve a perfect auditing plan, even in five years, as, according to John Davidson, it was not possible for the Creator to "punch perfect worlds from eakes of chaos."

The officials of the A. B. C. will, no doubt, agree with me that the perfect A. B. C. plan has not yet arrived, but is beeoming. The A. B. C. does not want to stand still, nor does it intend to stand still. The A. N. A. will help the A. B. C. to keep on the move. We will bring to the attention of its officers from time to time recommendations for improvement in the audit form or the method of auditing. There is information that many national advertisers would like to see in the A. B. C. form, information that would be to the benefit of publishers to furnish.

INFORMING THE A. N. A.

A. N. A. members will be kept fully informed concerning the Audit Bureau of Circulations, and its members, and every detail will be given to them that will enable them to make adequate use of publishers' statements and reports and to the many details that should come up for their consideration.

THE A. B. C. AND QUALITY OF CIRCULATION

IT is pertinent to mention here a matter that will receive the particular attention of the A. N. A. office—publishers of the Farmers' Advocate nize that quality of circulation is essentially more important than quantity. Some of them, in fact, we may seem almost inclined to argue that information concerning quantity does not matter at all, regardless of the fact that when their wives buy a dozen eggs, they not only want them good, but they want the dozen. Only just recently a Canadian publisher argued in favor to the A. B. C. the Bureau of Circulations in which he said: "To be of continued use to us, as the oldest farm paper in Canada, employing only honest circulation-getting methods, refusing fakes, liquor, tobacco, mining-shares, or any other objectionable advertising, A. B. C. appears most differentiate between sound circulation and temporary, inflated circulation.

"We leave it with you to devise some way of differentiating between first-class circulation and the other kind, convinced that it will be in the best interests of advertisers generally, and the A. B. C. in particular, to adopt without delay some means of rating circulations as men and businesses are now rated, financially."

Opinions concerning this were asked for by another Canadian publisher, and the following is copy of one letter that was written:

"It seems to me, after reading the Open Letter to the Audit Bureau of Circulations, written by the William Weld Company, edited, and published in 'Marketing' for March, that the publishers of the Farmers' Advocate have a misconception of the function of the A. B. C. That function is to produce audit reports along certain definite lines decided upon by a majority of the determining body within the A. B. C. The form or plan of audit is, of course, not necessarily fixed. It is subject to change, and there will no doubt be changes in the form from time to time in the future. But it is not the business of the A. B. C. to express its approval or disapproval of this or that method of promoting circulation, any more than it is the business of a C. P. A. to tell a manufacturer, after examining his books, that he is not promoting his business properly.

"The A. B. C., obviously, cannot differentiate between what the William Weld Company called sound circulation and temporary, inflated circulation. In the last analysis, the A. B. C. exists to furnish information to the national advertiser, and it is the business of the national advertiser to determine whether the methods used by any particular publication are likely to produce the kind of market that he requires in which to sell his goods.

"The William Weld Company advocates that the A. B. C. adopt some means of rating circulation as men and businesses are now rated, financially. The parallel is obviously fallacious. In the latter case exact figures are dealt with, while, in the matter of circulation, we are dealing with methods. Again, it is the business of the advertiser, or of a representative body of advertisers, to devise a means for rating publications according to their method of conducting their business."

THE STANDARD QUESTIONNAIRE TO NEWSPAPERS

FURTHER progress was made this week in another conference with representatives of the Six Point League towards perfecting the list of questions that will shortly be sent out to all newspapers. In the questions we shall hope to get information that is not generally covered elsewhere, and we will not ask publishers to furnish us data that is ordinarily covered by A. B. C. reports. It is not expected that the list of questions will be standard in the sense of finality, because we fully expect to have to amend them or to add to them at the expiration of the year. But an attempt to bring about some form of standards in questionnaires to publishers should gradually eliminate a great many of the demands for information that at the present time cause publishers a great deal of expense.

The list of questions will certainly be ready to send out in the first half of July.

MEETING OF NORTHERN JERSEY CHAPTER

A MEETING of this chapter was held Tuesday, June 10, at the Downtown Club, Newark, N. J. Among those present were President McDermid, Vice-President George Frank Lord, and twenty members of the chapter.

The proceedings of the meeting were along the lines of discussing the Cleveland convention and making suggestions for the next meeting—the annual meeting—New York.

The chapter will not meet again until September.

New Ad Agency Now Under Full "Speed Ahead"

Johnson, Read & Co., Successors to Turner Company, Have Good List of Clients—Carl P. Johnson Is President

CHICAGO, June 18.—The name of the Turner Advertising Company has been changed to Johnson, Read & Co., following the recent purchase by Carl P. Johnson of James H. Turner's complete interest in the agency.

Mr. Johnson has been elected president and George H. Read, who served as vice-president of the Turner Advertising Company for a number of years, continues in the same capacity.

Carl P. Johnson has been identified for many years with some of the most successful advertising campaigns produced for the clients of the William H. Rankin Company and Lord & Thomas.

George H. Read is a former Lord & Thomas man. He is the author of the "100 Per Cent Advertising Campaigns Chart," which has been officially adopted by the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

Johnson, Read & Co. control the accounts which were developed by the Turner Advertising Company.

The following new accounts have been added since Mr. Johnson became connected with the company:

Philipsborn's, the Outer Garment House.

Moore Electric Corporation.

Williams Piano & Organ Co.

The agency is occupying new and enlarged offices in the Century Building, 202 South State street.

"P. D." FAMILY AT PICNIC

Mr. and Mrs. Elbert H. Baker Entertain Employees at Country Home

CLEVELAND, O., June 18—The third annual outing of the employees of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, their wives, mothers, brothers and sweethearts, was held today at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Baker, Gates Mills, 16 miles from the city.

W. G. Vorg Vorpe, Sunday and feature editor; U. W. Hird, credit manager, and H. D. Ashby, were in charge of the picnic.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker will leave in a few days for Tacoma, Wash., to spend the summer on the Pacific Coast. Their son, Frank S. Baker, is one of the leading newspaper publishers of Tacoma.

Hostile Propaganda in Brazil

Story of Trans-Atlantic Flight Celebrated by Chicago Paper

CHICAGO, June 15.—An "aeroplane edition" of the Chicago Herald Examiner, telling of the sixteen-hour flight across the Atlantic, was delivered to surrounding cities by aeroplanes this evening. The papers left the presses at the Herald and Examiner at 7:31 p. m. Fast automobiles carried them to waiting aviators at Speedway and Ashburn Fields. Deliveries were made at Aurora-forty miles away—at 8:20, and at Elgin, about the same distance, at 8:25 o'clock. Papers were on sale at Kankakee, sixty miles away, at 8:40 p. m.

WORCESTER TELEGRAM HOUSING SCHEME

Means Big City Problem with "Build Now" Plan Explained in Space Advertising Paid for by Builders —Citizens Lend Support

In common with industrial centers all over the country, Worcester, Mass., is suffering from an acute shortage of housing accommodations. Conditions are rapidly becoming worse instead of better. Speculators are waxing rich, buying, selling and trading houses and apartments, and with every change of ownership comes the demand for increased rentals.

Worcester has attracted attention as the home of the "three decker," unbeautiful in appearance but convenient in appointments, these square, box-like wooden, three-apartment buildings which cover the seven hills of the "Heart of the Commonwealth," and house the greater part of the industrial workers.

The average rent of one of these "tenements" consisting of five or six rooms, previous to 1915 was from $15 to $25. Being essentially a "machine-shop" town, thousands of workers with their families descended upon the city in search of high wages and steady employment while during the past five years building of all kinds has practically been at a standstill. The modest six room flat, on the top floor of a "three decker" now brings a rental of $40 and few are available.

Telegram's Plan

Far-sighted business men had begun to fear the inevitable result of so abnormal a condition. The Worcester Telegram hit on a plan that met with instant endorsement by all concerned. A "Build Now" campaign was inaugurated and carried through exclusively in the columns of that paper.

After careful consideration it was estimated that those business men who were vitally concerned in the building trades should and could subscribe to a series of page advertisements which carried conviction in every line. The campaign was laid out in detail by John A. Plumb, advertising manager of the Telegram, and Harrisoo E. Williams, promotion man of the staff. It was planned to run at least twenty full page advertisements during a period of ten weeks. There were no names appended save nothing indicated the backers or subscribers to the propagaoda. During this period building news of all kinds was featured.

The Telegram promotion man, armed with the details of the campaign, experienced little difficulty in raising the entire amount necessary in a surprisingly short time. The fund was finally oversubscribed.

Noonday and luncheon meetings were addressed by Mr. Williams and in one instance a group of contractors were so strongly impressed that they started subscription blanks, leaving the amount to be filled in by the Telegram representative.

It is yet too early to predict the effect of this campaign upon the situation as a whole, but since the inception of this building boom Worcester has shown signs of awakening—the local Chamber of Commerce has formed a Housing Corporation and is following out the ideas expressed in the Telegram.

The Telegram runs a very attractively laid out news page opposite the full page ad and the merchants and construction men are virtually fighting for the opportunity to advertise on this page.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among non-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines of advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in new business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial to many ways—it has made new advertisers and helped circulation—It has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for twenty weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

THE TRIBUNE IS NEW YORK'S FASTEST GROWING MORNING PAPER

Three new evidences that the New York Tribune is the fastest growing newspaper in New York.

1 For the first 13 days of June the New York Tribune gained 161% over the same period a year ago. For the first five months the gains are:

January 22½%	April 69 %
February 56½%	May 93¼%
March 65 %

2 The Tribune average gain for the first 5 months was 62½%. The combined average of the other papers in the morning field was 18½%.

3 Late in May the Tribune passed the mark of a million lines of advertising gained. Before the middle of June it added another quarter of a million.

These are big days for everybody, but the New York Tribune is out-distancing the field.

Binghamton May Have New Morning Paper

Backed by Millionaire Shoe Manufacturer, Congressman W. H. Hill Announces Plans for New Enterprise

BINGHAMTON, June 18.—Representative William H. Hill, backed by George F. Johnson, millionaire shoe manufacturer, will launch a daily newspaper in Binghamton as the Republican organ of the "Southern Tier." At present there are two newspapers in the field, the Morning Republican-Herald, Republican, and the Evening Press, independent. For many years Representative Hill has published the Johnson City Record. Before America entered the war steps were taken to turn the publication into a daily. At the time an effort was made to purchase the Republican, but an agreement on price could not be reached and the matter was dropped. It is understood $125,000 was offered and $175,000 asked.

This week it was announced that George F. Johnson had procured a 30-day option on the new Sharp building. When questioned as to whether he intended starting an afternoon or morning newspaper, Mr. Johnson replied, "It might be either or neither." Friends of Mr. Johnson say he favors the morning field and that he will make it a metropolitan daily, possibly at one cent price.

Willis Sharpe Kilmer, owner of the Binghamton Press, was asked for a price on his paper, but he replied that the paper was not for sale at any price.

BUENOS AIRES PAPERS RESUME

Contain Two Weeks Back News and Bring Double Prices

BUENOS AIRES, June 13.—The newspapers La Nacion and La Prensa appeared yesterday for the first time in thirteen days, publication having been suspended because of the lockout of printers.

The papers contained a complete resumé of the news of the world for two weeks. They sold at double the regular price, the newsboys profiting by the desire of the public to learn what had happened during the period the papers did not appear.

The smaller papers are being printed in the plants of the larger dailies until new forces are ready to begin work in the plants of the lesser publications. The publishers declare that their victory over the union men is complete, and that the dissolution of the men's organization is an accomplished fact.

News Print Tribunal Puts Off Decision Again

Canadian Body Meets Two Days Ahead of Schedule and Orders Evidence Submitted in Writing

[BY TELEGRAPH]

MONTREAL, June 16.—The Paper Control Tribunal, which was to meet here Wednesday, held its session today instead, because one of the lawyers had to leave for England on the 17th. A brief discussion was held regarding the advisability of hearing further oral arguments, but it was finally decided to have both sides submit their cases in writing.

The Paper Tribunal has now the prepared briefs of the two sides and will examine these and decide the case from the evidence in hand.

Evidence was produced to show that the Fort Francis paper mill does not intend to obey the order of Commissioner Pringle and pay back $3.12 per ton to Western publishers because it received a rebate of duty on alush sulphite imported from the United States.

The hearing was a very brief one and somewhat unsatisfactory, as considerable evidence was not available owing to the meeting being called two days earlier than anticipated.

The general impression at the close of the meeting was that the paper tribunal would render a judgment in the course of a week or 10 days.

Two Des Moines Newspaper Staff Members Write of Trip

DES MOINES, Ia., June 17.—Two members of the staff of the Des Moines Register and Tribune took rides in aeroplanes, driven by Army lieutenants, high over that city the other day, and obtained photographs of the place from the clouds for publication. One of the passengers was Miss Rae Macras, a feature writer, and the other was C. W. Jamieson, staff photographer. Each wrote an account of their journey for the newspaper.

A "Torchy" and "Shorty McCabe" Story
By SEWELL FORD
EVERY SUNDAY

For over a year we have been trying to persuade Mr. Ford to write a weekly "Torchy" and "Shorty" instead of every second week, knowing that the value to a newspaper of a continuous feature is 50% more than the value of one that does not appear regularly.

But Mr. Ford had produced a "Torchy" and "Shorty" for over ten years for the Associated Sunday Magazines every second week and was hard to convince.

Now he is free of certain other writing obligations and has agreed to give the newspapers a story about his inimitable characters every week.

"Torchy" and "Shorty McCabe" are known and loved throughout the country. Sewell Ford's stories about these delightful boy characters have appeared in eleven volumes and have had an enormous sale, comparable only with the sales of O. Henry and Richard Harding Davis.

The new stories will contain about 4,500 words each and will be specially and very attractively illustrated. They will be timely, relating to present day conditions and interests, and with the heart-interest that is characteristic of Mr. Ford's work.

TRIBUNE WINS POINT AS TO EVIDENCE

Judge's Ruling in Ford Libel Suit Opens Doors to Testimony as to Ford's Attitude Toward Government's Policy

Rulings by Judge Tucker on the scope of evidence to be admitted in the Henry Ford-Chicago Tribune libel suit, now in its sixth week at Mt. Clemens, Mich., featured the Tuesday sessions of the court. Judge Tucker ruled:

"The quantity of preparedness necessary, or what Ford thought necessary, is not relevant. Whether Ford sought to interfere with what preparedness the Government thought necessary is relevant. Whether what he did or said justified the criticism aimed at him in the editorial in question will be the main question in this case."

Weymouth Kirkland, of counsel for the Tribune, expressed the opinion that this ruling will permit the Tribune to give to the jury everything which the defense considers essential "in presenting a picture of the many considerations which led to the writing of the editorial." Judge Tucker, elucidating his ruling in answer to a question by one of Mr. Ford's attorneys, said:

"I think that anything that indicates Mr. Ford's anarchistic tendencies is material. I don't care where it comes from. I feel that everything that was said, or anything that was done, or any overt act or opinion expressed for the purpose of hindering or delaying or preventing the Government from making such preparations as it saw fit to make, whether much or little, adequate or inadequate, is material."

The defense placed in evidence on Tuesday a number of editorials to contradict the plaintiff's charges that the paper advocated intervention in Mexico for ulterior motives—such motives as pro-Germanism or financial interests. These editorials condemned the sinking of the Lusitania as an offense which could not be fully resented by a mere diplomatic exchange.

While the Tribune was presenting evidence the state of affairs on the Mexican border at the time of the publication of the editorial, such as the story told by the famous correspondent, Floyd Gibbons, of his observations and experiences and of Norman Walker, in charge of the Mexican bureau of the Associated Press, events on the border were again accentuating the necessity for a definite military policy on the part of the Government. American troops were again sent across the border to protect Texas cities from the menace of Mexican shells and bullets.

It is expected that the plaintiff will present a great deal of testimony in rebuttal. The end of the celebrated case is not yet in sight.

St. Louis Star Insures Readers

ST LOUIS, June 18.—Accident insurance will be provided by the St. Louis Star for its regular readers. Each reader who regularly subscribes for the paper, or buys it regularly from any news-stand, is insured as long as he continues a reader. Each applicant is issued a policy which provides, after seven days from date of application, $5 weekly accident indemnity for total disability for 52 weeks, and $10 a week partial disability for ten weeks. The death benefit is $1,000, which is also paid for loss of both hands and feet, etc., with half the face of the policy for one hand or foot, etc.

BELGIANS ENTERTAIN FOREIGN WRITERS

Seventeen Americans in Party Visiting Albert's War Devastated Country, the Guests of Belgian Press and National Government

By Cable to Editor & Publisher

PARIS, June 12.—An interesting five-day trip through Belgium has just been completed by about one hundred foreign journalists attending the World Peace Conference at Paris.

This trip was planned by the Belgium press in cooperation with the Belgian National Government and several municipalities were visited.

Seventeen American journalists were included in the party, as follows: Laula E. Birkhead, St. Louis Republican; Hilton U. Brown, Indianapolis News; Miss Faith Hunter Dodge, Newark Press and La Prenza of New York; Mrs. Helen L. Ferguson, United Press; Ramonde Frances, La Prensa, Buenos Aires; Edward O. Gibbons, Paris Edition Chicago Tribune; Mrs. Helen Davenport Gibbons, Century Magazine; Guy C. Hickok, Brooklyn Eagle; Jacob B. Hirsch, New York Sun; Florence O'Neill, Pittsburgh Dispatch; Harold P. Stokes, New York Evening Post; Camille B. Lewis, Chicago Tribune; Leo Wolfson, International Jewish Press, and Mrs. Eva K. Wilson, Baltimore News.

Maj. Opie Home With War Honors

STAUNTON, Va., June 14.—Major H. L. Opie, who served with the 116th Infantry, 29th Division, has been honorably discharged from the service and will shortly resume his position as managing editor of the Daily Leader, of which paper he is also owner. Major Opie served in France eleven months, was wounded last October in the Argonne Forest fighting, losing the index finger on his left hand. He was given the Distinguished Service Cross, and also was awarded the Croix de Guerre and a citation from the French government.

More Paper Making Prosperity

MONTREAL, June 15.—A new pulp and paper offering is just being made the Canadian public, indicating that the industry is in a flourishing condition. A Montreal financial house is offering $2,000,000 of 7 per cent mortgage debenture stock of the Mattagami Pulp & Paper Company at 94 and interest. Holders have the opportunity of exchanging the debentures for an equal par value of common shares at any time up to May 1, 1929. The Mattagami Pulp & Paper Company's plant is located at Smooth Rocks, northern Ontario.

NATIONWIDE PRAISE FOR FLYERS' STORIES

Naval Officers of Trans-Atlantic Planes Style, Frankness and Promptness Make Hit—Ralph Pulitzer Procured Narratives

Lieut. Commander Albert C. Read, who commanded the NC-4 during its historic transatlantic flight, proved that he possesses the "makings" of a first class newspaper man, for his dispatches to the New York World and St. Louis Post-Dispatch were not only capitally written, but were filed with all the promptness of a "star" correspondent.

Altogether the three aviators, Commander Towers and Lieut.-Commanders Read and Bellinger, filed 15,000 words for the World and Post-Dispatch. This service was procured by Joseph Pulitzer, Jr., of the Post-Dispatch who was in the naval aviation service during the war, associated with Lieut.-Commander Bellinger. Many papers took the service; what some of them thought of it is told by these telegrams:

From the Chicago Tribune—"The Chicago Tribune feels immensely obliged for the chance given it by the New York World and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch to print the exclusive stories written by the flight commanders in the transatlantic airplane flight. It is a great piece of newspaper enterprise."

From the Cleveland News—"Worthy of a high place in historic literature are the epic stories of Commander Read and his associates. They told a tremendous story in a simple way. We feel that our readers owe these courageous flyers double thanks for first accomplishing their flight and, second, for making the details of their trip available to the world at large."

From the Baltimore Sun—"We regard the Read-Towers-Bellinger exclusive stories of their transatlantic flight as among the most intensely interesting ever printed in a newspaper and the securing of these stories as a rare piece of newspaper genius."

From the Washington Post—"If the bare announcement of the successful achievement of transatlantic flight was big news, what can be said of cabled accounts giving every detail of this historic flight from beginning to end, written by the daring voyagers themselves and obtainable for the price of a morning newspaper, before the cheering had died away? Surely this was a long and high flight in journalism."

To Aid Employees to Secure Homes of Their Own

President Noyes, of Washington Star, Offers Cooperation to Those Tired of Paying Rent

WASHINGTON, June 17.—Publishers of the Washington Star have undertaken to devise means by which the company may aid its employes in acquiring their own homes. The following notice, signed by Frank E. Noyes, the president, has been distributed among the employes in all departments:

"From time to time employes of The Star have approached the officers of the company, asking initial assistance in financing the purchase of homes, and it has recently been impossible for such aid to be extended.

"This caused the question as to whether there are many others of The Star family who are desirous, but who would like, if possible, to become home owners. If so it might advantageous to merge multiple plans of land and build houses, instead of buying houses already built. I will be glad, therefore, to have the names of any Star employes who are interested in the matter for the purpose of later having a meeting, when it could be determined whether a plan could be worked within the company could properly aid in carrying out.

"If you are interested will you please write me?"

SEES VICTORY OVER TIME AND SPACE

Lord Northcliffe Predicts London Morning Newspapers Will Sell in New York Same Day as Result of Conquest of Air

Lord Northcliffe, in complimenting the victorious British airmen upon the completion of their non-stop flight across the Atlantic, takes occasion to point out the alluring possibilities created by the history-making flight.

He foresees a time when London morning newspapers will be selling in New York in the evening, and when New York evening papers will reach London the following day. He also takes occasion to call to the attention of the cable companies the significance of the event to them. He says:

"Just as in 1913 when I offered the prize, I felt that it would soon be won, so do I surely believe your wonderful journey is the warning to the cable monopolists and others to realize that within the next few years we shall be less dependent upon them unless they increase their wires and speed up. Your voyage was made more quickly than the average press message of 1919.

"Moreover, I look forward with certainty to the time when London morning newspapers will be selling in New York in the evening, allowing for the difference between British and American time, and vice versa in regard to New York evening journals reaching London the next day.

"We shall no longer suffer from the danger of garbled quotations due to telegraphic compression. Then, too, the American and British peoples will understand each other better as they are brought into closer daily touch.

"Illness prevents me shaking you by the hand and personally presenting the prize, but I can assure you that your welcome will be equal to that of Hawker and his gallant American conqueer, Read, whose great accomplishment has given us such valuable data for future Atlantic work.

"I rejoice at the good augury that you departed from and arrived at those two portions of the British Commonwealth, the happy and prosperous Dominion of Newfoundland and the future equally happy and prosperous Dominion of Ireland."

The City Creed Idea

Has any bright citizen written a creed for your city?

It is a civilizing force to strive to live up to the idealism of a high creed.

There's impetus in the "booster creed." Do you not believe that the business men of Baltimore, for instance, are stimulated by the following lines, written by Harry A. Allers, of the Advertising Club of that city:

"I believe in Baltimore. I love her as my home. I love her institutions. I rejoice in the advantages of her resources. I have unbounded confidence in the ability and enterprise of her people, and I cherish exalted ideas of her destiny among the cities of the nation.

"Anything that is produced in Baltimore from Baltimore materials, by the application of Baltimore brain and labor, will always have first call with me. And it's only good business on my part that it should."

Altogether—

"ME TOO."

By W. R. Hargraves.

[United Press Staff Correspondent]

Swift "taxi" rides on destroyers, breakfast on a cruiser, lunch on a destroyer, dinner on a battleship; dashes on motor speed boats; wild rides over lava-covered mountain roads; a midnight bicycle race through narrow, crooked and inky black streets, arguments in sign language with people who spoke no English.

These were a few of the conditions which made my assignment to Ponta Delgada, Azores, to cover the trans-Atlantic flight for the United Press from that end, one replete with thrilling and curious situations.

Another feature of the assignment was the ultra-twentieth-century method of flashing the news of the progress and fate of the three flyers. Wig-wag flags, blinker and flash lights, wireless telegraph, wireless telephones and a long dormant cable line all were utilized to get every phase of the flight to all parts of the world through the New York office of the United Press.

Aided by Naval Officials

In the successful effort to present this news first through the United Press I was materially aided by the highest naval officials at Ponta Delgada, who, in spite of the gravity of their own tasks during the search for the missing flyers, afforded me every opportunity to get the news back to America, where it was swiftly relayed throughout the United States, Canada, Mexico, South America and Australia and even flashed to England and France before direct messages from the Azores reached those countries.

This assistance was rendered, also, in spite of the fact that it was the expressed intention of the government to beat the world with the news. The officers upon whom fell the burden of the work in connection with the direction of the flight and search at the Azores were Admiral Jackson, chief of the United States naval base there; Captain Ward K. Wortman, commander of destroyer flotilla No. 2; Captain John S. Arwine, commander of the U.S.S. Melville, destroyer tender, and Communication Officer Lieut. Joseph Buchalter, all of whom worked day and night during the three days between the time the flyers left Trepassy Bay and the time the NC 3 crept into Ponta Delgada power.

Prejudiced Against Speed

One of the greatest difficulties to be overcome was the breaking down of the innate prejudice against speed apparently prevailing on the beautiful little Island of St. Michael. The resident cable operators could not at first understand why the news dispatches could not be sent to the United States via Lisbon and London, as are the commercial messages, requiring from a week to ten days for transmission.

Much explanation for the greater part of nearly two weeks was required before permission was obtained to send the United Press dispatches direct to New York, via Horta, Fayal Island, over a cable, according to one of the officials, which was taken over from the Germans after the war was declared, and which has lain idle since.

It was through the use of this cable and the payment of three times the regular commercial rate that the United Press was enabled to keep the readers of the papers of its hundreds of clients informed of every move of the flyers in the history-making trip to Europe, in some instances more than an hour before the government officials in Washington had received their official wireless or cable reports from the Azores.

Wig-Wagged Across Bay

The news of the arrival of the NC-4 at Lisbon, completing the trans-Atlantic flight, was flashed from that place to Ponta Delgada, where it was picked up by the Melville wireless and wig-wagged across the bay to the admiral's headquarters, where I was in conference with the admiral.

As the words were being spelled out I was on my way to the end of a short line wire leading to the cable office, and by the time the message was ended it was being ticked off to that office, several miles away, where it was immediately relayed to Horta and placed on the trunk cable into the United Press office in the United States.

One of the most interesting features of the story occurred on the day the NC 4 flew from Horta to Ponta Delgada. I had gone to Horta in the height of a driving storm to interview Captain Bellinger of the NC 1 after he was rescued and taken to that city.

Rushing back to Ponta Delgada on the destroyer Robinson, which Captain Simpson, commander, sent bowling along at 25 miles an hour, we received a wireless that the NC 4 had left Horta an hour behind us.

Some Speedy Work

This movement was covered by a United Press correspondent at Horta, and I immediately took steps to have its arrival at Ponta Delgada flashed to New York. A few minutes after we had received word of the NC 4 start we looked back from the bridge and saw the seaplane, high in the air, sweeping toward us. Shortly after it had passed over us, more than 1,000 feet up, and a mile to the southeast, I listened in on the radio and could hear the seaplane wireless operator chatting with some of the destroyers on station, and asking for his position.

The combination of the seaplane flight, the use of the radio, the dispatch of destroyers to the United States with moving picture films immediately after they were snapped, and the swiftness of thought and action of all concerned was certainly an exemplification of the speed of the age.

New Albany Press Club Will Have Three Membership Classes.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 17.—Declaring that the failure of a former Press Club in this city was caused by the fact that too many business men not connected with the newspaper game were allowed membership, the newly launched Albany Press Club was warned to steer clear of this trouble at the first meeting here last week. Roy S. Sinclair, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, and a former newspaper man, was the speaker.

As a result the club plans to have three sections—active, retired and honorary membership. A limited number of business men are eligible to membership in the honorary section, former newspaper men only in the retired section, and active newspaper men only in the active section.

Three N. Y. Associations to Meet

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., June 15.—The summer meeting of the New York Associated Dailies will be held at Saratoga Springs June 24. The State Press Association and the Republican State Press Association will meet here also on the following days of the week.

Joint Meeting in Kentucky

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 18.—Editors and teachers of Kentucky will hold a joint meeting for the first time in the history of the State when the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky Educational Association gather in Louisville June 26 and jointly discuss reconstruction problems.

A Comparison of Costs

A graphic picture of the high cost of doing business is shown by the rise in a long list of commodity prices during the past five strenuous years.

By the exercise of unparalleled economies, telephone rates have been kept almost unchanged.

The fact is, the increase in the cost of commodities has resulted in what is equal to a decrease in telephone rates. In other words: The dollar which was spent for the telephone has bought more than twice as much as the dollar spent for the commodity.

The activities of reconstruction which are now upon the nation have put a great burden upon the telephone. This condition has made necessary an advance in telephone rates.

This advance does not exceed an average of eight percent; almost negligible as compared with the advances in other lines of industry, yet enough to cover the increase in the cost of operation.

Only through adequate revenue can there be assured the maintenance of a high standard of telephone service.

ADDING TO THIS GREAT RECORD

The news comes that The Washington Post published the largest newspaper that it has ever printed—

Sunday, June 1, 1919

119,718 AGATE LINES

—or nearly 400 columns of paid advertising. This and similar daily gains for the first few days of this month—point to this month for a still BIGGER MONTHLY GAIN.

The Post Rotogravure Section

Washington's acknowledged digest of the world's recent happenings—presented in amazing photographs.

Its rapidly growing popularity with all readers makes it the ideal medium for advertisers who wish "different" advertising for their merchandise. Let us tell you more about rotogravure advertising.

WASHINGTON

Always the National Capital—Now the World's Capital

Washington, the fastest growing and most prosperous major city of this generation, boasts of a record in all activities that overshadows even the world's greatest metropolises.

The population of the National Capital in 1910 was 331,069—now it is estimated at 401,681—an increase of nearly 75,000 people in nine years.

Its total subscription to its quota on the entire five Liberty Loans was an oversubscription of nearly 80%—a top-record oversubscription among the major cities of the United States.

This prosperous city and its prosperous peoples read the Washington Post daily and Sunday—as our recent Post Office Statement showed an average net paid circulation for six months of: daily 61,848. Sunday 80,105.

PEACE PRESS CLUB A GREAT SUCCESS

Attention Given to Conference by French Government Made Possible Free Intercourse Between 2,200 Newspaper Men of All Nations

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

PARIS, June 3.—At this writing the matter of getting the Peace Treaty signed and the demand for passage homeward are the two thoughts foremost in the minds of hundreds of journalists in Paris representing the press of the world. But whether the Treaty is signed promptly, or whether it is delayed, whether the Peace will satisfy or create further world dissension, one thing is certain: The French Club for the Foreign Press is an unqualified success.

When the French Government so generously and thoughtfully secured the gorgeous Dufayel Mansion and turned it into a club for the foreign press representatives gathered in Paris to report the proceedings of the Peace Conference, they provided a central meeting ground for journalists and statesmen that has done much to forward the most momentous gathering the world has known.

More Than a Working Place

The establishing of this club did more than provide a working place. It made possible the free intercourse of hundreds of journalists with literally thousands of men officially connected with the Peace Conference, thus promoting in an unusual degree the contact necessary to keep abreast of the real news of the conference day by day.

Readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER will recall that there was a battel royal at the beginning of the conference by the journalists, especially the American and English contingent, to have ready access to the proceedings.

That was a drawn battle, and as the conference went along the opportunity to get the big news of the conference became more difficult as the Big Ten held sway, later as the Big Five, still later as the Big Four, and then with the withdrawal of Italy from the conference, the Big Three became still more mysterious.

Under these circumstances it would have been Darkest Africa indeed for the journalists if it had not been for the French Club for the Foreign Press where at luncheon, tea and dinner it was easy for the statesmen and the men of the press to meet informally.

The American Section

In addition to the opportunities for constant meeting in an informal way the club arranged many formal entertainments that heightened the value of its influence and stamped it more thoroughly as the real meeting ground of the men attending the Peace Conference.

The Dufayel Mansion is readily transformed into a cozy theatre where notable musical programs by artists from the Paris Grand Opera were offered. There were many banquets by the peace delegations from foreign countries by which the press were invited, and thus the claims and ambitions of numerous nations were unfolded to the press. Marshal Foch, master strategist, not given to public speaking, on one of these occasions made a notable address.

Of particular interest to readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER is the American section of this club. With the exception of the National Press Club at Washington, there is no spot in America where so many well known American journalists could be met at one time. On any day at luncheon one could readily feel that the Washington crowd, augmented by a number of well known American newspaper men from other parts of the country had arrived in a body. They merely seemed to have left off considering the affairs of Congress and the Departments, and turned to the doings of the Peace Conference.

Membership of 2,200

The French Club for the Foreign Press (officially called Cercle Francais de la Presse Etrangere) has a total membership of 2,200. Of this membership 150 are American journalists representing the leading newspapers, magazines, news and feature syndicates and the press associations. English newspapers, press associations, magazines and syndicates are represented by 100 members.

There are 45 representatives from the Italian press.

Japan has a total delegation of 34 members representing the leading newspapers and press association of the Orient.

The Poles are represented by 35 members, and have taken the keenest interest in the conference.

The new republic of Czecho-Slovakia has 25 members, and Yougo-Slavia 3

Brazil's newspapers show their interest with 25 members. Argentina journalists to the number of 14 are here. Roumania has 25, Switzerland 10, Scandinavia 12, Greece 20, Spain 20, Russia 20, Serbia 6, Central and South America (excluding Brazil and Argentina) 25, Belgium 20, Portugal 12, China 3 and Armenia 1.

In EDITOR & PUBLISHER for March 1 the Dufayel Mansion was described and a view of its exterior shown.

Secretary James O'Shaughnessy Explains Position of His Association and Himself in Army Recruiting Advertising Campaign

The following statement, assuring publishers that hereafter no attempt will be made to press-agent Government paid advertising, was issued this week by James O'Shaughnessy, executive secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies:

"It is very complimentary to everybody concerned with advertising that such quick and generous co-operation has been given to the army recruiting campaign.

"This was an exceptional instance which entirely justified the free readers and free service.

"It was distinctly a case of advertising being on trial. A good excuse for poor results would not serve anybody.

Never Countenances Free "Boosts"

"Good results alone would force the verdict in Washington. It was unfortunate that the campaign was put out with such a short time at its disposal, and with such a comparatively small sum of money; but there were the facts, and it was up to everybody in advertising to see that the results were not only good, but that they looked good to those who would pass on them where the money came from.

"The American Association of Advertising Agencies would never countenance an appeal for free readers or a free boost by the publisher in any ordinary circumstances.

"It would not do so even then unless it had decided beforehand to call upon all of its members to give free service. This is exactly what it did in the cases of the recruiting advertising campaign.

"The effect of the association's attitude was to put our members not only back of advertising, but back of the newspapers which were carrying the advertising.

"Our members were called upon to promote public meetings, to enlist the personal service of civic, patriotic and social organizations. To obtain window displays and public demonstrations.

"Every effort which could increase the result of the newspaper campaign was called for from all of our members in every city.

"The results of all the efforts of all our members in this supplementary work will redound to the credit of producing power in newspaper advertising.

Publishers' Report Splendid

"There should be substantial advertising appropriations to follow in carrying out the recruiting plan. Having these possible appropriations in mind and having the big future of advertising in mind, it was regarded as a time for setting aside even the soundest rule, so long as the morals of its inhibition were not impaired and the results of the expediency so highly desirable from every point of view.

"It is complimentary to the publishers of the country that they appreciate all of the elements involved and responded so splendidly. The campaign will be a big success, and there will be wholesome advertising coming out of Washington as a result, and it will come hereafter clear of free requests."

RANGER GETS A DAILY PAPER

Texas Town Grows from 900 to 20,000 in Two Years

RANGER, Tex., June 18.—The Weekly Record has been discontinued and the Ranger Daily Times has been launched by the same publishers. The initial number is a creditable edition of 32 pages. The paper has Associated Press service. To show its enterprise it has started a whirlwind campaign among business men to raise a sum sufficient to inaugurate a mail carrier service in the business section and a part of the residence section of Ranger, heading the list with a good sized contribution.

G. C. Mannel is general manager; R. B. Waggoman, business manager; W. H. Wright, editor; Larry Smith, city editor. From a little sleepy village of perhaps 900 persons in 1917 Ranger has grown into a town of a population of 20,000.

R. L. Tennis, manager of the Associated Press, has returned to St. Paul from Winnipeg, where he covered the strike. For twenty days the Associated Press had the only wire out of Winnipeg.

"MR. TOWNE" FINDS LOUISVILLE

He Is Central Figure in an Effective Twenty-five Week Advertising Campaign, Originated by Sidney Bernheim, of the Herald

"Mr. Hunting A. Towne" is a fictitious character who has been used to advantage by the Louisville Herald and its advertising manager, Sidney Bernheim, in exploiting the advantages of the "Gateway of the South" in a twenty-five-week advertising campaign. Full pages were used in the Herald to tell the outside world all that "Mr. Hunting A. Towne" (a newcomer in Louisville) found attractive in that city, the campaign customer for information being named by local banking and mercantile concerns.

S. H. Bernheim.

The Herald issued an attractive booklet entitled "How a Newspaper Can Help a City." Five thousand copies of it were mailed to national advertisers and other thousands of copies were given to the Louisville Industrial Foundation for distribution among factory-site seekers.

Started with "Arrival"

The first advertisement told of the arrival of "Mr. Hunting A. Towne" in Louisville and his determination to investigate its supposed advantages. Succeeding pages indicated that his investigation was thorough. He was interested not only in the housing problem, but also in railroad facilities, factory sites, the live stock market, the tobacco trade, retail stores, the park system, public educational facilities, the churches, and the cost of living.

In fact, when the campaign was ended there wasn't much about Louisville that "Mr. Hunting A. Towne" didn't know and which he hadn't told to readers of the Louisville Herald. And the campaign bore fruit, too. A considerable amount of capital has been interested in the establishment of new industries, early construction calling for an outlay of approximately $3,500,000.

Mr. Bernheim, advertising manager, who put the campaign "across," was for ten years connected with the advertising department of the Chicago Record Herald and for five years of that time was assistant advertising manager. He went to Louisville three and a half years ago.

"The campaign was the quickest, cleanest, and most appreciated drive with which I was ever connected," he said. "It was handled by the regular advertising staff of the Herald and the interest of the staff was sustained, in part, by cash prizes, and by posting results daily on a bulletin board."

MUST EQUALIZE PAPER CHARGES

Order Issued to Railroads by Interstate Commerce Commission

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Rates on paper throughout trunk-line territory must be revised to make them conform to a definite and uniform basis, the Interstate Commerce Commission declared today in deciding the case brought by the Michigan Paper Mills Traffic Association against the New York Central and other railroads seeking removal of alleged discrimination.

Defendants were allowed forty-five days to propose a revised schedule that will eliminate the inequalities disclosed by the evidence. "It is definitely established," the commission said, "that many of the rates on paper in the East have been made by the carriers largely for the purpose of permitting mills on their lines to compete in certain markets with other mills more favorably located."

U. S. CANADA'S BEST CUSTOMER

Bought Most of Its Pulp and Paper in Past Year

MONTREAL, June 14.—Official trade returns for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1919, just made available, show the value of Canadian exports of pulp, paper and pulpwood for the twelve months as $99,259,166, as compared with $71,825,900 for 1918 and $52,975,437 for 1917, or a gain of $27,433,666 over 1918 and of $46,283,709 over 1917.

The United States led as Canada's best customer for pulp and paper, the United Kingdom, Japan, Australia and New Zealand, following in the order named. France, which imported from Canada 66,285 cwt. of mechanical pulp valued at $471,040 in 1917, took none at all in 1918 or 1919, while exports to the United Kingdom of both chemical and mechanical pulp fell off from a total of 1,163,224 cwt., valued at $3,057,422 in 1916-17 to 142,892 cwt., valued at $614,432 in 1918-19. This was due entirely to lack of shipping facilities

Publishers Counter Sue

DENVER, June 14.—Counter libel claims for $550,000 have been filed in the District court against Ernest Morris, former chairman of the County Council of Defense, by Frederick G. Bonfils and Harry H. Tammen, proprietors of the Denver Post, and by the Post Printing & Publishing Co. The action followed a ruling of Judge Butler, ordering the first joint counter claim of $150,000 stricken from the files. The counter claims are interposed in a suit for libel in which Mr. Morris asks $375,000 damages from the Denver Post.

National Dry Goods Ass'n Scores Misrepresentation

Will Turn All Cases Over to A. A. C. W. —Endorses "Buy Now, But Wisely" Movement

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 16.—More vigilance work was cut out for the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World by the National Retail Dry Goods Association at their annual spring meeting in St. Louis. Because of the many complaints of the misrepresentation in sizes in ready-to-wear garments, the association adopted resolutions suggesting that every member furnish to the secretary specific cases of such misrepresentation, such evidence to be turned over to the attention of the Associated Clubs.

The retailers also adopted resolutions indorsing the "Buy now, but buy wisely" movement.

Lieut. Durand F. Ladd, publicity director of the Information and Education Service of the Department of Labor, described the department's "Buy now" campaign, which shortly will be urged through a newspaper campaign of advertising. He explained the object of the campaign was to speed up business during the post-war period to in turn speed up manufacturing, thus giving employment to discharged soldiers, sailors and other idle workers.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER Q & A

Service Department

NOTICE: Questions concerning newspaper technical trade matters and newspaper advertising should be addressed to Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER, 1117 World Building, New York. These communications and answers will be published, unless the correspondent requests private reply; then self-addressed stamped envelope should be furnished. Correspondents desiring anonymity should indicate initials to be published.

Q.—Our attention has been called to a suggestion in your publication with regard to changing the size of copy paper to 8x6½ inches. We can readily see where this size would be more efficient for reporters, but doubt whether our telegraph operators can be induced to use it. No doubt, your suggestion was based on an experiment and we are interested to know what was done with regard to copy paper for telegraph operators.

A.—There is no question that it does increase the work of a receiving telegraph operator. However, the value of the press association report in any office where fast editing is appreciated, is not enhanced by long and clumsy sheets. Operators making one report might copy from a paper roll which would tear off in short "takes," even if a little broader on the line than we have suggested. Perhaps it is at least worth a couple of days' tryout without hardship to anyone, and then you will have the fact as against the theory.

Q.—Contract for advertising made 1917, just expiring, contains renewal clause, for additional period of two years at rate then prevailing. Rates since increased. Is such a renewal consistent with best practice in protecting interests of advertisers who pay present rates? G.

A.—Matter is discussed in a special article in this issue. Technically, it would seem that a publisher should stand by his contracts. The clause referred to, however, would seem to be in conflict with the public interest.

Q.—Can you recommend to us a source from which we could procure figures showing circulation of the more prominent magazines by cities?
Foster Advertising Company, Inc.,
A. C. Perry.

A.—Suggest you apply to A. B. C. in Chicago or to Publishers' Advisory Board, New York.

Q.—Can you inform me whether there are any publishers issuing syndicated weekly papers in groups of small towns, printing all of the papers in one plant and "making over" for each town for which a paper is printed. I desire to know particularly whether such a plan is feasible and conducive to a greater volume of advertising at a combined rate than each paper would be able to procure if published separately.

Also, if possible, can you inform me whether the publishing of a county weekly in a city of say 50,000 population in which the local county news is played strong is likely to prove a successful plan under present conditions? F. C. B.

A.—Yes, that has been done in the United States for years and it must be profitable, for it continues and seems to increase. The scheme is in operation in many New England communities. For instance, at Hudson, Mass., the News-Enterprise prints editions for six towns, with what appears to be very handsome results. We have the name of Robert S. Osterhout as the publisher. Your county weekly style application to a good sized city is a novel hunch. The value of personal and chatty stuff is not to be denied. But the only way to answer that question is to pay for the experiment.

Q.—Does any one know of some contrivance that can be used to rewind nubs of paper rolls that can be used in the smaller offices? Too much time is lost in changing rolls in using these nubs, and all pressmen will put them away in some corner or else strip the paper off for waste. If there is not such a contrivance in existence, some one should be able to invent one. Paper costs too much to throw away paper enough on the cores to print from 300 to 600 papers.
Daily Mail, Anderson, (S. C.)

A.—Suggest you write to W. T. Anderson, president of the Macon, Ga., Telegraph for information as to a device he has experimented with.

Q.—Where can we get chalk plates? M. M. O.
A.—Suggest Hoke Engraving Co., 301 N. 3rd Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Q.—Could you furnish us with list of promotional publications by daily newspapers in the United States? We are publishing the Retail Merchant's Globe monthly and would like to see what other papers are doing?
"C. S."—Toronto Globe.

A.—We could not give a list—there are many such. Why not write to the promotion managers of such papers as the Chicago Tribune, Philadelphia Public Ledger, Boston American, New York Globe, etc.

Q.—We note in recent issue information regarding woolen blankets for mat press and find same interesting. Where can we get the shoddy blankets?
L'Imprimerie Populaire, Ltd.,
Montreal.

A.—There is no special brand—the idea is simply that a cheap shoddy blanket gives more service than an expensive fine wool blanket. Advise that you buy cheap ones.

New Jersey's Home Newspapers Are Essential

You can cover a small part of New Jersey with New York newspapers. And Philadelphia papers will touch another edge.

But you can't begin to COVER New Jersey with outside newspapers.

The state has grown beyond the purely suburban character it once had.

Its towns and cities have a power and individuality of their own.

Its newspapers have grown strong in influence and in circulation—they are potential business builders in a state that is second to none in prosperity and per capita buying capacity.

Surely no advertiser will try to get along in New Jersey without these home newspapers:

HOW A PROPRIETARY MEDICINE CONCERN GOT A STRANGLE-HOLD ON A SOUTHERN PUBLISHER

THE publisher of a daily newspaper in a Southern city has submitted to EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S examination a contract for advertising with a proprietary medicine concern, thoughtlessly accepted by the advertising department of the paper in question, the conditions of which are somewhat astounding.

The space to be used by the medicine company is 300 inches per year. The duration of the contract is from September 1, 1917, to May 1, 1919, excluding May, June, July and August, 1918. The rate is .12c per inch, plate matter, plus .04c for composition first insertion. Bills payable monthly, with discounts of 15 and 2 per cent. for cash, 15 days.

The position specified is "first following and alongside local page of most interest to women, which is page headed Requested." Contract is based upon net paid circulation of specified number, as per A. B. C. audit, with pro rata rebate allowed for decrease. "Cancellation without short rate if position is unsatisfactory." Privilege granted to renew for two years at same rate at expiration of this contract.

Among the clauses of the contract inserted by rubber stamp is one guaranteeing the rate charged to be as low as any foreign advertiser is receiving. Company's representative is to be allowed to examine all of the newspaper's contracts on demand and if any of these show a lower rate a rebate is to be paid to the medical concern.

Nothing is specified as to dates of insertion, except to bar certain months, as stated above.

The advertiser now seeks to obtain a two-year renewal at same rate, as called for in a rubber-stamped clause in the contract. As the circulation and rates of the paper have advanced since this contract was made, the publisher feels that such a renewal would be obviously unfair to his other advertisers. He is inclined to fight the issue.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER is not in a position to give advice on a purely legal question, as this matter of a renewal of an oppressive contract seems to be. Common sense applied to publishing problems, however, would seem to favor a fight to set aside the renewal clause. Publishing conditions have changed since the contract was signed. Its renewal would at least appear to be prejudicial to the interests of other clients of the paper.

The concern involved manufactures a "pneumonia salve." If such a preparation is the one advertised under this contract it would seem that any newspaper might properly question the acceptability of such copy. Again, however, it may be that such a contention would lose its force if the publisher was aware of the nature of the proposed advertising—as he should have been—before accepting the contract.

Many newspapers refuse to accept advertising of proprietary medicines. The field for their exploitation is steadily growing less. Every other consideration aside, however, no publisher should accept a contract for advertising which is so one-sided as the one under consideration.

One single phase of this contract illustrates its one-sided character. The position specified is vague, and subject to whimsical interpretation. If it shall prove "unsatisfactory" to the company, the contract may be cancelled without short-rating.

The conclusion to be drawn from the whole matter is that publishers, however anxious they may be to secure business, should insist upon contracts which fully safeguard their interests. In this instance that fundamental point seems to have been overlooked.

Presentations to J. Ross Munro

OTTAWA, Ont., June 18.—Prior to leaving Ottawa for Toronto, where he is assuming the news desk of the Globe, J. Ross Munro, until recently news editor of the Journal, was honored by two presentations—one from his associates on the editorial staff of the paper and the second from the management. The former took the form of a beautiful gold watch, appropriately engraved, and the latter of a check for a handsome amount. The presentations were made by P. D. Ross, president, and E. Norman Smith, vice-president of the Journal.

Advertising in "A" Flat

As advertising assists all ambitions aspirations and accompanies adequate activity, as all active advertisers admit; as advertising aids accomplishment and attracts attention, alluring as ably as attracting, all ambitious aspirants are active advertisers.

Advertising alleviates anxiety and averts all agitation, assuring added assets and assuaging all alarm. As Aristotle announced, advertising aids annual averages and averts any adverse agitation, and annual announcements all are agreeable. All are adjured to assist advertising.

Allelujah and amen!

ELECTROTYPE INVENTOR DEAD

Silas Partridge Knight's Process Now Used Throughout the World

Silas Partridge Knight, inventor of the electrotype process, died June 13, in Brooklyn, N. Y., in his ninety-ninth year. Mr. Knight was probably the oldest member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in this country.

Mr. Knight was born in St. John's, N. F., on January 21, 1821. Before he was twenty-one years old he went to Boston, where he invented the electrotyping process, which has since come into use throughout the world. He was so poor at that time that he could not afford $10 for a press to make a wax mold of the type. He did it by standing upon a mattress on the type, with his wife perched upon his shoulder for extra weight. The experiment was a success, and electrotyping was in general use within a few years thereafter.

Mr. Knight moved to Brooklyn in 1852, and bringing with him his electrotype process for fine printing, he installed an electrotype department for Harper & Brothers in Manhattan and remained in superintendent of their plant for more than forty years. Mr. Knight was a remarkable man in many ways, and retained, until near the end, the appearance of a man not more than sixty years old.

Your Indiana Market

Is 276 Miles Long and 140 Miles Wide

2,779,467 people live there—plus the increase in population since 1914. There are 654,891 homes—plus those that have been created since 1910. For the most part these homes are of the AMERICAN KIND, each one a market for American goods—each one reached by newspaper advertising.

The combined circulation of the Indiana newspapers listed here matches—slightly over-matches—the total number of families of record at the last census.

You can advertise to these 658.022 people—home people, splendidly prosperous, liberal buyers of all the goods things of life—at a cost of about $1.06 per line.

This presents one of those fascinating market-winning opportunities so much to be desired in planning state or sectional selling campaigns. Get these Indiana people interested in your product and your Indiana problem will be solved!

AN AUDIENCE OF 1,834,658

Reached by These Illinois Newspapers

There were 1,264,717 FAMILIES in ILLINOIS according to the last census figures. There are many more to-day, of course, for these figures were compiled in 1910.

1,834,658 people are reached every day by the Illinois daily newspapers listed here—and these figures are up to date!

To appeal to these people, through their newspapers, will cost about $2.17 per agate line.

What kind of people are they? YOUR kind—OUR KIND—live, intelligent, progressive, energetic people; prosperous, automobile-owning, newspaper reading people, able to buy the best in the land. As a class they are richer to-day than yesterday—have more wants to supply, more plans to pursue, more interests to occupy their minds.

Illinois GROWS ALL THE TIME. A hundred years ago her population was one-tenth of one person to each square mile of her rich lands; now it is well over one hundred. For a full century the land of opportunity, Illinois is to-day the land of realization.

Gain your rightful foothold in her markets and you will have won a business asset of enduring value. These newspapers point the way.

THE A. B. C. MOVES FORWARD

WITHIN the brief span of five years the Audit Bureau of Circulations has definitely "arrived." Out of the need of advertisers and publishers alike for a definite standard of measurement applying to circulations has grown an organization which today responds to that need in an efficient and generally satisfactory way.

The high standard of service rendered by the Bureau now has not been attained without struggle and conflict. An ideal was at stake from the very inception of the organization—and ideals do not find ready acceptance always, even by those to whom they would naturally bring the greatest benefits.

The basic idea of the A. B. C. has been to place the buying and selling of advertising space upon the same foundation which supports other lines of business. Definite information as to circulations was to be afforded to those who buy advertising. Guesses, surmises, "claims," brag and boast were to be eliminated, and cold fasts disclosed.

It was conceded from the first that an organization undertaking to audit and certify to circulations should be under the control of buyers, not sellers, of advertising space. It was also conceded that the bureau should furnish standardized information—that the same set of facts should be shown as to the circulations of all papers audited. And it was the purpose of the directors of the bureau, from the first, that its audit reports should be on a par, in every essential of accuracy and clarity, with bank audits, and should be as accepted by the business world.

Many difficulties were encountered as the work progressed. An over-cautious element of the membership held the fear that, if the republication of less than the full audit reports should be allowed publishers would garble the facts and misuse the prestige of the bureau. This contention led to a hampering publicity by-law, which has been practically suppress the circulation facts established through the investigations of the bureau and to materially limit the promotional value of the audits to publishers. At one time this short-sighted policy seriously threatened the very existence of the organization. But the remedy was found in a more liberal regulation.

The bureau executives and directors have, indeed, succeeded in clearing away many obstacles which confronted the enterprise—including that of insufficient revenues to cover adequate and prompt service. The A. B. C. moves in annual convention this year under happy conditions. The audit work is now proceeding on schedule, with ample reserves and revenues. The audits are accepted as fully authoritative by a vast majority of national advertisers. Old abuses in the advertising business are well nigh extinct. What was, five years ago, a dream is now an achievement. Newspapers and advertisers have equal cause for gratification because of the record made and making.

THE AMERICAN WAY

AT the Buffalo convention of the I. C. S. A. last week J. D. Hardy, chief clerk of district number nine, Railway Mail Service, told the circulators how better cooperation between the newspapers and the department might be developed. Mr. Hardy did not assume the traditional, arrogant attitude of claiming perfection for the mail service and rebuking its critics. He talked in the frank, candid manner of a fair-minded business man, conscious of the limitations of the task with which he is associated, but anxious to remove them and to have in that task the aid of the men directly concerned.

Mr. Hardy's address was printed in EDITOR & PUBLISHER as the outstanding feature of the convention. We have been informed that what he said had the full sanction of the department.

We should have better mail service as a result of this message to the newspapers—better service through the better understanding it affords of what sort of cooperation the department expects from the circulators in the way of dispatching mail. It is the American way to object to governmental inefficiency, linked with official complacency and standpatism. And it is the American way to applaud a disposition, such as Mr. Hardy assures us the department has, to render better service.

TO PRESERVE SANITY IN THE WORLD

A GOOD deal of history has been made within the last five years. "The Moving Finger" has written large the ineffaceable record of days that are dead, of outlived regimes, of unlamensed policies.

The lavishly Scribe of old Omar's fancy, wielding his grim stylus, has turned to new pages in the book of the world's life. He has closed his account with Autocracy, writing his final entries in the dread red ink of sacrifice.

He has recorded the triumph of Democracy over its ancient foes, only to see it menaced by new antagonisms, emerging from the long night of inequalities and sore wrongs through which mankind has passed. He sees fanatical individualism, seeking to enthrone itself on a platform of class rule, storming at the bastions of civilization, preaching rebellion against majority government. But the old Scribe knows the end—knows the thorny paths which men must traverse in journeying toward the sun—knows the inevitable course of evolutionary sociology—and he smiles at the puppet show.

Just now the Scribe is busy with the record of the world's reaction after the years of struggle. He views the unhappy spectacle of class clashes—labor resenting the usurpation of its share of the goods and chattels of the earth by capital and greed, yet reaching out to grasp for itself autocratic power.

He sees the professed protectors of the democratic idea—men in high places—holding to old and illusory visions, stirring up opposition to the plan for a League of Nations as though it involved a surrender not only of nationalism, but of democratic rule. He witnesses a new Babel, a resurgence of petty racial and political prejudices and animosities.

It is a time for sane counsel, for leadership. It is time for a leadership that shall be impersonal, functioning through the free press of the free nations—our own in the pace-making place. Our newspapers must make it their first concern that reactionary fanaticism shall cease to sway the minds of men; that neither capital nor labor shall establish a class autocracy in a land which has paid the terrible price always exacted for liberty and law.

We live under a democracy. Let our press keep this fact alive in the consciousness of all men. Under a real democracy revolution is a crime—its advocacy is outlawry. There is not a present ill of our body politic for which a remedy is not to be found through orderly procedure. Our press must make it plain that the Soviet idea cannot thrive in a free nation. It cannot claim the protection, in its propagation, of that democratic right of free speech which it seeks to overthrow. In its advocates want war, let them have it. It will not be a war waged with the usual weapons of offense and defense—but a warfare of light against darkness, of reason against fanaticism, of enlightment against ignorance and hatred.

A NATIONAL HUMILIATION

HON. MARTIN A. MORRISON, president of the United States Civil Service Commission, has sent a letter to editors stating that the offices of the Government at Washington "are in the most urgent need of large numbers of stenographers, typists and bookkeepers, both men and women." The Commission, he says, finds it impossible to meet the calls for workers of these classes "through the means of publicity ordinarily at its command."

The letter continues: "The Commission requests that you insert in this important matter appearing in your journal, free of cost, an announcement substantially the same as that contained in the printed circular enclosed herewith. The Commission will be glad to receive a copy of any issue in which the announcement appears."

There is no desire on the part of EDITOR & PUBLISHER to criticise President Morrison, or the Civil-Service Commission, by whose direction this request has been made. The commissioners realize the urgent need of the Government for advertising. They confess that the public business is right now suffering because of the inadequacy of the means for advertising at their command.

EVERY MEMBER OF CONGRESS SHOULD RECEIVE A COPY OF THIS LETTER, in which the richest nation in the world is shown in the attitude, HUMILIATINGLY, OF BEGGAR-BEFORE-THE AMERICANS, of asking for donations from publishers of advertising space—the principal commodity which publishers have for sale. Our law-makers at Washington should be forced to realize the shame of a national policy which makes it necessary for Uncle Sam to ask for contributions of this or any other kind in order that the wheels of his Government may move on.

No; President Morrison is not to blame for this wretched situation. The Congress is responsible. And it is a situation for which each individual member should be made to feel his personal responsibility. It is high time that the game of partisan politics now engaging the absorbed interest of our legislators at Washington should be interrupted for a while, in order that proper provision should be made to enable the Government; to carry on the public business.

A SINISTER PORTENT

THE daily newspapers of Vancouver have been suspended, temporarily, due to an unprecedented situation. Unbalanced by an impulse toward economic rebellion, arising in part from the steadily falling value of the dollar and in part from that ugly wave of class domination which is lashing in fury at the walls of established order, printers of Vancouver have demanded the right of censorship of the newspapers.

The Vancouver newspapers, on pain of suspension of publication, have refused to concede that right to their mechanical staffs. If they had wavered, or had abdicated in the face of this sinister compulsion, their action would have opened the door to the tyranny of class rule on this continent—and the result could not have been other than disastrous to democratic ideals.

Just now the newspapers of Vancouver are battling for civilization—and for much more than is comprised in that term. The principle at stake is as vital to the life of the world as any other for which men have fought and died. Just now the front line trenches are in Vancouver. If they do not hold against the assault, the warfare will be carried to other fields. No good purpose will be served by indifference on the part of American publishers to the sinister portent. It must be met and vanquished through the marshaling of that public opinion which, in democracies, holds the reins of power, and before which organized fanaticism cannot stand.

"WE believe that you will agree with us that the buying habits of the public may be formed, demand may be created and goodwill established on any day of the week," writes William Simpson, business manager of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. We do, emphatically.

HONOR MAN WHO "PEPPED" LOUISVILLE AD CIRCLES

Bert N. Garstin

Recognition of his talents for leadership has just been accorded Bert N. Garstin, advertising manager of the Louisville Courier Journal and Louisville Times, in his election as president of the Advertising Club of Louisville. He was elected to serve one year. Mr. Garstin came to Louisville from Baltimore less than a year ago and but no time "pepping up" the advertising fraternity in the Kentucky metropolis.

Members of the club liked his style and quickly decided to reward it. D. Hauger was elected first vice-president of the club, while F. C. Adams, Robert Montgomery and Frank Brownstein were elected directors. Mr. Montgomery returned to Louisville only a few weeks ago from France, where he served as a first lieutenant.

John J. Floherty, late of the Tracy-Parry Company, Philadelphia, is now director of sales promotion for J. A. Migel, Inc., New York.

Chester A. Porter, until recently with Wood, Putnam & Wood, Boston, has been elected vice-president and a director of the Sacks Company, Inc., New York.

This Service lifts the lid of government and shows how the wheels go round. It does this through copy to the editor, booklets to readers, and answers to questions from both.

Frederick J. Haskin, of Washington, D. C., operates this Service.

AD BUREAU DUES TO BE EQUALIZED

Committee in Charge Adopts Plan for Determining Membership Fees on Basis of Line Rates of Newspapers for Advertising

After several months' study of various plans for the enlargement of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and the raising of the necessary funds for opening the needed branch offices in Chicago and on the Pacific Coast, the Committee in Charge of the Bureau, at a meeting on Tuesday, June 10, adopted a new scale of dues which, it is believed, will greatly increase the present membership.

Hitherto the fees of newspapers supporting the Bureau were based on the size of their cities, according to an arbitrary table of populations and rates. There had always been complaints that this plan was not entirely equitable, and many publishers have urged a revision of rates that would take into consideration the advertising revenues of the various publications.

Delegations from the Newspaper Representatives Association of Chicago, and the Pacific Coast Publishers appeared before the Committee at the recent A. N. P. A. Convention and were insistent in their demands that the facilities of the Bureau be enlarged to meet the unusual present conditions.

When the new Committee organized with William F. Rogers as Chairman, the matter was taken up for consideration and after much discussion the Finance Committee was instructed to prepare a report.

Statisticians were put to work, and after several months of study a plan was prepared which was adopted by the Committee in the form of the following resolution:

The New Basis

"RESOLVED, That on and after November 30, 1919, the basis of apportioning dues for the members of the Bureau of Advertising shall be on the combined minimum daily line rate for foreign advertising.

"This new rate applies to present members of the Bureau, beginning November 30, 1919, but all new members accepted after the adoption of this resolution are to pay on the new basis.

"The method of calculation shall be $2 per month for each cent per line of the publication's minimum foreign or national daily advertising rate, provided that no dues shall be less than $25 per month.

"The dues of Canadian members shall be calculated on the basis of one dollar per month for each cent per line of the published minimum foreign or national daily advertising rate, provided that no dues shall be less than $12 per month.

"Members who wish to abrogate their present contracts at once shall be accepted at the new rates."

Announcement of the change was made on the Bureau's bulletin of this week, and simultaneously was sent to all members in a letter over the signatures of all members of the Committee in Charge.

Another letter has been sent to all publishers not members of the Bureau, notifying them of the change and inviting them to become members of the Bureau under the new plan.

The Six Point League of New York and the Newspaper Representatives Association of Chicago are backing up the drive for new members.

The equity of the new basis is apparent. The fees of some members will be reduced and in other cases there will be slight increases of rate, but in no case will the increase be burdensome, and in all cases where there is an increase it will fall on the papers that are enjoying their share of the present unusual prosperity.

The committee believes that the new scale will be enthusiastically received, and that it will result in a large increase in membership and a coincident increase in revenue that will permit extensions to be made this fall.

CIRCULATION NOTES

C. A. Shaughnessy, formerly circulation manager of the Winnipeg Daily Tribune, has joined the Vancouver (B. C.) Daily World in a similar position. He was with the Tribune for eighteen years.

Thomas C. Ridge, for the past fourteen months on the advertising staff of the Quincy (Ill.) Journal, has joined the circulation force of the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia.

The first "airplane edition" in Chicago newspaper history was printed by the Chicago American, June 3, and delivered by sky pilots at Kankakee and Champaign. Big crowds greeted the arrival of the airplane. Similar deliveries are planned for other nearby cities. Several years ago, an attempt was made by the American's circulation manager, J. N. Eisenlord, to deliver newspapers by airplane to Elgin, Ill., but the machine selected for the purpose was not heavy enough to make headway in a strong wind that prevailed that day.

John A. J. Fenton (Jack), circulation globe trotter, representing the New York American in France and Europe, was recently given a welcome home dinner.

The Des Moines Tribune is publishing a series of group pictures of all high school graduates in the various institutions of the city. A print of each group is made in a rotogravure tint on a heavy enamel paper and sent to the home address of each student.

The Bridgeport (Conn.) Sunday Post appeared June 8 with a four-page rotogravure section. It is the first Connecticut paper to add this feature. The regular comic supplement is continued. The policy of the Post Publishing Company now is to stress features in the weekly.

The first aerial delivery of newspapers in Maine was inaugurated June 13, when the regular Old Orchard consignment of Portland Express-Advertisers was delivered by air route.

The Philadelphia Record reports gratifying success in adding Sunday circulation through a 16-page motion picture magazine supplement done in rotogravure. Harry Goldberg is editor of the supplement.

Thirty-six Tulsa (Okla.) newsies have signed up for the Newsboys' Camp, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Tulsa newspaper men and women have been busy securing the funds for the camp.

Miss Edythe M. Wildman, secretary to J. A. McNeil, circulation manager of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Evening Herald, and Edward F. Langner, formerly in the business office of the Telegram, were wed June 11.

Members of Schenectady, N. Y., were in their glory June 14 when their own band, numbering 50 pieces, played for the first time in the parade of the Volunteer Fire Departments. Firemen gave the newsboys an old-fashioned feed afterwards.

The Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal and the Herald are holding rival circulation promotion contests. The Journal is offering 14 automobiles and Liberty Bonds, valued at $24,000; while the Herald's prizes are 14 automobiles and a house and lot, valued at $25,000.

The St. Paul Daily News had a week's laughter story contest with a daily prize as incentive and reward.

ANNOUNCE THE NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED NEWS

to day, "The Whimsical Three," starts in the first issue of the new publication.

Entering New Field

The idea behind the new venture of the Chicago Tribune seems to be identical with that which has made the London Daily Graphic and the London Daily Mirror successful in the newspaper field without actually competing with other newspapers. Like the London publications it resembles, it will not print news events in detail. It will not attempt to give its readers complete news reports, but only that which is of remarkable interest and which lends itself readily to illustration.

The new newspaper is designed along sprightly lines that appeal to the tired business man and the tired housewife. It will contain "snappy stuff" that can be seen and read quickly. If anyone wants a complete compendium of world events, he or she can read other newspapers. To be immediately entertained or interested, one can read the Illustrated Daily News.

A "dummy" of the first issue contains illustrations of "What Bomb Wreckers Did in Three Cities," pictures of Jess Willard, of a coachload of members of the Piekwick Club starting on their annual drive through London streets, of Parisian belles, indicating that stripes and fringes will predominate in the summer frocks of the fashionably attired, of British troops suppressing riots in Delhi, India, and many other pictures that are easy to look at and are not calculated to result in mental prostration.

Readers of the "dummy" of the Illustrated Daily News also learn that the Prince of Wales is a regular chap now, who has a ready smile, can dance and chat, and loves escapades; that New York has fewer mosquitoes than any other city in the world; that American rich men have lost the art of keeping their wives' love and that French men are the most constant; that the Abyssinian wife is always counted as the head of the house, and that there are nearly two thousand Jewish widows in Jerusalem.

Affairs of the Heart

Illustrated Daily News also will print real love stories and pay for them. If you have had a real affair of the heart and can tell it convincingly—"no attention will be paid to literary style"—it will put you ahead $5 at the expense of the publishers. For instance, in the "dummy" you read that Keith and a certain young woman were enamored of each other but Keith called on another girl and was planning to take her out buggy riding. He left the horse loosely tied and the animal wandered over to the other girl's house, taking the buggy with him, and Keith had to go after it and then there was a big laugh and a reconciliation and Keith and his "steady girl" lives happily ever afterward.

Then there is a department of the new paper which is devoted to the "Bright Sayings of Children." If your offspring says anything worth while—not what you think is worth while but that really is—the Illustrated Daily News will pay a dollar for it.

You can also read in the "dummy" of the Illustrated Daily News that C. E. is in an awful condition. After he has smoked about a fourth of a cigarette, his vision becomes impaired and he gets weak in the knees. He blushes when food on a fork fails to hit his mouth and he asks Dr. Evans, the medical authority of the News, whether there is anything the matter with him physically, or whether his troubles are due to a lack of self-confidence. The doctor's reply is that C. E.'s trouble is mental rather than physical, and the doctor is right.

Higher Interest

Did you know that thirty-five billion pennies have been coined by the United States mints and that no one knows what has become of them, that a Philadelphian has invented a wireless telephone that can be attached to an umbrella, or that New York City has two million dogs? The Illustrated Daily News will keep you informed on a wide variety of human interest and curious topics.

Arthur La Telle Clarke, the editor of the new paper, is a regular fellow. He is 50 years old but looks a good deal younger. He worked as a reporter in Springfield, Ohio, Omaha, and for the Chicago City Press Association. Then he was Washington correspondent for the San Francisco Chronicle, Chicago correspondent for the New York Journal and the San Francisco Examiner, London correspondent for the Chicago Tribune, city editor of the Chicago Examiner, city editor of the Chicago American, managing editor of the Los Angeles Examiner, editor-in-chief of the Boston American, city editor of the Chicago Herald until it was merged with the Chicago Examiner, and then and until lately city editor of the New York World.

The officers of the company are: J. M. Patterson, president; R. R. McCormick, 1st vice-president; William H. Field, 2d vice-president; R. R. McCormick, treasurer; George Unasy, secretary; S. E. Thomason, assistant secretary, and Arthur S. Clarke, editor.

The size of paper is to be 16½ x 11½ inches, outside measurement, the type form to be 14½ by 10½ inches. The make-up is four columns and the size will be 16 pages, unless enlarged by advertising. The advertising rate is $200 a column.

The London Daily Mirror, a famous prototype of the Illustrated Daily News, achieved success that was based upon the idea that the public liked to look at pictures of news events. Within less than a year after this idea was born, the circulation of the Mirror jumped from 71,-660 to 290,658. That was in 1904. Today the circulation of the Mirror is well over a million. Its most famous editor, the late Alexander Kenealy, like the present editor, Edward Flyun, began newspaper work in America.

The London Sunday Pictorial, published in the offices of the London Daily Mirror, has the largest circulation of any illustrated Sunday newspaper in the world. It never printed less than a million copies and now prints, on an average, 2,300,000 copies. It was started early in 1915.

Dr. Ellis' Detention in Egypt

The Senate adopted June 17 Senator Borah's resolution calling upon the State Department for information as to the reasons for the alleged detention at Cairo, Egypt, of the New York Herald's special correspondent, Dr. William T. Ellis.

Managing Editor Gets State Job

James E. Doyle, managing editor of the Syracuse Herald, has been appointed deputy superintendent of public works for the state of New York, a position carrying a salary of $5,500 a year.

Telephone Strike on Coast

Telephone operators throughout California went on strike June 17. Representatives of the operators stated that some of their number were staying at their posts to answer hospital, newspaper and other emergency calls.

Americanism is Enthroned in Iowa

Alien sentiment disappears in Iowa like mist before the sun. The state is vibrant with Americanism, sturdy, unyielding allegiance to the ideals that have made it great.

It is a rich state—rich in other things than fruitful fields, prosperous cities and productive industries. It is rich in homes.

Home folks, happily anchored to worthy ideals and aspirations, constitute a sort of super-wealth for any state.

They are the mainstays of industry. They buy those products which are "sterling" in character and worth.

To sell your goods in Iowa you must link dealer-distribution with localized advertising. You must tell about your product in Iowa newspapers. You must have it on sale in Iowa stores.

Then, if you are selling something which always makes good, Iowa is "for you!"

Here is a list of newspapers whose circulations cover this great and rich commonwealth which stretches 300 miles from East to West—from the Mississipi to the Missouri.

PAYNE HOME FROM FRANCE WITH WAR HONORS

After active service with the 28th Division, George H. Payne has returned from France and resumed his business duties as vice-president of the G. Logan Payne Company. As told in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week, Mr. Payne goes to Detroit as representative of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, and as manager of the Payne Company and the list of newspapers represented by G. Logan Payne, his father.

G. H. PAYNE

Before entering the Army, Mr. Payne was manager of the G. Logan Payne Company's New York office, and as a soldier was in the front lines at Thiau Court and Metz. His division had the fourth largest casualty list in the A. E. F. Mr. Payne was a victim of phosgene gas, which sent him to the hospital for a while. His assistant in Detroit will be Frank Payne, an aviator, who was assistant to the chief instructor in flying at San Antonio.

Shows War Uses of Pulp and Paper

18. Publisher members shall receive three copies of each of the statements and audit reports of the other publications in their class and field, which shall be furnished to them from the Chicago office of the Bureau when published members indicate their preference whether same shall be furnished in duplicate or triplicate.

19. Publisher members or their representatives may purchase and receive a reasonable number of competitors' statements, in addition to the three which are furnished free of charge. The charge for this extra service is to be ten cents for each statement.

12. All dues shall be payable quarterly in advance. Failure to pay dues within thirty days after notice is given by the Bureau shall subject member either to suspension from membership in the Bureau.

IV.—TERMINATION OF MEMBERSHIP.

1. A publisher member may resign from the Bureau by giving notice, in writing, of such intention, at least three months prior to the end of the regular statement period covered in his class or group, and all dues and fees then due paid in full and a publisher's statement so rendered for that unexpired period for which his resignation is tendered. Such resignation will be accepted when an audit has been made of the statement released, provided however, that if such audit is not made within three months after the end of the period covered by such resignation, the resignation shall be automatically accepted.

2. A member, other than a publisher member, may resign from the bureau by giving the bureau three months' notice, in writing, of such intention, and by paying dues to and including the quarter in which the expiration of the three months' notice falls.

3. Any member who shall violate any of the by-laws, rules or regulations of the Bureau, or who shall be guilty of making false or misleading statements, or who shall conduct or who shall be guilty of conduct which endangers the welfare of the bureau, may be summarily suspended or expelled by the board of directors as the board shall determine to be just and proper, and gravity of the offense committed; provided always that ten days' notice be first given of the sorrel upon the offending member, and said member shall have an opportunity to be heard in his own defense.

4. Termination of membership, for any cause whatsoever, shall operate as a release of all right or title in, or interest in the property or assets of the bureau.

5. A member whose membership has been terminated for any reason whatsoever may be reinstated upon such conditions as may be fixed by the board of directors.

V. PUBLICITY.

1. No member shall publish or cause to be published, or advertise, or cause to be advertised, excerpts from the audits of the bureau or to publish or cause to be published, or advertise or cause to be advertised, the fact that the publisher's statements to the bureau, which excerpts shall mention in any way, directly or by implication, the name or authority of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, except as is permitted under the rules and regulations of the bureau.

VI. BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

1. The control and management of the bureau shall be vested in a board of directors, consisting of twenty-one (21) members, who shall serve without salary, each to be elected for a term of two years. Any vacancy occurring shall be filled by the board, at any meeting of the board, to hold until the next annual meeting.

2. The board of directors shall consist of: Eleven advertiser (Class A) members.

Two advertising agents (Class B) members.

Five daily newspaper publication (Class C) members.

Two magazine publisher (Class F) members.

Two farm paper publisher (Class F) members.

Two business paper publisher (Class G) members.

3. The members of each class above named shall, at or prior to the annual meeting, meet and nominate a candidate to succeed the director in their class whose term will expire, presenting only nominations at the annual meeting. Candidates receiving a plurality vote of all members voting at the annual meeting shall be declared elected.

4. The board of directors shall have power to make, publish and enforce such rules and regulations as they may deem necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the bureau. Such rule shall be in full force and effect when rescinded by the board or by two-thirds vote of members voting at any annual or special meeting called for the purpose.

5. The annual meeting of the board of directors shall be held at the general offices of the bureau in Chicago, immediately following the adjournment of the annual meeting of the bureau. Special meetings of the board shall be held upon the call, in writing, of the president or any five members of the board of directors. Five days' notice shall be given by the secretary to all directors of the holding of any special meeting. Five members of the board shall constitute a quorum. Any director absent from three consecutive meetings of the board shall lose membership on the board.

6. The board of directors shall appoint a managing director, not a member of the board, to serve for such time and on one year at his salary.

7. The board of directors shall create such committees as may be necessary for carrying on the work of accomplishing the objects of the bureau, the members of such committees to be appointed by the president, subject to the approval of the board of directors.

VII. OFFICERS.

1. The officers of the bureau shall consist of a president, first vice president, second vice-president, third vice-president, secretary and treasurer, who shall be elected by and from the board of directors, and who shall hold office for the period of one year and until the election and qualification of their successors.

2. No person shall be elected president of the bureau who is not a Class A member.

VIII. DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

1. The president shall preside at all meetings of the board and of the bureau and of executives. He shall cast the deciding vote at any meeting when there is a tie vote. He is an ex-officio member of all committees.

2. In the absence of the president, the vice-presidents in their successive order shall perform all duties.

3. The secretary shall keep a record of all proceedings of the bureau and of the board of directors. In the event of the absence of the secretary the managing director shall become acting secretary.

4. The treasurer shall supervise the accounts of the bureau, receive all moneys, pay bills when properly approved by the managing director for all payments. He shall render a report at the annual meeting of the bureau and such other reports as may be required, from time to time, of the board of directors.

5. The duties of the managing director shall be to direct the field operations of the bureau, and to make all necessary contracts on behalf of the bureau, subject to the approval of the board of directors. He shall make a report annually to the directors, and such other reports as may frequently be required by them, setting forth the progress of the bureau in the territory under his charge, together with suggestions tending to improve the service. He shall perform such duties and such other duties as the board of directors may require.

6. The President, Treasurer and managing director shall receive such salaries as may be determined by the board of directors, the emoluments on same to be paid by the bureau.

IX. MEETINGS.

1. The annual meeting of the bureau shall be held in Chicago on the first Friday in October, or at such other time as may be determined by the board of directors, at Chicago. Notice, in writing, shall be given by the secretary to the members not less than ten days prior to the date of such meeting.

2. Each Division A, D and F member shall have one vote either in person or by proxy at the annual meeting. Each B, C and E member shall have a fractional vote, either in person or by proxy, of one-quarter for each service taken.

3. At any meeting of the bureau fifty members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and a majority vote shall decide all questions unless otherwise provided for by by-laws.

4. At the annual meeting of the bureau, the president, treasurer and secretary shall submit formal reports for the approval of the bureau.

5. Special meetings of the bureau may be called by the president, or shall be called by him upon the written request of at least fifty members. Notice of the date and purpose of such meetings shall be sent by the secretary to the members at least ten days prior to the date of the meeting.

P. O. WANTS BOOK REVIEWS CHARGED AS ADS.

In other words, "What is newspaper advertising" seems to have been made a new and broad issue between the department and the publishers.

The letter in question from the Post Office Department declares that "under the Act of October 3, 1917, which fixes a higher rate of postage on the advertising portion of publications, all advertising must be considered, whether it is paid for or inserted free, and charged with rates applicable to advertising sections."

The contention of the New York publishers, as expressed in a letter sent to the Post Office Department, is that "nothing is advertising unless the space occupied is paid for directly or indirectly."

Mustn't Print Prices

The controversy began when P. B. Gavin, acting chief of the Bureau of Second Class Mail, of the New York City general post office, enclosed a copy of a book review section of a New York City newspaper in a letter to the Post Office Department at Washington, asking whether book reviews in which the price of books was mentioned were to be classed as advertising. He received a reply, signed by the Third Assistant Postmaster General, in charge of the Division of Classification, which said:

"Concerning the classification of book reviews within the meaning of the act of October 3, 1917, when the prices of books reviewed are given in connection therewith, I have to say that frequently publications containing reviews of books also contain paid advertisements of the publishers of the books.

A Ruling on "Write-Ups"

"In regard to this, it may be stated that in administering the law governing the entry of publications as second-class matter, it has always been the practice to regard as advertising, write-ups, puffs and recommendations of books advertised for sale in a publication.

"When a publication consisted largely of such matter, it came within the provision of the law prohibiting the entry as second-class matter of publications 'designed primarily for advertising purposes,' and was, consequently, denied such entry.

"When such write-ups of articles advertised in a publication formed only an incidental feature as compared with the publication in its entirety, the matter, although advertising, nevertheless had no effect on the second-class mail privilege nor on the rate of postage applicable thereto, the same rate being chargeable on both the advertising and the non-advertising portions.

"Under the act of October 3, 1917, which fixes a higher rate of postage on the advertising portion of a publication, all advertising must be considered, regardless of whether it is paid for or inserted free, and charged with rates applicable to the advertising portion.

"This matter has been given most careful consideration, and although there would appear to be some reasons why all book reviews should be regarded as advertising, nevertheless, for the present, where the books reviewed are selected by the editor or the publisher thereof and the reviews are inserted exclusively for the information of its readers and not in connection in any way, understanding or agreement with any one interested in the sale of the books, the reviews will be regarded as matter other than advertising for the purpose of determining the postage chargeable on the publication, provided the prices of the books are not given and reviews are otherwise free from features intended to give them the appearance of being designed to promote the sale of the books.

"It has been observed that a number of periodicals publish lists of publishable and give the prices in connection with their book reviews, and where the prices are given solely for the purpose as information to the readers of a publication it would seem that the listing of prices of the books is in no way essential to such purpose.

"A copy of this letter is inclosed for delivery to the publishers."

A record of this letter from the Post Office Department at Washington, Mr. Gavin made the New York newspaper publishers acquainted with its contents and received a reply a letter written in their behalf, the context of which was substantially as follows:

Publishers' Views

"The suggestion that prices in review of books elevates them to an editorial, and not a mere representation of the postal regulations, since it tends to leave from the latentive to the reader a monetary value into a purely news practice, and deprive readers of essential information.

"Book reviews have nothing to do with advertising. They are written entirely for the benefit of readers. The price is necessary for proper judgment as to the relative value of a book.

"For instance, a subscriber who is a student of a particular science would scarcely be interested in a book on the subject if it were addressed to popular appeal, for it would have slight technical value. The higher the price, the more the review would indicate that the book addressed itself to workers of knowledge.

"Neither book publishers nor readers consider prices quoted to be advertising. Publishers frequently neglect to supply prices to editors, and the book review department of daily newspapers are compelled to telephone publishing houses for such information.

"Nothing is advertising unless the space occupied is paid for directly or indirectly. There is no consistency for such reviews from book publishers to newspapers.

"Reviews are written regardless of the good and bad influence on advertising. A great book criticisms appearing in newspapers frequently work to the disadvantage, though the very books themselves are advertised in the same issue. Some times for more months.

"It is suggested that before final action is taken on the question of the elimination of prices from book reviews that the Post Office Department investigate the practice of periodicals failure to meet post office officials for the purpose of agreeing to have prices from book reviews have no advertising relationship."

Purchases Home and Equipment

Stamford (Conn.) Advocate.—The Times has just put into operation a new Hoe "quad," 32-page press, which has a capacity of 24,000 sixteen-page papers per hour; a new Monotype type-casting outfit; new stereotyping machinery throughout and has increased its pages from seven columns 13 ems to eight columns 12 ems. Publisher Fred. Ewing, publisher of the Times, has just purchased the three-story brick building, 70 feet wide by 135 feet deep, which the Times has occupied exclusively, for the Times' permanent home. Increased business and the growth of the paper have necessitated enlargements in capacity for production and service.

Editorial Workers Form New Organization

International Editorial Association Calls Meeting in Cleveland, September 26-28—Clare Berger, President

WARREN, Pa., June 16.—The International Editorial Association will hold its first annual convention in Cleveland, Ohio, September 26, 27 and 28. Headquarters of the new organization have been established at 1028-1030 Hotel Statler, Cleveland. Clare Berger, president, Carol Bird, vice-president, and Claude R. Diegle, secretary of the Editorial Workers of America, have sent their resignations as officers of that organization, and will hereafter give their entire attention to the I. E. A., the purposes of which were explained by Mr. Berger to EDITOR AND PUBLISHER as follows:

"The association is strictly beneficial and fraternal in character and not similar to any other organization of newspaper men in existence. A fraternal branch known as 'Order of the Sacred Mill,' is being formed and ritualistic work is to be conducted by a staff from headquarters wherever branch clubs are formed.

"Branch clubs have already been established as follows: No. 1, Milwaukee, Wis.; No. 2, Warren, Pa.; No. 3, Fostoria, Ohio; No. 4, Cleveland; No. 5, Detroit, and No. 6 is in process of organization at Erie, Pa.

Officers of the new association are: Clare Berger, Warren (Pa.) Mirror, president; Carol Bird, Detroit Free Press, first vice-president; Edward Arkle, Wheeling (West Va.) Telegraph, second vice-president; Claude R. Diegle, Milwaukee Leader, secretary; Clare Crawford, Fostoria (Ohio) Review, treasurer.

"Surety bonds of $2,500 each have been posted by the secretary and treasurer. Dues of the organization are $2 a year, and those who wish to participate in the benefit and fraternal features, pay 20 cents per week.

"Miss Carol Bird, of Detroit, is to edit the new publication of the association."

Governments and our economic and social systems are to continue to stand and progress, must be met by intelligent and far-minded action by those who control industry. As Bolshevism is fundamentally wrong, as we understand it, in that it is class dictatorship, its spread may best be prevented by a popular understanding of it. To most men today it is merely a word, to be hated or fancied. The fact is that publicity of the right sort will show it to be a social order which sets out to procure rewards for one class of society at the expense of other classes of society, through means of oppression, dictation, autocracy, force and every other available expedient without any respect at last or any other democratic principle. The exponents of Bolshevism believe that the end justifies the means. They believe that they represent a defeated class, that this is so, and I do not say that great economic and social injustices are not operating in Canada and the United States as elsewhere, the cure of the wrong can scarcely be expected to be effective or lasting if equal wrong is resorted to as the means. The old axiom that 'two wrongs do not make a right' certainly is pat in this situation.

Says Cure Is in Publicity

"Publicity is the cure. I confess myself as having failed in my duty as a newspaper publisher to give the readers of the Vancouver Sun more information as to the real meaning of Bolshevism and hence a better understanding upon which to base judgment as to the situation now confronting them. The fact of the matter is that we editors and publishers do not, as a rule, meet the economic situation in terms of direct statement, interpretative reporting and real investigation and for our failure to give full publicity, energetically investigating the matter ourselves, we are pretty sure to pay the penalty of having a certain amount of suspicion of our motives entertained by radical elements, however much we may feel that such suspicion is unjustified.

"Today we are up against a real fight for the freedom of Canada's press. It is too late to discuss what we might have done, but it is not too late for us to decide what we shall in the future do, if we shall continue to operate our newspapers. I have talked freely with you because I believe that the problem which is personal to me today may be personal to many of your editors and publishers in the future, unless means are found to meet and cure these symptoms of Bolshevism. And I repeat: You can't cure them without economic justice and full publicity."

During more than three weeks the people of Winnipeg have been cut off from daily newspapers as a result of the so-called Bolshevist revolution there. The strikers are operating a rigid censorship of telegraphs and the only newspaper which is permitted to be printed is the Western Labor News, the organ of the striking forces.

It is estimated that more than 30,000 people are directly involved in the Winnipeg struggle

The Federal Government has appointed a parliamentary commission to investigate the high cost of living and its causes and there is talk that a definite industrial policy will be inaugurated.

Dying Reporter Thinks of Duty First

Epic Story of a British Journalist Who Despatched His Copy After Fatal Injuries

By Herbert C. Ridout,
Leading Editor of Vision & Punchbowl

London, June 3.—James Harvey Dale is a name that deserves to be writ large in the annals of the world's press.

He was a junior reporter—a mere boy of 16—on the staff of a London suburban newspaper, the South Eastern Herald. While on an assignment last week with a pocket full of copy, he was cycling from Woolwich to the editorial offices at Greenwich when a defective car-rail threw him from his machine and he fell under a motor lorry.

The editor of the paper said that after receiving his injuries, which proved fatal soon after his removal to hospital, he took out of his pocket a parcel of copy and requested a bystander to take it on to the newspaper office, saying it was very important.

This, observed the editor, was the spirit which on the battlefield would win the Victoria Cross.

WOUNDED HEROES AS PRINTERS

Training to Be Had on New Army Hospital Newspaper "Recall"

A full-fledged newspaper called the Recall is now being published in the interest of the wounded heroes who are convalescing at Fort Sheridan. The printing of this new organ was handled by the Peterson Linotyping Company, Chicago, until the arrival of the linotype ordered by the staff officers.

"SUCKER" PUBLISHERS FORM TO THE RIGHT

They May Line Up Quite Easily to Sell Denver Concern's Oil Stocks on Contingent Advertising Basis—Boom Fever Runs High

Come on, boys—the sucker line forms to the right!

Today we have the "Investment Financing Corporation," of Denver, Colo., in the box-office taking the tickets for one of the neatest little advertising comedies that has come to our attention in several moons.

A New England newspaper publisher was kind enough to hand us the advance notices for this show.

You see, according to a letter which is signed "C. W. Stead," for the corporation, that concern wants to advertise in newspapers and "will spend 10 per cent of the money received from your territory for your advertising," adding by way of inducement that "few, if any, of even your best advertisers spend as much as this."

Mr. Stead then unfolds his plan. It is an offering of a "combination" of stocks in companies with holdings in certain oil fields. Says Stead: "An investor who buys in a number of companies is almost sure to pick a winner. The law of average increases his chances tremendously." This gentleman is also the author of the catchphrase: "A sawed-off shot gun seldom misses."

Now, all that a newspaper publisher has to do for the Investment Financing Corporation, of Denver, is to "advance" a small amount of space and "if you furnish us $100 worth of your space at your regular rates we will guarantee to pay you five per cent of all money received from your territory and to spend an additional five per cent for additional space."

Yep, they give an affidavit testifying as to the amount of money received and pay up by the tenth of the month.

As to the responsibility of the newspaper editor to his readers, why, says the circular, the investor gets a number of chances, anyone of which, if successful, would make him "a lot" of money.

There are contingent advertising contracts to sign printed very nicely on both yellow and white paper.

Gee whiz, when oil gets in the blood there's no telling how high the fever of the patient will go, is there?

MOUNT VERNON ARGUS OPENS FINE NEW HOME FOR INSPECTION OF ITS FRIENDS

THE Mt. Vernon (N. Y.) Argus held a public inspection of its building on June 17, and the city turned out to visit the handsome new home, and admire its many splendid appointments. Newspapermen, from different points nearby, were in attendance, and the proprietors, Stiles and Merriam, were warmly congratulated on their enterprise, energy and ability. The officers of Stiles and Merriam, Inc., are: Mark D. Stiles, president; Franklin A. Merriam, vice-president and treasurer; Maurice S. Porter, secretary. The Argus was established in 1892 and is the only newspaper published in Mount Vernon.

The new home of the Argus is one of the handsomest in the state. Originally, a bank building of ornate and impressive Gothic design, it has been remodeled into one of the most attractive printing establishments to be found any where. The main business office is especially striking in appearance. It is of colonial design and a marble counter with an onyx top, faces the lobby.

The editorial rooms and private offices are located on the mezzanine floor, and leading therefrom are the linotype machines. On the first floor is the composing room and an impressive sight is presented, with the mezzanine enclosure in green and white, going around the top of the composing and advertising departments, practically making a second floor in the building, but permitting impressive height of ceiling that is quite striking.

In the basement is located the stereotyping machinery and the new 32-page Hoe Simplex press, the largest press of its kind between New York and Albany on the north, and New York and Bridgeport on the east. The press room is a model of light and convenience. Here the walls and ceiling have been enameled in white, and the press room has become a veritable show place.

Texans Charter Special Train

DALLAS, Tex., June 16—Texas delegates to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World convention in New Orleans, La., September 21-25, have chartered a special train which will tour the State of Texas before reaching New Orleans. The action was taken by a special meeting of the executive committee here. Chambers of commerce throughout the State will be asked to form advertising divisions to get recognition from the national associations through their affiliations with the State organization.

Indiana Women Elect Officers

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 15.—The Woman's Press Club of Indiana has elected the following officers: Mrs. William Herschell, Indianapolis, president; Mrs. Sara Messing Stern, Terre Haute, first vice-president; Etta Craven Hegare, Danville, second vice-president; Mrs. William T. Dobson, Indianapolis, third vice-president; Miss Myrtle Griffin Spencer, secretary; Miss Florence Herz, Indianapolis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. O. L. Demaree, Franklin, treasurer; Mindwell Crampton Wilson, Delphi, historian; Mrs. Edward Franklin White, Indianapolis, author.

Held on Bribery Charge

The Federal Grand Jury on June 13 indicted Jay A. Weber, of the Pictorial Review Company, New York, who was arrested on June 6 and held in $50,000 bail on a charge of offering a bribe of $25,000 to an agent of the Internal Revenue Department, if he would certify to the accuracy of the tax return made by the company.

FAVORS CONTINUANCE OF ZONE LAW

Texas Press Association, at Fortieth Annual Convention, Votes in Favor of Present Regulation—To Establish Home for Newspapermen

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, June 18.—With the indorsement of the zone system of postage charges for newspapers and periodicals; the selection of Houston for the next meeting place, and the election of officers, the fortieth annual convention of the Texas Press Association adjourned its three-day convention here today.

Sam Fore, Jr., of Floresville, was elected president, succeeding Harry Koch of Quanah. Other officers elected include: John E. Cooke, Rockdale, vice president; Sam P. Harben, Richardson, secretary (re-elected); C. F. Lehmann, San Antonio, treasurer (re-elected); Clarence E. Gilmore, Austin, attorney; Mrs. Frances Sutherland, Beeville, essayist; R. W. Barry, Beeville, orator; Judd Mortimer Lewis, Houston, poet; Joseph O. Boehmer, Eagle Pass, and W. L. West, Livingston, members of the executive committee.

Retiring President Harry Koch was presented with a beautiful silver set by the association.

The report of the resolutions committee, which contained indorsement of the zone system of postage for magazines and of the proposed State good roads bond issue for $75,000,000, was adopted without a dissenting vote.

Indorsement of the zone postage system followed an address by Congressman J. J. Mansfield of Columbus, in which he gave warning that a strong effort is being made by magazines of national circulation for repeal of the zone law.

The committee of judges appointed to examine weekly newspapers entered in the annual contest for the best linotype composition announced the following awards: Vernon Record, first prize; Cameron Herald, second prize; La-Grange Journal and Paducah Post, a division of the third prize.

More than 200 editors, newspapermen and representatives of supply houses from all parts of Texas attended the convention, which was declared to be the most successful held in recent years. The visitors were welcomed by Mayor Sam C. Bell of San Antonio, and Editor Tom W. Perkins of McKinney responded.

For Newspaperman's Home

Indorsement was given to the proposition advanced by the Texas Editorial Association, an organization whose membership is limited to men who have been actively engaged in newspaper work in Texas for thirty years or longer, for the construction and maintenance of a home for worn-out newspaper men. A committee consisting of Col. Frank P. Holland of Dallas, William A. Bowen of Arlington, Charles B. Gillespie of Houston, Frank G. Huntress of San Antonio, Louis J. Wortham of Fort Worth, D. R. Harris of Henderson, Sam P. Harben of Richardson, Sam Fore, Jr., of Floresville, and Clarence E. Gilmore of Austin was appointed to take in charge the question of raising funds for this home. It was estimated that $40,000 would be needed for the home as an initial fund. More than $8,000 of this amount was raised among the editors present at the convention. It is proposed to erect the home on the Texas coast.

Patriotic exercises marked the sessions held on the second day of the convention, the feature being an address by Major General DeRosey C. Cabell, commander of the Southern Department. The veteran military leader declared it was the duty of every newspaper and every newspaper to champion the League of Nations idea and uphold the hands of President Wilson. He characterized the plan as a "God-send," and a measure of more far-reaching good to the world than any event since the advent of Christianity.

In championing the League of Nations General Cabell declared that no country went into the war with such altruistic motives as those which actuated the United States and came out with such clean hands.

General Cabell also urged the press to lend its assistance for eradication of Bolshevism. Placing blame for the unrest that has been manifested on the I. W. W. and foreigners who have abused the nation's hospitality, he urged that these were "as dangerous as the rattlesnake and should be crushed out." He praised the press for its patriotic service while the war was in progress.

New Service Publication for Advertising Folks

Standard Rate and Data Quarterly Is Devoted to Information About Advertising Mediums—1st Will Received

The Standard Rate and Data Quarterly, published by the B. & B. Service Corporation, Detroit, is the latest entry into the field of publications devoted to advertising interests. The idea on which the quarterly is based was conceived several years ago, but the war conditions delayed its realization until now.

This new publication is, in effect, a reference book for advertisers, carrying rate and other pertinent information concerning almost five thousand publications. It consists of more than seventy pages, size 11 by 13. It will be revised every three months, in order to bring the information it contains up to date.

Fred C. Veon, vice-president of the corporation, is a newspaper and advertising man of wide experience. He is confident that the new service publication is exactly in line with the present day needs of advertisers and agency men. He sees in present advertising conditions the strong drift toward sound analyses of market possibilities and scientific selection of mediums to best serve special selling campaigns. Walter Botthof is president and Alvan E. Beirnes is secretary and treasurer of the corporation.

Trade Mark as a Protection

William Krusen, director of the Department of Public Health, Philadelphia, warns that the germs of anthrax are often carried in shaving brushes, according to the Evening Bulletin of that city. He suggests that the public refrain from buying brushes unless they carry the maker's name or trade mark. This is one more official acknowledgment of the protection assured to people through branded goods.

Government Statements, April 1st, 1919.
§A. B. C. April 1st, 1919.

There is room in continental United States for 2,836 States each with a land area equal to that of Rhode Island.

If each of our 48 states had a population equal in density to that of Rhode Island we should have a total population of 1,676,685,740.

Rhode Island is only a part of that group of states known as NEW ENGLAND—but in density of population, in industrial greatness this little state is typical of New England.

This group of states, in which nearly seven million people live, constitutes a market the winning of which means for any manufacturer a major commercial achievement—a selling victory of far-reaching value.

For the product which New England accepts all Americans will accept.

The people of New England are, as a whole, educated and discriminating buyers. A product of doubtful value, even if intensively advertised, will have no chance in this great market. A product of real worth, adequately advertised, NEVER FAILS to win its place here.

New England people, accustomed to buying advertised commodities which appeal to them, cannot be reached EXCEPT THROUGH NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING. The newspapers listed here afford the necessary means of communication with them.

Publishers Buy Chicago Tribune Space

The Chicago Tribune in May, 1919, carried more publishers' advertising than all other Chicago papers combined. The figures follow:

News	29,290
Herald and Examiner	25,028
American	22,733
Post	12,657
Journal	1,304
Total	91,012
Chicago Tribune	93,500

Included in the lineage of Hearst's Herald-Examiner above are 11,179 lines placed by Hearst's American. Included in the lineage of Hearst's American are 13,604 lines placed by Hearst's Herald and Examiner.

Advertising agencies also snould be excellent judges of the relative value of various mediums. The following figures, therefore, are significant:

In 1918 The Tribune carried 22% more advertising agency advertising than all other Chicago newspapers combined, and in May, 1919, The Tribune carried more than twice as much advertising agency advertising as all other Chicago papers combined.

The Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

The Tribune's 1919 BOOK OF FACTS is now out. Sent free to advertising men if requested on business stationery.

If the great war need of the world was ships then Peace finds us needing more ships than ever!

The impetus given Southern ship-building during the war period has carried over a line of constructive industries from the Chesapeake around the Florida peninsula well up into the Mississippi. Write it down in your book that the South will continue to build ships.

History is repeating itself. Witness that the first big government dry-dock begun at Portsmouth in 1827, finished in 1833, and is still in service!

Now again the government builds a dry-dock at Portsmouth. This time the LARGEST dry-dock in the world—just completed at a cost of $4,000,000.

WHY build the biggest dry-dock in the world in a SOUTHERN navy-yard NOW in the year 1919?

Because the biggest ship construction and repairing futures there!

All of which calls to national business "advertise in the Southern papers, where the cost per inhabitant is the LOWEST for newspaper advertising and the prospects of business the brightest!"

The Pick of the Newspapers.

RANKIN ADVOCATES FOR ADVERTISERS THE FOCH METHOD OF "TIMELINESS"

The "dominant plan" of National Newspaper Advertising

"These are days in which competition to secure national markets has become so keen that individual business firms are eagerly searching for new methods by which to DOMINATE the attention of the public and to dominate it FIRST; searching for methods that will give more intensive sales results than can be obtained by any other form of advertising.

"This method has been found. Necessity mothered its discovery."

You will find in "The National Newspaper Unit" the plan by which you can get quick intensive sales results.

The Bulletin will be glad to send you a copy of the William H. Rankin plan which has been successfully "tried out."

PRESS OPERATORS DEMAND 50 PER CENT RAISE, U. P. REFUSES AND SUGGESTS ARBITRATION

Novel Methods by U. P. Includes Written Negotiations and "Open Covenants, Openly Arrived At"—Proposed Wage Scale Declared Exorbitant—I. N. S. and Universal Would Accept Best Terms Arrived At.

THE United Press Association, the International News Service and the Universal Service, and their union telegraph operators are deadlocked in efforts made this week to agree on new wage scales to supersede those which expire July 1, and in the critical situation that has thereby developed, methods unheard of before in averting a strike of the employes of any national industry are being utilized.

Written Record of Negotiations

First, for the first time in the history of labor difficulties, negotiations are being conducted entirely in writing. The committee representing the United Press division of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union and the management of the United Press have agreed to avoid all oral arguments, which might later be misquoted to the disadvantage of either, and are using the typewriter to iron out their various difficulties, chief of which is the operators' demand for a new contract calling for a salary inercase of approximately 50 per cent.

Second, the United Press has evolved a new scheme to apply the policy of "open covenants, openly arrived at," by telegraphing a complete report of each day's negotiations to each of the many hundreds of newspapers it serves, from Boston to San Diego and from Montreal to San Antonio.

Editors' Right to Know

The position taken by the United Press in this is that increases in telegraphers' salaries ultimately are borne by the newspaper clients of the press associations and that as a result every publisher, as well as every leased wire operator, has a personal interest in the pending negotiations.

Therefore, each day, at the close of business, a complete report of the negotiations of that day is put on the leased wire systems of the United Press and by 7 o'clock every publisher of a newspaper receiving the U. P. leased wire service and every leased wire operator has before him every word exchanged in the negotiations up to that time.

Will Meet Best Terms

Third, the United Press has proposed to its operators that instead of entering into a contract for one year, the contract be effective only from month to month, and that any differences of any kind that may arise between them at any time shall be settled by arbitration, on either party to the contract giving the other 30 days' notice.

International News Service and the Universal Service, day and night service respectively, are faced with demands similar to those made by the operators on the United Press, and their latest reply is that they will accept the most favorable terms that union operators are able to obtain from any rival organizations for the same kind of employment.

The Associated Press has no agreement with the union and is therefore not affected by the present negotiations.

The United Press division of the C.

KEEP ADVERTISING AND NEWS FREE

Editor & Publisher's Stand Against Combination Government Publicity Bureau Endorsed at Washington—Officials Admit Combination Serious

By Robert T. Barry
Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, June 25—The lead taken by Editor & Publisher in arguing that Government publicity should be kept separated from Government advertising is indorsed here by everyone who believes the time has come for the Government to take some sensible step toward a solution of its advertising problem, even though there may be disagreement over the propriety of Government "press agents."

So it is that the proposal of Senator Cummins of Iowa to establish a centralized Federal bureau of publicity and advertising does not encounter popular favor among most newspapermen and many members of Congress in so far as it relates to official Government publicity.

An Official Advertising Policy Approved

There is little, if any, objection to such a bureau being established to define and maintain an official advertising policy, but there is a very pronounced sentiment in opposition to a general publicity bureau.

The chief point made against a publicity bureau rests on the ground that so long as politics dominate governmental affairs it would not be possible to maintain such an official organization without its being open to the charge that it was being diverted to partisan purposes.

In other words, the fear is voiced that such a bureau would almost inevitably become the "Administration press agency," regardless of whether Democrats or Republicans happened to be in control.

It is argued that it would be inconsistent with human tendencies and weaknesses if such a bureau did not strive primarily to put forth all of the good and none of the bad of departmental plan and achievement. Bureau chiefs naturally would want publicity on the praiseworthy work of their offices, but none could be expected to volunteer official information as to mistakes of omission and commission.

Might Restrict Intercourse

With such a bureau in operation, it is contended, newspaper men and others would be denied to a certain extent that freedom of intercourse with various units of a department which prevails under normal conditions.

During the war, when the Committee on Public Information had its repre-

NEWSPAPER MEN CAN BE TRUSTED

Col. House Pays Tribute to American Correspondents in Paris

HIGH tribute was paid American newspapermen by Col. E. M. House, member of the American Peace Delegation, at his last conference with American correspondents, according to a copyrighted dispatch to the New York Times from Charles A. Selden. In the same dispatch it is disclosed for the first time that Col. House has met the correspondents daily for the last six months and has frankly discussed every development at the Peace Conference. The dispatch from Paris says that when Col. House joined the correspondents Monday for what it was believed would be their last conference, he began by saying:

"I am afraid that this is our last meeting. I want to add that this relation I have had with the American correspondents has been one of the happiest things of the whole conference to me. I've told you everything. I've told you things I wouldn't tell my other friends, because you have judgment and a sense of proportion."

CENSORSHIP FAILS IN VANCOUVER STRIKE

International Typographical Union Orders Members to Resume Work and Papers Are Being Published—Objected to Advertisements

(By Telegraph.)

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 24.—What is virtually a newspaper armistice now exists in Vancouver, and the three dailies —the Sun, Province and World—are again being issued, following suspended publication due to the flat refusal of the publishers to permit the strikers' committee to censor news going to the composing rooms.

No attempt is now being made by the strikers to censor the news, and a complete victory, in that respect, has been won by the newspaper publishers.

Strike Not Unanimous

As exclusively related in Editor & Publisher last week the strike here directly involves some 5,000 workmen who went out in sympathy with the strikers at Winnipeg; that the Vancouver Typographical Union ordered that a member of the mechanical staff in each office take a desk in the editorial rooms and O. K. the news before the printers would compose the type; that after two days of such proceeding R. J. Cromie, publisher and owner of the Sun, presented the case to his readers and declared that he would rather suspend than submit; that the ultimate reply of the union was to strike the offices.

The fact of the matter is that the full Vancouver Typographical Union did not subscribe to the high-handed methods, and there has been a bitter fight in that organization. This was shown through a vote of the union which lacked the three-fifths majority which is required under the constitution before the union can strike even if the men have a grievance.

Ordered Back by I. T. U.

The resolution that the local union passed creating the press censorship has been rescinded. Whereas, formerly, the union was demanding that all news be censored "under penalty of cessation of work," and that the newspapers be "compelled to publish reports submitted by the union," the present attitude of the union, as expressed in a substitute resolution adopted and presented to the newspaper publishers, calls for the "urging" of publication of union news and makes no mention of any penalty for failure.

As a matter of fact the Vancouver

CONCLUDE WAR STATUS RELATIONS OF PRESS AND GOVERNMENT

Gen. March in Final Interview with Correspondents Praises Splendid Spirit of Newspapers—Weekly Statements of War Department Will Be Continued

By Robert T. Barry,
(Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, June 25.—To the almost unanimous verdict of Washington officials on the service performed by the American press during the period of the voluntary censorship, General Peyton C. March, chief of staff, has added his statement of appreciation.

Gen. March went a little further than most of the officials by paying a personal compliment to the correspondents with whom he has been in contact at the War Department. "The personal attitude of the correspondents here has been very fine and I appreciate it very much indeed," Gen. March stated at the last of his weekly interviews with newspapermen.

Objects Sought Have All Been Accomplished

"The weekly interviews with the representatives of the press," General March said, "were inaugurated shortly after I became Chief of Staff, for the purpose of putting before the American people the military view of what our troops were doing in Europe, and official statement of what we were doing in the United States in the way of mobilization, supply, and getting troops across.

"At the conclusion of the armistice it was requested by the representatives of the press that I continue the interviews with the idea of keeping the people advised as to the program of demobilization and what the War Department was contemplating in the matter of shipment of troops home, and all other phases connected with the reversing of the machinery which was then in operation.

Weekly Statements to Continue

"The objects which were sought by these interviews have now apparently been accomplished and the necessity for the interviews is at an end. The weekly statements about demobilization and statistics of all kinds will be released to the press through the usual channels.

"In terminating these interviews I want to say that the attitude of the press throughout the period of the struggle itself was perfectly fine and of great value to the military program. The voluntary censorship which was instituted upon by the press was observed religiously, and at all times I found the greatest assistance from all of you from not only preventing publication of news which would have been of value to the enemy, but by putting before the people what they should know as to the activities of their Army and what the War Department was contemplating in the matter of keeping it up.

Were Important Links

"The attitude of the press of this country was not only of the greatest value to us, but was in the highest degree patriotic. We moved, as an example, some twelve million men around the United States on our railroads without the fact being known to the American people, except so far as I gave out facts in the weekly interviews. This shows the very fine attitude the press took toward the necessity of observing the voluntary censorship which they undertook themselves."

The weekly interviews accorded the correspondents by Gen. March were among the most important links in the relations between the American papers and war officers in Washington. They were important and of inestimable value not alone because they enabled the papers to give their readers official and accurate statements, but because they involved recognition by the military leaders of the right of the papers and the people to know what the War Department was doing and how it was being done, an acknowledgment that Prussianism—frequently without justice ascribed to all high military officers—had no place in the management of the American Army and that maintenance of the morale at home was essential to successful operations in the field.

Credit Belongs to Pew

Credit for the inauguration of the weekly interviews belongs to Marlen E. Pew, former director of the War Department News Bureau. It was Mr. Pew who convinced Secretary Baker that some such method of communication between the Army and the people was necessary.

Arrangements were made at the very beginning to insure accuracy, stenographic reports of everything said at the conferences being released soon after in mimeographed form, these reports covering not only the prepared statements of the Chief of Staff but also the questions asked by correspondents and the answers to them.

In addition, the informal questions to which Gen. March responded at the meetings, prepared inquiries submitted in writing on the Friday preceding the interview and brought to Gen. March's personal attention, and where possible, answers were given at the conferences. Virtually every Washington correspondent availed himself of this privilege at one time or another in order to get official information on his local troops and their movements.

Gen. March Always Pleasant

Gen. March's relations with the correspondents were pleasant throughout. The natural fear of most army officers that such freedom of contact with the press and public might lead to sharp political controversies was not borne out by developments, there having been no corrolary in this country to the experience of Maj.-Gen. Sir Frederick Maurice, former chief of operations of the British General Staff, who became involved with Premier Lloyd George and Parliament over one of his press interviews and was removed from office.

Will See Forestry Work

St. Paul, June 23.—The Northern Minnesota Editorial Association will be brought into close touch with forestry methods on July 29 during its convention at Bemidji. The state forestry board will take the members to the Itasca state park in autos and feed them with fish caught in Itasca lake and beans baked in "bean holes." State Forester W. T. Cox wants the editors to inspect the work of preserving forests.

"Every Article and Every Advertisement Should Be Read"

Miami, Okla.,

More important than the League of Nations; much more important than the decree of Kings is the unity and co-operation of the allied journalists.

True democracy springs from the hearts of the people. Through the press let them voice opinions that will break down ancient traditions and shatter the fetters that chain them to autocracy.

Editor & Publisher, the oldest publishers' and advertisers' journal in America, deserves the heartiest congratulations of the newspaper fraternity for their splendid international edition. It is certain that this worthy effort will bear fruit.

The messages we read from across the water are filled with much that will surprise and interest American publishers. Every article and advertisement should be read carefully. They give us a new perspective on European thought. They give a personal touch that cannot be lost sight of.

We congraulate every member of Editor & Publisher staff for having done a big thing in a big way.

POWERS & CO. READY TO START

Announces Mills It Will Represent in London, England

W. C. Powers & Co., Ltd., which was organized some little time ago by W. C. Powers, former manager of sales for the Great Northern Paper Company, has established its office at 180 Fleet street, London, England. Mr. Powers will leave for England next month. His company will sell through the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., of Montreal. It will represent the following mills: Laurentide Company, Ltd., Price Brothers & Co., Ltd., St. Maurice Paper Company, Ltd., Brompton Pulp & Paper Company, Edward Smith Paper Mills, Ltd., Provincial Paper Mills Company, Ltd., Eastern Manufacturing Company, and the Groveton Paper Company.

Rumely Pleads "Not Guilty"

Dr. Edward A. Rumely, formerly managing editor of the New York Evening Mail, appeared June 18 before Judge Knox in the Criminal Branch of the United States District Court, and entered a tentative plea of not guilty to the indictment charging him with having made false statements to the Alien Property Custodian regarding the ownership of the Mail. Dr. Rumely's counsel was given a week in which to withdraw the plea, demur or take any other action necessary for the defense of his client.

Van Patten Expands to Chicago

Chicago, June 24.—Van Patten, Inc., of New York, will shortly establish a subsidiary advertising agency organization in Chicago. Temporary headquarters have been established at 11 South La Salle street. L. A. Crowell has been elected a director and vice-president of the company and will have full direction of the Chicago office. A special advisory service department is contemplated in addition to the preparation of ad copy and merchandising plans.

MINNEAPOLIS TO HAVE NON-PARTISAN DAILY

League That Now Enables Farmers to Rule North Dakota Will Help Propaganda in Minnesota — Herbert L. Gaston Will Be Publisher

The Non-Partisan League, composed exclusively of farmers, which was started in North Dakota in 1917 and now has a membership of 50,000, is planning to extend its political power by the establishment of a newspaper at Minneapolis, which will be known as the Minneapolis Star.

The League now has two newspapers in North Dakota, the Courier-News at Fargo, and the Grand Forks American; and one in Nebraska, the Nebraska Leader at Lincoln. The Leader was started only recently. Its editor will be Fred Carey, a well-known Nebraska newspaper man and for years political writer of the Omaha News.

Buying Machinery in New York

The general manager of the Fargo Courier-News and the Grand Forks American is Herbert L. Gaston, who also will supervise the establishment and probably the management of the new paper of the organization at Minneapolis. Mr. Gaston was in New York City this week, purchasing several large presses and other machinery which will be installed in a four-story building now being built as the League's newspaper home in Minneapolis.

Almost since its organization in 1917 by A. C. Townley, a North Dakota farmer, with a natural bent for political leadership, the League, which is also allpowerful, politically, in North Dakota, has been working to extend its influence in other farming States, even in New York, but has concentrated its efforts to this end in Minneapolis and Nebraska. As early as September, 1917, it was reported to have 80 paid organizers at work in Minnesota.

The League has published since its inception a weekly organ known as the Non Partisan Leaguer, which is sent without extra charge to every member who pays the regular dues of $18 for two years' membership. This weekly has been so powerful in spreading the gospel of the League that the farmers of the country, in conjunction with organized labor, should dominate the politics and industry of America.

History of League

This propaganda has been preached even more intensively and successfully by the establishment later of the newspapers at Fargo and Grand Forks and now the establishment of the two additional papers at Lincoln and Minneapolis is avowedly to be intended to speed up strength among the farmers of Minnesota and Nebraska.

The League, which is the nearest approach in recent years to the old Farmers' Alliance, was organized by Townley, after snow had killed a flax crop on which he expected to make a profit of $125,000. He owed large notes for farm machinery and the failure of his crop made him bankrupt.

He then turned his hand to politics and found a prolific field in seeking members for his new organization, which was to protect the farmer from being "plundered by organized capital." The doctrine spread like wildfire in North Dakota, the agricultural element of which is 86 per cent. of the population.

MARLEN E. PEW MADE EDITOR AND MANAGER OF THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

Resigns as Editor of EDITOR & PUBLISHER to Assume Important Post in Hearst Organization---Has Had Much Experience in Press Association Work and Splendid Record of Achievement in Many Lines of Newspaper Making

By W. D. Showalter

MARLEN E. PEW has resigned as editor of Editor & Publisher and as a director of the company to accept the position of editor and manager of the International News Service. He will assume his new duties on July 1.

The directors of Editor & Publisher Company, at a meeting held June 19, received Mr. Pew's letter of resignation with genuine regret, voting its acceptance only because of the realization that the opportunity now opened to him is one of major importance in the field of newspaper making, and that his experience and ability particularly qualify him for his new task.

In the prime of life, after having achieved distinction in many branches of newspaper work and in the national service, Mr. Pew now becomes one of the outstanding men of the great Hearst organization. As news manager of the I. N. S. he will bring to the service of the hundreds of newspaper clients of that organization a knowledge of news values and resourcefulness in news gathering possessed by but few other men in the field.

Expansion for the I. N. S.

It is understood that Mr. Hearst plans an immediate expansion of the I. N. S. on broad lines of development, aimed to meet adequately the new conditions in the life of the world. His confidence in Mr. Pew's ability to aid him in fully realizing these plans is indicated by the generous terms of the contract made between them.

Marlen E. Pew was born at Niles, Ohio, 41 years ago. At the age of 16 he started as a reporter on the Cleveland Press, three years later becoming New York representative of the Scripps-McRae League of Newspapers, at the same time this connection until 1900. At this time he inaugurated the night service of the Publishers' Press. He was a member of the staff of the New York Evening Journal for two years and then became Eastern Manager of the Newspaper Enterprise Association. In 1907 he was appointed Editor of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, leaving that position in 1910 to become Editor of the Boston Traveler. In 1912 he accepted the post of News Manager of the United Press Associations, later founding and editing the Philadelphia News-Post. Returning to New York in 1913 he founded the Pictorial Illustrating Service, later joining the editorial staff of Editor & Publisher.

Served the Nation

In 1917, at the urgent request of George Creel, Mr. Pew joined the Committee on Public Information. Soon afterward he organized the News Bureau of the War Department, through which the casualty lists and all official news of the Department was cleared. He became Secretary Baker's personal representative with the press and so organized the work of service to the newspapers that every vital interest involved was fully protected.

Mr. Pew's training as a newspaper man and his clear cut policies in dealing with the newspapers served to make the War Department a real source of news for every paper in the land. His work in this connection, which has been recounted in these columns, constituted a high public service in a period of the nation's life when any policy of a reactionary kind would have been a national calamity, while a policy of recklessness as to the release of news carrying military information would have been equally disastrous.

Steering his course by the chart of common sense and clear vision, Mr. Pew avoided the shoals and continued mightily, through a wise policy of affording the fullest publicity, consistent with the military interests of the country and of its allies, to the maintenance of the highest morale among the American people. Readers of our newspapers realized that nothing was being kept secret from them which was already known to the enemy.

Tribute by Secretary Baker

Resigning from the News Division of the War Department at the end of March, 1919, Mr. Pew returned to the staff of Editor & Publisher as Editor, a position which he relinquishes now only because of the magnificent opportunity offered to him by Mr. Hearst.

When Mr. Pew re-entered upon his work at the office of Editor & Publisher he found awaiting him a letter from the Secretary of War which expressed eloquently the appreciation of Mr. Baker of his services to the Government. The letter in part said: "No one can do as good a job as you have done for the War Department unless he has talent and character and those attributes mean success in any field of endeavor.

"It has been fine to have you here and while I know the hard work and sacrifice entailed on you, still I hope you have found compensation in knowing that you were doing a patriotic and public service in a great crisis."

Asked to express for readers of Editor & Publisher his views as to the new work upon which he is entering, Mr. Pew said:

Mr. Pew's Future Work

"It is with regret that I have resigned editorship of Editor & Publisher. Not only have I enjoyed a remarkably pleasant personal relationship, but I have felt that Editor & Publisher's field of usefulness is almost limitless. It is today of incalculable value to the newspaper and advertising men of this country. Its policies square with the best newspaper practice. Those who are guiding it are conscious of its responsibility to its readers, and their motives are as true as their ambitions are high. As 'service' to all newspapers is the keynote of Editor & Publisher policy, there is no doubt that the newspapers and advertisers of the United States will make it ever more powerful in its field.

"I re-enter press association work, to which the best of my youth was devoted, with unconcealed enthusiasm. It offers unbounded opportunity for service to a large number of newspapers, and I thoroughly enjoy direct contact with the world's spot news. The national appetite for telegraphed news has never been so keen. The responsibility of news writers to the public has never been so real. American editors require not only larger volume of wired information to supply public demand, but they are insisting upon superior news reporting in its every aspect.

"The market is wide open for news which is cleverly written by responsible newspaper men, which is devoid of every element of prejudice or special interest and is speedily delivered. The line of greatest service plainly lies between the press report written with such stilt as to be denatured and the press report which exceeds the speed limits of reliability and good judgement.

New I. N. S. Officers

The International News Service announced late yesterday afternoon a reorganization of its officer personnel. The new president is Mr. M. Koenigsberg, who has long been associated with Mr. Hearst's enterprises and is favorably known to practically every newspaper publisher in the United States. Mr. Koenigsberg succeeds Mr. Hugh E. Murray, who becomes vice-president. Joseph A. Moore has been elected treasurer, succeeding Fred J. Wilson, who has returned to California, where he has private interests to which he will give his immediate attention.

"The International News Service is possessed of the natural elements that make for agency idealism. It is absolutely free and is well-equipped to collect and disseminate the world's news with the interest of its collective clientele as its sole object. Its wire system covers the United States, with branch offices at all important points, here and abroad. Its policy is to employ at good salaries mature and trained American newspaper men, worthy of the high trust of reporting to many newspapers.

"The I. N. S. is distinctively an afternoon and Saturday night service, free of morning responsibilities, and hence its facilities here and abroad are making the news fight in afternoon and Sunday morning newspaper publishing time. The great Hearst afternoon and Sunday newspapers look to I. N. S. for complete and disinterested news reports on an absolute equality with all other newspapers receiving the I. N. S. clientele.

"The I. N. S. record for accuracy during the war is, I learn, the subject of unanimous favorable comment among the subscribers.

"An amazing business rivalry exists in the press association field. I know of nothing in commerce that is sharper. The real test of value, however, lies in the news reporting performance, and the men of I. N. S. propose that it shall give good account of itself to American newspaper publishers.

"For the present at least I shall devote almost my entire time to the news service, looking to betterments."

F. W. Clarke Succeeds J. E. Boyle

Syracuse, N. Y., June 25.—Frank W. Clark, former managing editor of the Albany Knickerbocker Press and the Binghamton Press, has been named successor to James E. Boyle as managing editor of the Syracuse Herald. Mr. Clark was also at one time with the New York Evening World. Mr. Boyle was recently appointed state deputy superintendent of public works.

INTERNATIONAL NUMBER PLEASES THE JOURNALISTS OF LONDON

"Red Letter Event in Newspaper Annals"—British Newspapers Forced to Limit Advertising Volume—Northcliffe's Offer for New Ideas.

By Herbert C. Ridout,
London Editor, Editor & Publisher.

At the time of writing, only the advance copies of Editor & Publisher International Number have reached this country, but already I have been the recipient of many delighted comments upon it. Several prominent newspaper men have called me on the 'phone to know how soon copies will be on sale here, expressing their desire to obtain for their personal use what they declare is a unique record of press achievement.

One and all lavish praise without stint and state their pleasure at the conception of the International Number, the completeness of its survey and the high realization of the projected ideals. It is considered a red letter event in newspaper annals and emphatically a substantial step towards linking the press of the two English-speaking nations in closer brotherhood.

British Journalists' Union Active

The British National Union of Journalists is becoming a power in the land. Already it has a membership of well over 3,500 and this strength has enabled the body to take up a firm and definite stand in the matter of creating better conditions for its members. Its activities in this direction and its success in securing a living minimum wage for the various branches of newspaper work are aptly illustrated by one incident.

Threatened Boycott

At H——, recently, the editor-reporter of a paper was only getting $18 a week, and no notice having been taken by the owners of the representations made to them, he left the office at an inopportune moment.

H. M. Richardson, the General Secretary of the Union, wrote a letter to the firm telling them they were now in disrepute with the Union and insisting upon the minimum being paid, and that if it was not paid by Saturday morning the Union would issue a circular to the whole of the inhabitants and readers people of the district advising them not to advertise in or buy this particular paper. The proprietors paid up next day!

The position at present is that nearly all the affiliated papers in the country are paying the minimum. A recent development was the ratification of an agreement between the N. U. J. and the New Zealand Journalists Industrial Association, by which the members of each body become entitled to the benefits of the other in the event of appointments overseas creating the necessity. It is expected that similar working arrangements will be arrived at with similar organizations in other countries.

Victory War Loan Publicity

The new British Victory Loan brings into the limelight once more Sydney Walton, O. B. E., who established for himself a firm friendship with the press in his tactful and helpful direction of press matters at the Ministry of Food in London, and latterly with the Canadian War Mission.

Mr. Walton has been appointed the Honorary Director of Publicity to the National War Savings Committee for this loan, in the place of Sir George Sutton who recently retired to resume his responsibilities with Lord Northcliffe's Fleetway House publications.

Closer Anglo-American Relations

On every side it is quite evident that the British press and its leaders and workers are eager for a closer relationship with their American brethren of the pen. For one thing Ralph Blumenfeld's suggestion of an interchange of newspaper men between the two countries (despite the fact that the famous Daily Express editor has endeavored to explain that he merely threw out the idea) has been the subject of widespread and interested comment.

Now, Allan Jeans, President of the Newspaper Society of Great Britain, states in his report that the Society is constantly enjoying the interchange of confidential information with the A. N. P. A. which is of great benefit, the A. N. P. A. bulletins covering paper supplies, labor problems and other matters of importance to the industry being forwarded regularly.

The Newspaper Society's Circular is filed at the New York office. The latest move towards this rapprochement is the fact that the secretary, Frank R. Bird, has been invited to act as Press Advertising Advisory Committee of the American Chamber of Commerce in London. The American Chamber of Commerce has also continually placed its news facilities at the disposal of your London editor.

American Correspondents Form Society

Arthur S. Draper, London correspondent of the New York Tribune, who is secretary of the newly-formed Association of American Correspondents in London, tells me he has already sent Editor & Publisher a notice as to its formation. I am now able to supplement this with fuller details.

Broadly, the objects of the association are to promote the co-operation among American newspaper correspondents in this country, to protect their interests and to assist in securing such recognition and facilities as are available from Government departments, public bodies and other sources of news.

It is anticipated that much progress can be made through publicity and it is hoped that the association will be of assistance to visiting American journalists.

The officers are E. Price Bell (Chicago Daily News), president; Ernest Marshall (New York Times), vice-president; Arthur S. Draper (New York Tribune), secretary; John S. Steele (Edward Marshall Syndicate, Inc.), treasurer. The Executive Committee is Robert M. Collins (Associated Press), E. Keble Chatterton (Press), Henry Hyde (Chicago Tribune), Hal O'Flaherty (New York Sun), James M. Tuohy (New York World), and the secretary ex-officio.

The members not represented among the officers and executive committee include Earle C. Reeves (International News Service), Robert W. Bruce (Uni-

Says Government Wasted Fortune on 4th Loan

Chicago, June 21.—Speaking before the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association's first American Lumber Congress, Wilbur D. Nesbit, vice-president of the William H. Rankin Company, said:

"It costs you five cents to put up a poster anywhere, whether you put it up for nothing or whether you pay some one to put it up. The Government last year, in advertising the Fourth Liberty Loan, spent either in money or donated labor $500,000 to put up Liberty Loan posters.

"If they had taken that $500,000 and spent it in the newspapers of the United States, it would have done the Fourth Liberty Loan and the United States itself a great deal more good.

"You may gather from that that I am in favor of newspaper advertising, and I certainly am. I believe that page space in a newspaper has more influence upon its readers than even the editorial does. An advertisement signed by a reputable house carries more conviction to the mind of the reader for the simple reason that he or she reasons that if you did not believe in it, you would not pay your good money to tell your story to the people."

Newspaper Men Accompany Pres. Wilson to Belgium

Some Accommodated on Executives' Own Train, and Others Make Journey by Other Means

(By Radio.)

Paris, June 17.—President Wilson's party on a two-day visit to Belgium, which began last night, included a number of American journalists. On the President's train there was one representative from each of American press associations, including George McFall, Associated press; Lowell Mellett, United Press, and J. E. Nevin, International News Service.

Special representatives of American newspapers who had places on President's train were Laurence Hills, New York Sun; Herbert Swope, New York World; W. H. Lewis, New York Tribune; Charles Selden, New York Times; Henry Wales, Chicago Tribune; J. C. McDonald, New York Herald, and Harold P. Stokes, New York Evening Post.

In addition a number of other American newspaper men and a delegation of English, Belgian, French and journalists from other countries who are covering the peace conference and who could not be accommodated on President's train made the trip to Belgium on regular trains.

Labor Publishers Incorporate

Lewiston, Me., June 25.—The Allied Labor Press Association has been organized here, with an authorized capital stock of $10,000. Officers are: President, Cornelius F. Darrington, Auburn; treasurer, Charles A. Darrington, Omaha, Neb.; clerk, John L. Darrington, Canton; directors, the above. Among the purposes of the organization are to establish, publish and circulate labor papers and periodicals.

WISH GRANDIN SUCCESS IN NEW N. Y. AGENCY

Over 160 Friends Tender Him Dinner in Chicago—Ready for Business July 1, Succeeding There's a Reason Company

Friends of F. C. Grandin, of Grand Rapids, Mich., to the number of 160, tendered him a dinner June 18 in Chicago to wish him success in launching his new Liberty Advertising Agency in New York July 1. William H. Rankin presided and mirth and good fellowship prevailed throughout the evening.

As was announced recently, when the news was first made public of the departure of Mr. Grandin and his associates from Battle Creek, and the discontinuance of the There's a Reason Advertising Agency, Mr. Grandin is president of the new organization; Dr. C. W. Green and L. J. Lamson are vice-presidents; A. H. Hulscher is secretary, and G. V. Rothenberg is treasurer. Messrs. Grandin and Rothenberg are in New York at the present time, and Dr. C. W. Green has just returned.

Retains Postum Account

The Liberty Advertising Agency, Inc., which has offices at 149 Fifth avenue, New York, will take over the handling of the advertising of the Postum Cereal Company, as one of the accounts available to the general advertising agency field in which the agency will operate. The Postum Company thus changes its account from the former arrangement through the There's a Reason Company which company ceases to exist.

Mr. Grandin, through his direction of the success of Postum in the Postum Cereal Company since the beginning of the development of that organization as a great national advertiser, has become one of the best known space buyers and agency men in the country.

Dr. C. W. Green has for a number of years past been at the head of the copy department of the Postum Company and is the author of the advertising copy which has claimed so large an attention for its forcefulness and selling power. Mr. Hulscher has in recent years been very largely in charge of the space buying, and Mr. Lamson has for many years past been in charge of the mechanical preparation of advertising matter, the typographical displays, and the handling of copy schedules.

Mr. Rothenberg has been in charge of the accounting department.

PAPER MEN AS CONGRESS' AID

Ask for Government Help in Preventing Pulp Wood Decay

Buffalo, N. Y., June 20.—Taking the view that the annual loss to the pulp and paper industry through decay of wood and pulp is a serious economic problem affecting the use of pulp and paper products by every citizen of the United States, it was resolved by the Technical Association of the Pulp and Paper Industry, meeting here, that its individual members use their influence with the committees with which they are connected to secure the passage of legislation by Congress to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations of the nature and habits of the fungi and bacteria causing the decay of pulp wood and wood pulp and to devise and put into application methods of control. $20,000 is recommended as the amount of the initial appropriation.

A. B. C. ACHIEVEMENTS CITED AT CONVENTION AS TOWER OF STRENGTH FOR ADVERTISING

Full Account of the Proceedings at Chicago Meeting—Annual Banquet a Brilliant Affair—Officers Are Re-elected, Young and Stone Retiring—Unanimous Approval Given of Year's Successful Operation

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE

CHICAGO, June 22.—The fifth anniversary and the sixth annual convention of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, held at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago, June 19 and 20, marked the apex of five years of conscientious struggle to obliterate long-standing abuses in the sale of advertising and circulation.

More than anything else it demonstrated the high and strictly business-like plan upon which it now is possible to buy advertising space in every known sort of publication. Its keynote was the confidence today existant between advertisers, advertising agents and publishers.

W. A. Strong Elected Secretary

The convention closed with the election of the following officers and the annual banquet in the Gold Room:

President, L. B. Jones, Rochester, N. Y.; vice-presidents, A. W. Erickson, New York; W. Laughlin, Chicago; Henry W. Schott, Chicago; secretary, W. A. Strong, Chicago Daily News; treasurer, E. K. Shaw, Chicago; managing director, Stanley Clague, Chicago.

The principal business transacted concerned revisions of the newly-drawn by-laws of the A. B. C., amendments to the rules and regulations and the consideration of various resolutions of general interest to all publishers.

Lafayette Young, Jr., of the Des Moines (Ia.) Capital, and F. W. Stone, of the American Review of Reviews, New York, resigned from the board of directors, all other present incumbents being re-elected at Friday morning's session.

Mr. Young was succeeded on the board by A. G. Lincoln, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Mr. Stone by P. S. Collins, of the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia.

The following is the personnel of the board for the ensuing year:

STANLEY CLAGUE'S APPRECIATION OF MANNER IN WHICH EDITOR & PUBLISHER HAS CO-OPERATED WITH A. B. C.

Chicago, June 23, 1919.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

I know I am expressing the wishes of the Board of Directors and the entire membership of the Audit Bureau of Circulations when I extend to you, on behalf of the Bureau, our thanks for the splendid manner in which EDITOR & PUBLISHER covered the Sixth Annual Convention.

The Convention Number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, showing the personnel of the Directorate, officers and auditors, gave the entire membership for the first time an opportunity of seeing the men who serve them. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has done more than any other outside factor to enable us to accomplish the splendid results which we were able to announce to the Convention.

I wish to extend to the editorial staff our appreciation for your splendid co-operation.

Yours very truly,
AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATIONS,
Stanley Clague,
Managing Director.

FARM PAPERS

William A. Whitney, Phelps Publishing Company, Springfield, Mass.

BUSINESS PUBLICATIONS

E. R. Shaw, Power Plant Engineering, Chicago.

The morning of June 19 was devoted to registration, division committee meetings of the following groups being held in separate rooms during the afternoon: Advertisers, Advertising Agents, Newspapers, Magazines, Farm Papers and Business Papers. Of these the newspaper group was the one most largely attended. Business taken up in all cases concerned the proposed revisions to the by-laws.

President Jones' Address

The convention proper opened at 10 A. M. Friday with the address of President L. B. Jones, following which Managing Director Stanley Clague read the formal report of the board of directors, outlined in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week.

The meeting immediately thereafter proceeded with a detailed discussion of the by-laws amendments, this being continued over into the afternoon session.

President Jones in his opening address said:

"You have come here to work—not to listen to a talk of glorification. Further, it has been my experience that a secretary's report is usually prepared to cover every detail of an organization's work. The regular program then is, to courteously assume that you intend to read it and then notify him that he is to make a speech, but that he must not repeat any of the things that are contained in the report.

"He is expected to talk—but he is not allowed to say anything.

"My training as an advertising writer has been just the opposite to read it and all the way from 50 cents to $15 per agate line, my endeavor has always been to say something in the fewest possible number of words.

"I cannot now promise you that I will say anything, but what I attempt to say will be in the fewest possible number of words.

"First I want to thank the directors, by no means omitting your managing director, for their loyal support, and for the hard work they have put in since I have had the honor to be your president. There has been no meeting that failed of a quorum and at last month's meeting, held in New York, 18 out of our 21 directors were present.

By-Laws Chief Business

"Your main job at this meeting is to pass upon the by-laws which have been prepared with so much care. In framing these it has been the intention to make the board of directors fully representative and fully responsible to you, but with power to carry out the purposes of this organization.

"In my opinion the Audit Bureau of Circulations should be most careful to confine itself to the giving of facts—should give the circulation news in detailed figures, but should avoid editorial comment. That is the function of the advertising solicitor and after 25 years' experience in greeting him and bowing him out, I am satisfied that he can fully perform it.

"So long as we stick to the tangible things like figures, we are doing the work for which we organized and I want to express the hope that nothing will be written into the by-laws that will permit your directors to go further.

"There is one question that I have heard asked here and elsewhere that I want to answer. The question is: 'Why don't we have more advertiser members?'

"The answer is: 'The advertiser members you now have (and I wish to put in parenthesis here that I refer to the concerns and not merely to the men who happen to be their representatives in the A. B. C.)—the advertiser members you now have are members because they are big enough and broad enough to pay for a service they can get for nothing, in order to further a work in which they implicitly believe.

"No advertiser needs to be a member of the A. B. C. in order to get A. B. C. reports. You publishers as individuals, are willing to give them, and their agents almost to a man base their recommendations upon such reports. I believe that we can have and are to have many more advertiser members, but I want to make it clear to you that every advertiser who goes in feels that he is giving the money for the good of the cause—and perhaps in some such cases the advertising manager has hard work to persuade the president that his concern should pay for something that, so far as service is concerned, he can get for nothing.

Value of A. B. C. Membership

"Data that is being collected by your board of directors shows that nearly 1,200 accounts placed through agents give an A. B. C. audit prime consideration in placing the business. When the figures are all in, the number will probably reach 1,500 and the number of advertisers who insist on an A. B. C. audit before a publication will even be considered is steadily increasing.

"I attended an A. N. A. meeting the other day in Cleveland. The A. N. A. membership is now 282 and its members spend more than a $100,000,000 a year in advertising. At this meeting a resolution was passed without a dissenting vote, endorsing the work of the A. B. C., recommending a fuller use of the A. B. C. audits by its members and stating in the resolution that such recommendation would allow for thorough investigation of the A. B. C. audit methods by the secretary of the A. N. A.

"Verily the lions and the lambs may now lie down together.

"This is a long ad. for me to write. I am now about to keep my promise and stop using words. Let me express the hope, however, that you will give very careful attention to the matter of the revision of the by-laws that your incoming board of directors may have clear, concise and definite and working orders that will enable it to carry out your wishes."

Details of Membership

The membership report as of June 17 was in brief as follows:

Advertisers—9 general, associate and local—108 members, who paid annual dues in the sum of $15,262.50.

Advertising agents—9 general associate —90 members, who paid in $23,942.48.

692 newspaper members paid annual dues in sum of $139,043.60.

25 weeklies paid $1,861.60.

70 farm papers paid $4,430.

158 business papers paid $14,830.40.

The total membership of 1,221 paid in dues during year $224,502.50.

Applications pending for membership were as follows: Newspapers 21, weeklies 2, magazines and periodicals 13, farm publications 3, and business papers 15.

U. S. EXPORTERS MUST ADVERTISE FOR SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE

Hardest Kind of Intelligent Work Is Needed to Retain Supremacy In Exports We Now Enjoy, Trade Commissioner Says—News Services are Powerful Aid.

ALTHOUGH the United States last year sold the twenty Latin-American countries three-fourths of a billion dollars worth of imports, or more than all other exporting countries combined, the hardest kind of intelligent work must be done if this trade a to be retained, J. W. Sanger, trade commissioner of the U. S. Government Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce declared in a recent address before the St. Louis Advertising Club.

"The bald and uncomfortable fact is that the United States obtained this business very largely because the European sources of supply were closed and the merchants of South America had a choice only of buying in the United States or not buying at all," Mr. Sanger explained. He emphasized the need of correct methods of advertising in order to retain trade in Latin-America.

Advertising Is An "American Idea"

"It is only after you get out of your own country that you realize that advertising is largely an American idea," he said. "Not but that it is used everywhere, and in South America very generously, but no country other than our own has given to it and to the larger problem of merchandising the same degree of care and skill.

"It is to our ability in marketing, in adapting the things we have learned to do so well at home to conditions we find abroad, that we must turn, to offset, at least temporarily, our disadvantages.

"Only time will furnish us with the advantages of huge foreign investments, adequate shipping facilities, full and complete American foreign representation, and such changes in manufacturing as may become necessary. These are permanent factors for which there is no complete substitute.

Paving the Way

"In the meantime, our skill as merchandisers and in advertising will pave the way, and will enable us to develop our own peculiarly effective means of holding our own in these markets. We have spent many years and many millions of dollars learning how to do it at home, and it now remains for us to fit this ability to foreign markets.

"Latin America is made up of twenty different countries, no two of which are precisely alike, and many of them are widely different, the only thing they have in common being their Latin blood. South America alone is made up of ten different countries. One of these countries alone, Brazil, is as large as the entire United States. Another of them, Argentina, is as large as all of our States east of the Mississippi River, with Texas thrown in for good measure.

"The language common to them all is Spanish, except in Brazil, where Portuguese is the language, and Spanish will not serve there, no matter if people do tell you so and even if the two languages look and are similar. French is the second best language to use in Brazil.

The Question of Patriotism

"Then take the question of patriotism. Each of these countries has its own highly developed feeling of patriotism, and whether right or wrong, thinks that the sun rises and sets within the boundaries of his country. We must not blame them for that because that is what we honestly think of our own country.

"They don't call us 'Americans,' but 'North Americans,' or sometimes 'Yankees.' And it would be well for us to get into the habit of thinking of them, not under the term of South Americans, but as Chileans, Argentines, Brazilians, etc. I can assure you that you never forget that when you are in their countries.

"Another thing to remember is that their customs and traditions are quite as important to them as ours are to us, and that they are radically different from ours. They are not mechanical or inventive and they are not as a rule business men if they can avoid it. They prefer to be doctors, lawyers, in politics or to be gentlemen farmers.

Wide Circulation Impossible

"Advertising is widely used throughout South America, but its development is rather primitive and is about where ours was just after the Civil War. Differences in customs in the different countries, poor transportation facilities and two languages (Spanish and Portuguese), make very wide circulations of newspapers and magazines impossible. Generally speaking, the publications of each country do not go outside of it, and in some cases, as in Brazil, there is little or no circulation of a newspaper outside of the city or state where it appears.

"Buenos Aires publications circulate more widely throughout Argentina than do other South American publications in their respective countries.

"South America is primarily a newspaper rather than a magazine field, and most of its best papers are morning rather than evening papers. Outside of the newspapers there are no widely circulating media except the illustrated weeklies.

Some Great Newspapers

"The best of the daily newspapers are very good, and some of them, particularly those of Buenos Aires, rank as great newspapers. The individual circulations are not so large as ours. For example, Buenos Aires has about the same population as Philadelphia, and its largest daily has an average circulation of 165,000.

"However, there are more newspapers published than with us, and what is more important to advertisers, they are much more thoroughly read. Instead of buying four papers, a man will buy one and read it from the first page to the last. The habit of skimming through a paper is not common there, and their leisurely hours are extended to their reading as to everything else.

"There are no audited circulations, and except for the leading publications, the publishers' statements must be discounted on the ground of enthusiasm, or suspicion of his fellow publishers. My own estimates of their actual circulations will appear in my reports, and are based upon a very careful checking and re-checking obtained from a great many unusual sources to which I had access.

"Local advertising rates are usually much lower than foreign rates. The South American publisher's experience with American advertisers has been that so many either do not pay their bills or pay them slowly, that he simply tacked on enough so that we would pay for the losses and delays. During my calls on hundreds of these publishers, I realized that their viewpoint could not be changed unless some better arrange-

TRADE MARK BUREAU AT RIO JANEIRO

Plans for Establishing It Announced by Pan-American Union—Diplomatic Representatives Will Meet Soon to Decide on the Details

WASHINGTON, June 25.—Plans are under way which, it is believed, will lead to the establishment in the near future of an International Trade Mark Registration Bureau at Rio de Janeiro which will be of great service in the promotion of Pan-American commerce, according to an announcement by John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American Union.

James T. Newton, United States Commissioner of Patents, who is deeply interested in the proposition, has informed the director general that as a result of the interest aroused at the recent Second Pan-American Commercial Conference in the question of trade marks and their protection, the diplomatic representatives in Washington of South American countries have been invited to meet soon for the purpose of discussing the opening of this bureau.

The purpose is to enable merchants and manufacturers to deposit their trade marks in the countries which constitute the Pan-American Union and secure extension through the international bureau of the protection given at home.

The bureau at Rio de Janeiro would do for the United States and South America what the bureau already established at Havana is doing for the North American republics.

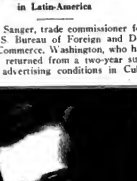
SUNDAY TELEGRAPH GOES TO 8c

First N. Y. Morning Paper to Act—No Circulation Decrease

The Morning Telegraph is the first New York newspaper to advance the selling price of its Sunday morning edition. On June 22, it went up to 8 cents in Greater New York, and on Sunday, July 6, the Sunday issue at points outside of Greater New York will sell at 10 cents per copy. Both the wholesale and the newsdealers' rates were increased, to the entire satisfaction of the newsdealer, one of the newsdealer, who will receive extra compensation.

The publishers report that for the first Sunday after the increased price, sales in Greater New York were normal. There have been reports for several months past that the publishers of Sunday morning newspapers in New York were going to advance prices, but the Telegraph publishers are the only ones to act so far.

The Sunday Evening Telegram recently increased its price from 3 to 5 cents.



New Ad Manager in Buffalo Commercial

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 25.—James H. Ford has been appointed advertising manager of the Buffalo Commercial. He has been for a number of years with Reuben H. Donnelley Corporation.

U. S. SENDING SANGER TO THE FAR EAST

Will Study Advertising Conditions There During Next Two Years for American Business Men, as Just Done in Latin-America

J. W. Sanger, trade commissioner for the U. S. Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Washington, who has recently returned from a two-year survey of advertising conditions in Cuba and South America, has just been recommissioned to make a similar advertising investigation in the Far East.

J. W. SANGER.

He will sail from San Francisco this summer and will spend the next two years in Japan, China, Korea, the Philippines, Dutch East Indies, Ceylon and India, studying at first hand their advertising and merchandising methods for the purpose of determining how these facilities can be used to promote the sale of American goods in those countries.

Mr. Sanger's reports on this subject, which will be issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, will be made available to American exporters, advertisers, and advertising agencies who wish to be informed of conditions as they actually exist. Mr. Sanger's report on "Advertising Methods in Cuba," which has just been published by this same Bureau, states among other things that "the great daily newspapers of Cuba and South America are a most powerful force in molding public opinion, and both local and national sales of American goods can be made in all of the important Latin-American centers, exactly as we do in the United States—by advertising them in the newspapers."

The widespread interest which American exporters and advertisers have shown in this Latin-American advertising survey is encouraged this further governmental activity in the Far East and is a recognition of the fundamental importance attached to advertising as a force in selling American goods abroad as well as at home.

Clinton Brown with Post-Dispatch

St. Louis, Mo., June 23.—The appointment of Clinton Brown as manager of the service and promotion department of the Post-Dispatch has been announced by George M. Burbach, advertising manager. Mr. Brown came to St. Louis from Lincoln, Neb., where he conducted a mail advertising agency. Previously he was with the Nebraska State Journal and the Cornell Bluffs Nonpareil.

AD VIGILANTES MEET IN CHICAGO JULY 10-11

A. A. C. W. Is Keeping Steadily at Work for Universally Honest Advertising—Constantly Getting New Members for All Over World

For the purpose of exchanging ideas and thereby giving their work still greater uniformity, secretaries of Better Business Bureaus (vigilance committees) will hold a conference in Chicago, July 10 and 11, under the auspices of the national vigilance committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs.

William P. Green, formerly secretary of the national vigilance committee, but now giving all his time to the perfection of local vigilance work, is arranging the program and will attend the conference, as will Merle Sidener, Indianapolis, chairman of the committee, and Richard H. Lee, New York, special counsel in charge of investigations.

Under the plan recently adopted by the advertising clubs for the expansion of vigilance work, such conferences are to be held at stated intervals, for officers of the association realize that the greatest influence the association wields is exercised through the local vigilance committee.

Schools Correct Copy

"Some other phases of our work are more spectacular, and get more attention," said Mr. Sidener, "but there can be no doubt but that it is the steady flow of influence, through the local committee in its own community, which is accomplishing the greatest aggregate result."

Important changes are being made in the advertising of some of the correspondence schools and those selling similar services, along the line of eliminating statements which might be disbelieved by some people, and thereby reduce public confidence in all such advertising, says an announcement from the clubs.

"The most gratifying feature of this situation is," said G. F. Olwin, secretary of the national vigilance committee of the association, "that all the people with whom we have come in contact in this particular direction, with one exception, have been more than willing to make changes suggested.

"In one case where the advertiser had made the desired change before we got the objection to the responsible head of the business, the claim had been made that this school had a larger number of instructors in a certain line than any other school.

"There are very few advertisers who fail to co-operate with us to the fullest exient, simply because every business man who knows anything about advertising, knows that his advertising, if it is to continue to bring home the bacon, must be true and must sound true," said Mr. Olwin.

Favors "Blue Sky" Laws

Merle Sidener of Indianapolis, chairman of the national vigilance committee, was in Washington, a few days ago, attending a meeting of "blue sky" commissioners from the various States. Mr. Sidener addressed the commissioners, and in discussions which followed, a still closer relationship was established between the association of "blue sky" men and the advertising organization.

Advertising men have been able to render assistance of a vital character to the "blue sky" commissioners in their battle against investment frauds, and the conference at Washington further advances this co-operative work.

Joseph S. Poisdamer, of the P. Ketterlinus Lithographing Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, chairman of the National Advertising Exhibit Committee, which is arranging an exhibit of advertising for the annual advertising convention, in New Orleans, September 21 to 25, was in New York for a conference with headquarters executives of the advertising association, and it was announced after the meeting that plans are being perfected for an exhibit along lines recent suggested by Mr. Poisdamer.

The exhibit, among other things, will embrace right complete advertising campaigns, showing all of the advertising mediums employed. There will be campaigns of varying sizes—all the way from local to national or international—Mr. Poisdamer announced.

Many New Members

There is a movement on foot in England for the formation of an affiliation of advertising clubs of the British Isles. In the meantime, new clubs continue to be organized in North America and in other parts of the world, announces P. S. Florea, executive manager of the advertising association. A movement has also been started for the reorganization of the club at Manila, which suspended operations during the war.

The Associated Clubs of Texas, quiet during the war, are being rejuvenated, and in addition to plans for a special train load of advertising men and women who will attend the world convention of advertising in New Orleans, September 21 to 25, the Texas association plans active work toward the organization of additional advertising clubs in Texas.

As the result of a conference between William C. D'Arcy, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs, and members of the Pacific Coast Advertising Men's Association, at the recent convention of the association at Portland, several Pacific Coast advertising clubs which were for a time outside the Associated Advertising Clubs will re-affiliate at once, thus re-establishing a close co-operative relationship with reference to vigilance work and other important activities fostered by the international organization.

The vigilance work of several of the Pacific Coast clubs has been especially effective in the past, and officers of the advertising association are especially gratified over the re-affiliation.

NEWSPAPER MAKERS AT WORK

WILLIAM A. CURLEY,
Managing Editor, Chicago Evening American.

WILLIAM A. CURLEY, curious as it may seem, broke into newspaper editorial work through a pronounced penchant for bicycle riding. Away back in the dark ages of 1894, when a bookkeeper in the offices of the New York Recorder, he was accustomed to pedal to and from work. Bicycling was sine qua non in those days, according to the testimony of venerable men still alive, and the publisher of the Recorder developed a hunch that his bookkeeper could write a better special bicycle column than he could run columns of figures. Enter, therefore, a type of bygone sports colyumist.

The New York Recorder went out of existence in 1898, after which Mr. Curley became connected with the sporting department of the New York Journal. Subsequently he succeeded Paul Armstrong as "Right Cross" on the New York American staff, and in 1906 became editor of the early news edition of the Sunday American. Later he was make-up man and night editor of the American.

In December, 1911, he joined the Los Angeles Herald, coming to Chicago in the Spring of 1913 and associating himself with the Chicago Evening American. For a period he acted as managing editor of the American, and simultaneously supervised the editing of the Los Angeles Herald at long distance. Some months afterwards he returned to Los Angeles, soon afterwards removing to San Francisco where, in September, 1913, he joined the Evening Call.

In January of the following year he returned to the Chicago American. "Bill" Curley, as the boys all know him, and as he most likes to be called, holds his present position as managing editor with the 100% esteem of all those who insist that they work with, not for him.

He gains and keeps their confidence in a quiet, unassuming way, and without the slightest apparent consciousness of the importance of his own position in the local room. As a rule his private office is left vacant because of his preference for working right with his men out at the battered news desk.

He is as keen an analyst of men as he is of news values, and—in the verbiage of one who sits not many chairs removed in the same local room—"that is saying some."

HUNTER BACK TO SCENES OF OLD CHICAGO SUCCESS

JOHN W. HUNTER.

The many Western friends of John W. Hunter have been extending to him a warm welcome during the past week in celebration of his return to work in his old field of activities.

J. W. Hunter.

As told in Editor & Publisher last week, Mr. Hunter has been placed in charge of the new Western office of the New York Globe. It is in Chicago that Mr. Hunter made his first newspaper success. He spent eight years on the Journal as advertising and business manager and a year on the Tribune as foreign advertising manager.

In announcing the opening of the new office, which will be located in the Marquette building, Jason Rogers, publisher of the Globe, said:

"The New York Globe has opened a Chicago office where, through direct home office representation, we will endeavor to render best possible service to agents and advertisers.

"John W. Hunter, for three years connected with our advertising department, and a man of long experience in the newspaper business in Grand Rapids, Detroit and Chicago, will act as manager of our western advertising office in charge west of Buffalo and Pittsburgh.

"Mr. Hunter is familiar with the Globe and the various activities which we have developed for efficient service to advertisers and will be pleased to co-operate exactly the same as if advertisers were dealing directly with the home office."

Plan New Socialist Daily in N. Y.

The Italian Socialists of Greater New York and surrounding cities of New Jersey, members of the Italian Interstate Federation, have launched a campaign for the establishment of a Socialist daily newspaper to be called the Avanti. Several large labor bodies have promised support. The Avanti Publishing Company aims to raise $40,000 immediately.

The executive committee of local New York has indorsed the campaign for an Italian Socialist daily.

AMERICAN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE IN LONDON DOING GOOD WORK

Efforts to Promote Trade Relations Expected to Result in Flow of British Advertising to American Newspapers Renders Semi-Official Service

By Herman C. Ridout,
London Editor, Editor & Publisher.

AMERICAN trade interests are in good keeping in London. Here is an active body of men, representing every class of business enterprise, embodied in an organization that watches every opportunity for developing American trade in Great Britain. Its members, all animated by the one desire to serve their country for their country's good, include all the best known American individuals and trading concerns that do business or have interests in American produce or finance.

In its own words, the American Chamber of Commerce in London is the official representative of British firms importing American goods, of American firms doing business with Great Britain, and of British firms arranging new business with America.

Big Concerns Represented by Officers and Directors

Its officers include important and active personages in London business circles, the president being G. M. Casatt (Remington Typewriter Co.); first vice-president, Wilson Cross (Vacuum Oil Co., Ltd.); second vice-president, R. H. Cabell (Armour & Co., Ltd.). Its directors include Frederic Carroll (Corn Products Co.), W. T. Coe (Consolidation Coal Co.), Paul E. Derrick (Derrick Advertising Agency, Ltd.), Charles S. Hall (Swift Beef Co., Ltd.), Frank Wyman Libby (Willys-Overland, Ltd.), H. H. Likens (E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.), B. D. Miller (F. W. Woolworth Co.), George A. Mosher (Sturtevant Eng. Co., Ltd.), Walter Phillips (Westinghouse Brake Co.), F. E. Powell (Anglo-American Oil Co., Ltd.), R. P. C. Sanderson (Baldwin Locomotive Works), and several others. Its consulting directors are J. Butler Wright (counsellor of the American Embassy in London), R. P. Skinner (American Consul-General in London), and P. B. Kennedy (Commercial Attache of the American Embassy).

The importance to which the Chamber has risen may be judged by the fact that it is now engaged in making a complete statement on the import restrictions situation, to be presented to the British and American governments, with an enormous amount of support from public organizations with similar ideals. It feels that, as it exists only for the purpose of improving and increasing Anglo-American trade in both directions, its recommendations are expected and desired.

The president, G. M. Casatt, has just returned from a visit to the United States during which he formulated "understandings" with various manufacturing, exporting and importing associations, to secure the closer working of the Chamber with representative commercial bodies.

Among the U. S. organizations with which conferences were held are:

American Manufacturers' Export Association.

National Association of Manufacturers.

National Foreign Trade Council.

American Exporters' and Importers' Association.

Association of National Advertisers.

Merchants' Association of New York (City).

Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Mr Casatt gave an idea of the activities of the organization by stating that "What the Chamber most desires is that the individual American manufacturer, merchant, exporter from one end of the country to the other should learn to look upon us as an overseas service bureau of his own—on the spot and on the job, ready to work for him and to look out for his interests. We are there to promote Anglo-American trade. We want to be used by exporters from both countries."

The American Chamber of Commerce in London has a particular interest for EDITOR & PUBLISHER, since its activities must in due course result in an increased volume of British advertising in the American press and a similar increase in the opposite direction.

Its Advertising Committee has, indeed, in hand the formulation of the plans for advising British manufacturers on advertising and selling in the United States and American manufacturers on advertising and selling in the United Kingdom. The activities of this Advertising Committee are being co-ordinated with the following associations in Great Britain:

Association of British Advertising Agents.

Federation of British Industries.

Advisory Committee on Advertising of the London Chamber of Commerce.

British Commonwealth Union.

National Union of Manufacturers.

National Advertising Society.

Trade Press Association.

Newspaper Publishers' Association.

And in the United States:

Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

American Advertising Agents' Association.

Association of National Advertisers.

American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

American Manufacturers' Export Association.

Optimist Club.

The membership of the Chamber has been developed to include not only the representatives in England of American big manufacturing and exporting interests, but also the foremost British manufacturers, exporters to and importers from the United States. The former are active members; the latter associate.

In addition to the regular standing committees—Finance, Commerce and Trade, Transportation, Trade Information, etc.—which one would naturally expect to find in general charge of such subjects, the membership of the Chamber is divided by businesses into trade sections, each group working through its own committee.

When, therefore, an inquiry or a request comes in for service or information—on market conditions, on British firms as buyers or agents, on the movement of goods, on financial details, on what not—the Trade Information Committee can answer direct from the files they are constantly amassing through similar services performed, or take the matter up for more specific information with the trade group concerned.

It is not however, purely an information service which the Chamber is in a position to render. On matters, whether of concern to entire trades or only specific firms, which call for action for representations to be made perhaps to British merchants, or to the British Government, the Chamber is again, by reason of its recognized position, able to act to the best advantage and to give experts in the United States the benefit not only of semi-official, but, what is more important, personal contact service on that end.

As an indication of its activities, it is interesting to learn that during the month of May the number of letters received by the Chamber was 1,109. It sent out 1,342 letters, 219 inquiry forms, 246 meeting notices, 320 bulletins, 269 questionnaires, and 235 miscellaneous communications. The headquarters of the American Chamber of Commerce in London are at 8 Waterloo Place, S. W. 1, and the Executive Secretary is George P. Toby.

A BIG FACTOR IN MAKING CORBIN LOCK POPULAR

JOHN BELDEN COMSTOCK is publicity manager of P. & F. Corbin, manufacturers of hardware, New Britain, Conn. He began business life as a stenographer, and then worked successively as a billing clerk and time keeper, but advertising interested him most, and he showed unusual ability in this field in editing a house organ for a Cleveland (O.) hardware firm and in contributions to trade papers.

J. B. Comstock.

He was put in charge of the publication department of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, of Pittsburgh, and in 1910 took the position he now holds. Two series of articles, "The Knight of the Grip" and "The Ironville Hardware Association," written by him, have been issued in book form. His ability as an organizer has been demonstrated in many instances and he has in his varied career touched nearly all the problems involved in modern merchandising.

LAURENTIDE EARNING 18%

Business Transactions of Canada Paper Mills Indicate Prosperity

Montreal, June 21.—If further evidence were needed that Canadian pulp and paper concerns are prosperous, it would be furnished by the latest action on the part of Laurentide Company, Limited, whose directors have just declared a bonus of 3 per cent on the $9,600,000 capital stock of the company, in addition to the usual quarterly dividend of 3 per cent.

This means that the company is now on a 15 per cent dividend basis, which is "going some," even for a Canadian paper concern. In addition to the large earnings made by the pulp and paper end of the business, the Laurentide Company also control the Laurentide Power Company, which a few weeks ago commenced to pay dividends at the rate of 3 per cent per annum. If these earnings are included the Laurentide Company shareholders are receiving 18 per cent per annum.

U. S. Correspondents in London Form Association

Edward Price Bell, of Chicago Daily News, Is President—Aims to Assist Press Workers

London, June 1.—With a membership of fifteen, the Association of American Correspondents in London has just been organized. Its object is to promote cooperation among its members, to protect their interests and to assist them in their work by securing such recognition and facilities as are available from Government departments, public bodies and other sources of news.

Full members must be accredited resident correspondents of daily newspapers and organizations maintaining a cable service. Associate membership is open to visiting representatives of American newspapers, publications and news agencies and occasional mail correspondents.

The officers for the ensuing year are: Edward Price Bell, the Chicago Daily News, president; Ernest Marshall, New York Times, vice-president; Arthur S. Draper, New York Tribune, secretary; John S. Steele, Edward Marshall Syndicate, Inc., treasurer. Executive committee: Albert M. Collins, Associated Press; E. L. A. Keen, United Press; Henry Hyde, Chicago Tribune; Hal O'Flaherty, New York Sun, and James M. Tuohy, New York World.

TO SUGGEST AD IDEAS

Dry Goods Economist Will Issue Service Feature in September

Dry Goods Economist, New York, will publish, beginning with the September issue, a new service-feature to be called "Advertising Ideas." It will be a monthly review of the retail advertising throughout the United States and Canada. The executive staff will comprise A. C. Pearson, director; A. E. Hurst, general manager; James D. Aitken, business manager, and Guy Hubbard consulting editor.

The plan is explained to Editor & Publisher as follows by Mr. Aiten:

"'Ideas' has been created to enable retail ad men the country over to keep their fingers on the pulse of the nation's retail advertising, and as a stirrup on their imaginative powers, and to keep the fires of inspiration burning within them.

"Each issue will include several pages filled with reproductions of retail store advertisements from different sections of this country and Canada; one page of ad editorial reproductions; a breezy article by the ad Critic of the Dry Goods Economist; a double-page article of vital interest to merchants and advertising men; and a four-page reprint of Ad Critic pages of the Economist."

Wilson Saved July 4 Parade

Bridgeport, Conn., June 23.—Steadfast individual resolves to "never again" don their uniform, save for the hour of need, seemed to have raised an insurmountable barrier to the proposal of "The Service Recognition Work" committee here that soldiers and sailors and marines returned from service parade on July 4, but Lynn W. Wilson, editor of the Bridgeport Times and Evening Farmer, facing 3,000 of the men assembled in the armory June 18, bartered down the objections and won the boys over to the idea of the parade. Not one stayed in his seat when Mr. Wilson called for a rising vote in support of the parade idea. He served during the war as a "Four Minute" speaker.

TELEGRAPH MEN DEMAND 50 PER CENT. RAISE

T. U. A. is represented in its controversy with the U. P. by D. K. Stevenson, chairman, of Pittsburgh; C. H. Murchland, of Dayton, O., and F. E. Dwyer, of Minneapolis. The United Press is represented by Roy W. Howard, president; William H. Hawkins, vice-president and general manager, and K. A. Bickell, business manager.

On Monday the union's committee submitted in writing the copy of a proposed agreement, in which the wage scale after July 1 was to be as follows:

The Day Scale

The minimum salary of any Morse operator or automatic attendant shall be $45 per week.

The salary of all receiving operators and attendants employed in cities having a population of 100,000 and upwards, according to the last government estimate of population, shall be $50 per week.

The salary of Morse operators and automatic attendants in relay offices shall be $50 per week.

By bureau operator and automatic attendant is meant a person who makes two or more copies of the report.

Operators acting as chief operator with jurisdiction over one circuit shall receive $55 per week and those with jurisdiction over more than one circuit shall receive $60 per week.

The minimum salary of any Morse operator or automatic attendant shall be $47.50 per week.

The salary of all receiving Morse operators and automatic attendants employed in cities having a population of 100,000 and upwards, according to the last government estimate of population shall be $50 per week.

The salary of bureau Morse operators and automatic attendants shall be $52.50 per week.

The salary of Morse operators and automatic attendants in relay offices shall be $55 per week.

It will be seen from this schedule that the operators are not modest in their demands, inasmuch as, for instance, the minimum salary of Morse operators, for whom $45 is asked, is now 30, and that of bureau operators, for whom $48 is asked, is now $32.50. As stated previously, the average increase asked is 50 per cent.

To these demands, the United Press submitted a counter-proposal, which provided for a graduated increase in the salaries, based on town population and consequent variance in cost of living, this increase ranging from 3.33 per cent. to 16.66 per cent.

On Tuesday, the union's committee sent the following reply:

The committee has gone over the manager general's reply to our proposal and decided it finds it so unsatisfactory and inadequate that it would be a waste of time to discuss the matter in detail.

The committee has presented its final figures and refers the management to the briefs and arguments presented before the Railroad Board last fall. Conditions now are much worse than at that time and operators have had some time debt to meet bare living costs.

The offer of 81 is wholly inadequate in minimum points, if meant seriously by the management, is so ridiculous that the committee can only wonder what the attitude of the United Press is towards its committee. Apparently we are not even treated seriously by the management. Three attempts in recent weeks to confer with committee and deal individually with the operators strengthens this feeling of wonder. Does not the United Press management realize that this committee is the duly authorized representative of the United Press operators?

The management submitted figures our efforts to establish a practical working agreement for the automatic machine. This problem must eventually be met and solved and we are instructed to settle it here and now.

Gentlemen, there is no need of discussion until you can give us something to discuss. We reject the proposition and will await your pleasure at the Continental Hotel until tomorrow, when we will return home.

U. P. Makes Reply

The United Press rejoinder was as follows:

"You say that you are willing to submit your case upon the briefs and arguments presented last fall before the National War Labor Board.

"Your demands amount to a wage increase in excess of 50 per cent. We cannot grant such demands because they are exorbitant and would confiscate a considerable portion of our mutual business in small towns. They are unreasonable in that it is an attempt to force a wage in towns and small cities to the level of a wage that might be reasonably justified in large cities.

"The War Labor Board, before whom you presented all your evidence at length and submitted arguments and briefs in detail, refused to alter or amend in any way the wage scale schedule contract between the United Press and your union.

"You state that the minimum schedule of $31 per week which we have offered in small towns is too ridiculous to consider. The wage scale of the National War Labor Board showed definitely and specifically that in more than 95 per cent. of the cities under 20,000 population the United Press telegraph operator was the highest paid employee in the offices of those newspapers throughout the United States, and in many instances received more salary than the editor or publisher. Our minimum scale of $31 in cities of under 20,000 population affects only 38 operators located in the small towns.

"To grant your demands in these small cities would necessarily confiscate that class of our business; would force the newspapers in these small cities to give up the leased wire and resort to a pony report, thereby eliminating our wires and your jobs.

Publishers' Position

"We have in our possession letters from a majority of the publishers in these newspapers in the small cities which say that it is impossible for them to stand any increased financial burden for our report. We are further informed by many of these publishers that your operators are not expecting nor are they demanding any such increase as you mention in your demands.

"In your letter to us you state 'there is no need of discussion until you can give us something to discuss.' Yet we have offered you a schedule of the following percentage increase in wage:

"In towns under 20,000 population (where the wages now paid the telegrapher are higher than the wages paid in any other class) an increase of 3.33 per cent.

"In towns of 20,000 to 50,000 population, 8.33 per cent.

"In towns between 50,000 and 150,000, 16.66 per cent.

"In cities of 150,000 to 500,000, 25 per cent

"In cities over 500,000, 32.81 per cent.

"Relay operators, 26.56 per cent."

"You ask: 'Does not the United Press management realize that this committee is the legally authorized representative of the United Press operators?' We do recognize you as the authorized representative of the United Press operators, and if we did not recognize you we would not be conducting these negotiations with you. We recognize you to the full extent that your members have delegated power and authority to you. It is our desire to cooperate with you to the limit of our ability in your efforts to lay before the entire union membership the full facts upon which a fair and just agreement can alone be based.

"Recognizing that the machine is destined to continue a vital factor in press association developments, the United Press has offered a scale of wages for day, night and Saturday night machine operators which we are informed is the highest ever offered for this class of work.

Machine Development

"That this wage is less than the wage offered for Morse work is due to the admitted fact that the skill required is much less and the training period much shorter than is required to perfect a Morse operator handling press.

"The committee's reference to 'machine attendants' is ambiguous. No attendant is required for any machine used or contemplated by the United Press. If by 'attendant' the committee refers to the mechanics and electrical workers who install and repair the machine used by the United Press, we can only say that we have no more control over these men than we have over the linemen and other electrical workers who install and repair telephone and Morse circuits and instruments.

"It is our intention to settle the question of machine operation in full harmony with sound union principles. We are prepared to adhere to the principle of collective bargaining in the case of machine operators, as we have adhered to it in the case of Morse operators since the organization of the United Press. We will not, however, compromise with any form of reactionaryism which is contrary to the progressive principles of the American Federation of Labor or which would constitute a retard or thwart the legitimate and natural development of the science of telegraphy. Nor are we willing to become a party to any stipulation which will prevent our growth in a field wide open to our competitors.

Asks Further Information

"We repeat our request for information as to what steps have been taken to equalize working conditions, wages, etc., among competing press associations, and as to whether a demand identical with that presented to the United Press has been presented by the union to all press associations.

"Finally, we propose that if you are not satisfied to accept the wage increases which we have offered you and as we cannot grant the wages which you demand; that each of us withdraw our proposals in their entirety and submit all our differences to immediate arbitration by some disinterested arbitrator, and the United Press appointing one arbitrator, these two to select the third arbitrator, and the majority opinion of this arbitration board to be final and binding upon both parties hereto for a period of one year."

Students Land Jobs

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 24.—Four courses in journalism will be offered in the summer session of the Ohio State University by Prof. Joseph S. Myers. Most of the undergraduates of the year just closing will be employed on newspapers over the State during the summer vacation. Of the graduates, William P. Dumont will become editor of the Cambridge Times. Miss Lillian Hoskins will join the editorial staff of a Sidney paper. Ray Palmer will continue on the staff of the Columbus Dispatch. Miss Harriett E. Daily may join a Columbus paper.

Failure in the larger sense lurks where there is no spirit to serve an idealism.

N. Y. STATE NEWSPAPER MAKERS IN SESSION

Members of Three Associations Gather at Saratoga Springs — Associated Dailies May Appoint Advertising Man for Foreign Business

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., June 25.—The newspaper workers and publishers of the state gathered at the Grand Union Hotel today for the beginning of what will be three distinct conventions, the meeting of the Associated Dailies, the Convention of the New York State Press Association and the New York State Republican Editorial Association. The Associated Dailies met this morning, the Press Association will convene tomorrow morning and the Editorial Association will have its meeting Saturday.

The meeting of the Associated Dailies was called to order by President E. C. Van Loan, of Hudson, with twenty-five members in attendance. The attention of the meeting was occupied with a question box which discussed subjects relating to advertising, circulation, accounting, mechanical facilities and labor. Among the topics discussed were making returns, merging rural routes and revising second-class postage rates. The question of having an association advertising man for foreign business was considered. Members expressed their opinions of the standard cost sheet sent out by the A. N. P. A. and the question of association members making a similar report was discussed.

The merits of six and seven point for body matter, the pyramid make-up of pages and the eight-column form were among the matters considered from the mechanical standpoint. Labor came in for a good share of the discussion and the problems of linotype operation was the most important. All labor conditions from the business office to the carrier boy were taken up.

The opening session of the State Press Association was held tonight, with President William O. Green, of Fairport, presiding. The delegates were welcomed by former Senator Edgar T. Brackett and the response was by Charles H. Betts, of Lyons. Various committees were appointed to take up the matters that will come before the association for consideration.

The first business session will be held tomorrow and will continue Friday, Friday night the annual banquet will take place, when addresses will be made by Colonel George Harvey, General Samuel T. Ansell, of the War Department; Chancellor James R. Day, of Syracuse University; Harry S. Atwood, of Chicago, and James Schermerhorn, editor of the Detroit Times.

Thrift Invades Newspaper Offices

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 24.—The campaign to make thrift a permanent American characteristic is really on at last. The newspaper publisher, who has old-timer will tell you, is the last place in the world to look for thrift or thoughtfulness about money, has been invaded by the thrift germ.

The Savings Division of the Treasury Department was notified recently that the employes of the Kansas City Star and the Kansas City Times have organized a War Savings Society with a membership of about 600. These employes propose to maintain a 100 per cent organization by buying weekly a fixed quota of War Savings Stamps and Thrift Stamps.

FORD—TRIBUNE TRIAL COST IS GROWING

Fortune Is Being Spent in Great Libel Action—A New Kind of Expert Is Called to Pass on Statements of Detroit Manufacturer

The libel suit of Henry Ford against the Chicago Tribune is rapidly carving its way into more than one new niche in journalistic history. Conservative estimates now place the cost of the trial to date at $200,000 and the end is not even in sight. The "joy-riding" of witnesses brought from the Mexican border to testify for the defense is said to have added several thousand dollars to the general bill.

Ideas of Expenses

More than twenty-five witnesses were brought from the Mexican border by the Tribune, and the cost of the trip, their time and entertainment, has been estimated at $15,000, which is considered conservative. The entertainment has included a trip to Niagara Falls, according to Ford representatives. A fair estimate of the cost of the $1,000,000 trial can be secured from the cost of the stenographers' report for the first five weeks, according to a statement issued by E. G. Pipp, editor of Mr. Ford's Dearborn, Mich., Independent, which he estimates at $8,000 a day. The report for that period covers 3,293 pages.

The Tribune is always represented in court by ten attorneys and Henry Ford never by less than seven. The lowest estimate placed on the pay of any one of them, by Mr. Pipp, is $50 a day and the salary of some he places at more than $300 a day. The hotel bills of this resort were never more prosperous at this season of the year. The better class are all crowded with persons in attendance at the Ford-Tribune libel suit.

"Expert" on Anarchism

The outstanding feature of the trial during the past week has been the testimony given by Jesse N. Reeves, Professor of Political Science at the University of Michigan, who was called as "an expert on anarchism" by The Tribune. Prof. Reeves testified that he found the principles of well-known and recognized anarchists in the theories of Henry Ford as quoted in an article written by Edward Marshall after an interview with Mr. Ford. He quoted Gardner, Rudolph, Baknnin, Tucker, Tolstoy and others as holding the same views on community importance. Mr. Lockwood, attorney for Mr. Ford, quoted Christ, St. Paul, Bishop Williams, President Wilson, Lyman Abbott, Emerson and Tennyson as holding the same views as Mr. Ford, during the eross-examination of Prof. Reeves.

P. W. Williams, Detroit newspaper correspondent, who wrote the "Flivver Patriotism" dispatch which caused the Tribune to print the editorial which caused the present libel suit, testified that his story was based on an interview with Mr. Klingensmith, a Ford manager.

W. N. U. Soldiers Return

Oklahoma City, June 24.—Guy Edward Martin, for years with the Oklahoma City office of the Western Newspaper Union and later with the A. E. F., has returned from France. Lieut. Herbert H. Fish, son of President H. H. Fish of the "W. N. U.," also is expected back soon to work. He went to California for an extended vacation because of illness contracted in France and is now recovered. Of the ten men the Western Newspaper Union had in the army six went overseas and escaped injury.

WASHINGTON APPROVES PUBLICITY BUREAUS

sentatives scattered throughout the most active and important branches of the Government, there was a well-defined reason for officials dealing with them and through them instead of with the correspondents. Whether this was due not only to save time of officers, but to have an official agency through which the Government dealt with the press—the committee has not been exactly an agent of the newspapers—where all queries might go and where sound judgment might be had on the advisability of releasing certain matter to the public.

It is to the credit of the committee that few instances are recalled where efforts were made to prevent publication of information on the exclusive ground of its being "bad politics for the Administration."

War Time Was Different

On the surface, at least, politics were forgotten on most questions of administrative procedure, and almost all faiths desiring to have the achievements of their Government put forward in the most favorable light were inclined to condone occasional lapses into fulsome praise.

Reference is made to the fact that regardless of a man's personal politics when he enters a Federal bureau he ceases he naturally desires to put forth the work of the department for which he becomes the spokesman in the best possible light, and it so happens that Government publicity very often runs to adjectives and sometimes to superlatives.

Answer is made that no simple solution to such a problem presents itself in the polley pursued by the Committee on Public Information in many instances and the War Department News Bureau in a majority of its "handouts," that of issuing official statements without "leads" or comment of any sort.

This leaves it to the newspaper man to dig his own story out of the material, to draw his own conclusions and inferences.

Favor End of Bureaus

But this response does not satisfy those opponents of official publicity who believe it is better to dispense with such bureaus and leave it to the papers to ferret the news out of the thousands or more bureaus in Washington, even though it is admitted that the volume of news of Government activities would be materially less.

There is an important question involved in the discussion, and one which scarcely requires any especial emphasis to show how easily it might operate to defeat the major feature of the Cummins bill or a similar measure, should the authors insist upon linking "publicity" with "advertising."

Toledo Cinh Elects Dowd

Toledo, Ohio, June 20.—The following officers have been elected by the Toledo Advertising Club: President, C. F. Dowd; vice-president, Henry Ungar; secretary, Kenneth Barnard; treasurer, Jack Murphy; directors, J. O. Munn, E. A. Machen, C. H. von Beseler, Harris Corey, L. H. Sanzenbacher.

E. S. Hooper with New York Globe

Elmer S. Hooper has joined the foreign advertising department of the New York Globe. He has been for a number of years in the Hearst papers.

WINNIPEG NEWSPAPERS WEATHERED STORM

City Without Papers for a Week—Conditions Almost Normal Again—Big Volume of Advertising Now Being Carried

(BY TELEGRAPH TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER.)

Winnipeg, Man., June 24.—The daily newspapers of Winnipeg have weathered the severest industrial storm ever experienced in Canada and perhaps on the American Continent. The most extensive general strike ever called in the Dominion began in Winnipeg on Thursday, May 15, and to some extent the city is still in its grip, although many workers have gone back to their jobs and all public utilities are again operating.

A dead set was made against the daily press by the strike committee as soon as the general strike had been called. The committee adopted the assumption that the newspapers would be against the strikers, although the tone of the articles in the press right up to the calling of the strike had been distinctly favorable toward most of the demands of labor.

Broke Contracts

The printers refused to take a strike vote and stayed on their jobs, but the pressmen and stereotypers broke their contract and defied their international officers when sent out on Friday, May 16, the second day of the strike, the engineers, firemen, electricians, elevator men and janitors also deserting their posts in the newspaper offices.

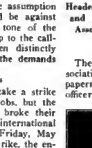
The city was without its daily papers until the following Thursday, when the Free Press issued a two-page paper, and publication has proceeded regularly since that day. The other daily papers, the Telegram and Tribune, resumed publication on Saturday, May 24. For several days the papers were restricted to eight pages, but after about a week went back to normal size. Later on the pressmen and stereotypers returned to their positions, on the orders of their international officers. The newspapers, in resuming publication, began a vigorous fight against the principle of sympathetic strikers, especially on public utilities, and they have loomed up as large factors in the struggle.

Despite the industrial unrest the Winnipeg papers are carrying a large volume of advertising. Returns for June are expected to equal those of same month last year. Considerable amount of advertising space has been used by the Citizens' Committee of One Thousand, which has carried on public utilities and has conducted a vigorous campaign against motives and methods of the strike leaders.

Advertising Volume About Normal

Many of the utilities have also used paid space to explain to the public their position, and to offer positions to new employes. Foreign advertising is again back to average, although badly tied up in early period of trouble by strike of postal employes in Winnipeg division. City circulation was badly hit by strike, but delivery organization is again normal.

Carriers Quit Routes



Many extreme labor men quit the daily papers as a result of their attitude towards strike, but some of this loss is already being regained. A number of carrier boys, whose fathers were strikers, quit their routes, and in the unsettled state of the city it was several days before reorganization could be effected.

Outside circulation was practically cut off for ten days, owing to absence of mail service, but with reorganization of postal staff delivery to all outside points was resumed. Very few subscription losses have been sustained by the papers in the country. For nearly two weeks during the strike telegraph operators were out at Winnipeg and correspondents for outside papers had to carry their copy down to Thief Falls, Minnesota, and other towns across the border in order to get it transmitted. A wireless outfit, erected on the roof of Free Press Building, helped bring the news of the outside world into Winnipeg when the wires were dead, the wireless constantly picking up within a few hours of the installation of the apparatus the Arlington Naval Wireless, near Washington, D. C.

NEW YORK WELCOMES ILLUSTRATED NEWS

First Issue of Chicago Tribune's Daily Pictorial Appears Today, Featuring $10,000 Beauty Contest—Will Give News in Pictures

New York City's newest morning newspaper—The Illustrated Daily News—a pictorial resembling the London Daily Graphic and the London Daily Mirror, appears today. Arrangements had been made for the distribution of a large edition through the American News Company and independent distributers to newsdealers within a radius of 75 miles of the City Hall, so it would appear on newsstands not later than the last editions of the other New York City dailies.

Its publishers, the Chicago Tribune Company, operating as the News Syndicate Co., Inc., with headquarters in the Evening Mail Building at 25 City Hall Place, had whetted public interest in the new publication by printing full-page advertisements for four days in other New York City dailies, featuring a $10,000 prize offered for a photograph of the most beautiful girl in Greater New York.

A Deluge of Photographs

The result was that before the first issue of the paper appeared its editorial rooms began to fill up with photographs, large and small, of pretty young women. The last of the sixteen pages of the first issue is taken up with reproductions of four of these, and a critical survey of these suggests that whatever young lady does win the prize will have to be not only a beauty but a radiant angel.

Beauties who make a business of driving dull care away from the male patrons of musical comedy are barred from participation in the contest, and while this ban does not extend to society princesses, it is significant that the five young women whose facial charms are exhibited in the first issue of the Daily Illustrated News are all in business. Miss C. is employed at the Pennsylvania Hotel; Miss M., at Spiro's Hair Shop; Miss W., at Lord & Taylor's; Miss M., at Wanamaker's, and Miss S. at the Vogue Hat Shop.

"Who We Are"

The purpose and plan of the new publication is announced in an editorial headed "Who We Are." It is stated that while the first purpose of the new daily will be to present the news of the world in pictures short news stories will also be carried. Stress is laid on the fact that the Illustrated Daily News will not be a competitor of other New York newspapers, but will cover a field that they have never attempted to cover. The special news service of the Chicago Tribune will be augmented by United Press dispatches.

The editorial announcement says that one of the policies of the paper will be the publication of the best and newest fiction to be had and a new serial detective story by E. Phillips Oppenheim begins in the first issue.

Some of the permanent features of the new paper will be "A Line O' Type Or Two," the humorous column of Bert Leston Taylor, which appears in the Chicago Tribune; "How to Keep Well," by Dr. W. A. Evans; "Doris Blake's Answers," of particular interest to those whose love affairs are not running smoothly; "Beauty Answers," by Antoinette Donnelly; "Real Love Stories," told by the participants; "Bright Sayings of Children," by proud parents; "Daily Fashion Hints," "Sportographs," "A Guide to the Theatres" and McCutcheon's cartoons.

National advertisers have three of the sixteen pages of the first issue. Woodbury's has a page; Cutex, two half-pages, and E. & W. Collars and the Auto Strop Razor, each a half page. Despite its "Guide to the Theatres," the News will not solicit theatrical advertising. The page rate is $200. The paper will be increased in size as the volume of advertising grows. Seven pages of advertising will call for a twenty-page issue, and eleven pages of advertising for a twenty-four page issue.

THE LATE CESAR MAURICE LOMBARDI

Virginia Press Association to Meet July 17-18-19.

Organization Expects to Enroll Additional Daily Newspapers as Members —Will Visit Historic Yorktown

ROANOKE, Va., July 27.—The executive committee of the Virginia Press Association has announced West Point, Va., as the meeting place for the summer convention, and July 17, 18 and 19 as the dates.

R. A. Anderson, of Marion, is president, and Charles B. Cooke, of Richmond, secretary-treasurer.

At the July meeting the resolutions adopted at the Roanoke meeting in 1918 will go into effect. One of these resolutions provides for the abolishment of the office of historian, and also does away with the various district vice-presidents.

L. E. Pugh, of the Newport News Press, is chairman of the Daily Section of the Virginia Press Association, created at the Roanoke meeting, and it is probable that the Association will be strengthened by the addition of several of the more influential daily newspapers of the State to its membership.

The tentative program calls for a steamer trip down the York River to historic Yorktown, which is now becoming famous again as a naval station and fuel oil base. After dinner at the Yorktown Inn the return trip will be made by moonlight. Another afternoon will be spent in visiting the shipyard and other industries at West Point.

Sells for Two Cents

The new paper will appear every day except Sunday. It will sell on the newsstands for two cents. Subscriptions by mail postpaid in the United States or Canada will be 75 cents a month, $4 for six months and $8 a year.

R. R. McCormick and J. M. Patterson, publishers and co-editors of the Chicago Tribune, are publishers and editors of the Illustrated Daily News; William H. Field, Eastern business manager of the Chicago Tribune, is general manager; George Utassy, formerly general manager of the Hearst Magazines, is business manager, and Arthur Clarke, formerly city editor of the New York Evening World, is managing editor. Max Annenberg, circulation manager of the Chicago Tribune, temporarily is in charge of the circulation department, and has as his assistant J. J. Sullivan, who previously was connected with the Army Edition, now the Paris Edition, of the Tribune.

Among the staff writers of the News are Harry Canfield, Sumner N. Blossom, Merton E. Burke, Augustin Lardy, Amy L. Paulding and Mabel McElliott.

Now is the psychological moment to sell an old piece of machinery and Editor & Publisher is the place to tell 'em about it.

C. M. LOMBARDI DIES AT AGE OF 74

President and Editor of A. H. Belo Newspapers in Texas Was a Self-Made Man—Started Career as a Bookkeeper

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

DALLAS, Tex., June 23.—Cesar Maurice Lombardi, president of A. H. Belo & Co., publishers of the Dallas Morning News, Dallas Evening Journal and Galveston Daily News, died at his summer home at Berkeley, Cal., early this morning. Mr. Lombardi has been connected with A. H. Belo & Co. for twelve years, first as vice-president and since 1913 as president.

Born in Switzerland, August 6, 1845, he came to America in 1860, locating in New Orleans, where he was employed for ten years as bookkeeper and cashier in several large business firms. During this time he was studying in the Jesuit College of New Orleans. His education in Switzerland had been in the Italian language, and while in New Orleans he studied in French and English. In 1871 he moved to Houston, Tex., and resided in that city until 1888, when he moved to Portland, Ore., and entered the wholesale grain business.

Having married Miss Caroline Gaston Ennis, of Houston, a sister of the wife of the late Col. A. H. Belo, upon the death of Alfred H. Belo, who had succeeded his father as head of the publishing company, Mr. Lombardi was induced to move to Dallas and become associated with the firm as representative of the Belo estate.

Mr. Lombardi brought to his new field a varied experience in the business world, a broad and well-trained intellect and an intimate knowledge and love of art and literature, and that enabled him to make his influence felt. He had a deep interest in state, national and world politics and a knowledge of affairs that enabled him intelligently to direct the editorial policies of the five newspapers of which he was editorial executive.

Mr. Lombardi is survived by his widow, two sons and one daughter. Funeral services will be held in Berkeley, Cal., tomorrow, and the body temporarily placed in a vault, where it will remain until September or October.

A. B. C. Reports on Newspapers

CHICAGO, June 24.—Audit Bureau of Circulation reports have been issued on the following newspapers: Dallas (Tex.) Morning News, Dallas Evening Journal; El Paso (Tex.) Herald, El Paso Morning Times; Perth Amboy (N. J.) Evening News; Sherbrooke (Que.) Daily Record.

Ohio Select List Week August 4

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 21.—The officers of the Ohio Select List met here this week to arrange for the general meeting to be held in Cleveland, at the Hollenden, on August 4. Harry Taylor, of the Portsmouth Times, president, presided.

BALTIMORE SUNDAY NEWS 3 CENTS

Means More for Dealers—The Daily News Is Unaffected

BALTIMORE, June 22.—The price of the Sunday afternoon News was raised today from 2 to 3 cents. The News is owned by Frank A. Munsey and was one of the first papers in the land to issue Sunday afternoon editions. In making its announcement of the increase in price the paper says:

"The heavy increase in the cost of paper and every other commodity that enters into the making of a newspaper, the increase in expense in every department, compels the News to change the price of its Sunday issue from 2 to 3 cents. A considerable portion of the increase goes to newsboys and newsdealers, who are as much affected by the high cost of living as others."

The increase applies to the Sunday News only. The Daily News remains at 2 cents.

A.N.A. NEWS AND VIEWS

A WEEKLY FEATURE COMPILED AND EDITED BY JOHN SULLIVAN

SECRETARY-TREASURER OF THE ASSOCIATION OF NATIONAL ADVERTISERS

COMPARISONS

Views of the A. B. C. in January, 1918, and June, 1919

LAST week I attended the annual meeting of the Audit Bureau of Circulations in Chicago. It was the second general meeting of the A. B. C. at which I have been present. The first was in January, 1918. Comparisons are inevitable.

At both meetings the earnestness of the members was evident. I can imagine someone saying here, "Well, aren't they paying out enough good money to make them earnest!" Surely; but it wasn't that kind of earnestness. Quite evident was it that the point of interest was not what they were getting or were likely to get, but what they were making—in the shape of an institution. They were working, not in connection with a casual matter, but for something in which they believed.

This earnestness of spirit of the A. B. C. men vastly impressed me in January last year. The A. N. A. had resolved upon a much closer inspection of the A. B. C., and the A. B. C. chiefs were by no means loath. In fact, when I invited them to sell me on the proposition, they went the limit; they gave me every particular requested, and placed before me everything for which I asked.

But this earnestness aforesaid: when I went back and reported it to the directors of the A. N. A., and said to them, "Gentlemen, these publishers believe in the A. B. C., and they are resolved to uphold and maintain it and to be loyal to it," they also, were impressed.

SAME WATCH-DOGS WATCHING

NO meeting of similar interest is complete without the watch-dog—the critic, the verbal particularist. He has his place and function—and a very useful function it is; and ultimately he goes to his own place. He makes men think; he startles them into thinking—and laughing. He is a most perfect antidote to carelessness in framing by-laws. He is always "agin the Government," he is always, paradoxically enough, for more Government. He is the maker of the about 63,000 laws that have been placed on the Federal and State statute books of the United States in a brief period—of which number, it is said, the majority is negligible or unnecessary. When it comes to making by-laws, he has all possible, probable things on his list, and "they never will be missed."

He—or, rather, they—were present at both the A. B. C. meetings mentioned. Every time they arose with the vocative, "Mr. President," someone enjoyed himself—someone smiled. At last week's meeting certain gentlemen—usually regarded as possessing a fair measure of sedateness—were betting on the number of arisings.

There was some dispute as to whether one of the verbal particularists arose eighteen or thirty-one times; but one of the wagerers netted $1.25 when the meeting closed.

GOOD HUMOR IS GOOD SENSE

THE foregoing section was not written for the purpose of pilloriying the verbal particularists, but to indicate how good-humored—as well as earnest—the A. B. C. meeting was.

The A. B. C. has arrived. In the January, 1918, meeting there was an element of partisanship without responsibility, inevitable during the process of becoming, but, also, indicative of the period of adolescence. Last week, on the contrary, there was partisanship with responsibility. Nothing must be done, speaker after speaker said, to injure the constitutional fabric of the Bureau; nothing to replace (if replacement be possible) the authority of the buyer—the advertiser; the Bureau has grown strong and like all strong persons, like organizations, it forgets its rights in the face of its duties; in any case, the greater—the duties—includes the less—the rights.

CONFIDENCE OF THE BODY OF ADVERTISERS

TIME and time again a speaker would emphasize the necessity of the Bureau continuing to merit the confidence of the advertiser—by continuing the authority of the advertiser. The importance of that consideration is obvious: depose the authority of the advertiser, and the Bureau would lose all reason for existence. The buyer always determines the standards of the purchase.

There was once, so it is said, an island where the inhabitants existed by taking in one another's washing. And, it is also said, they were happy and content with the appearance, the color, the finish of the laundered articles. Although the story does not say so, someone must at some time have discovered that island and its happy, self-satisfied people.

Of the present existence of this island laundry there is no record. I can imagine that, after the discovery of the island and the occupation of the people, attempts were made to employ the mutual service by the outside world of buyers of laundry service. There buyers doubtless, had a certain standard of service in their minds to which they thought the islanders should conform. Each and every islander, on the other hand, probably contended that because Kankakee Brown was satisfied with the work turned out by Oshkosh Smith, therefore these alien buyers-of-the-hills ought also to be satisfied—even if, now and then, something was lost in the wash, something made to look shabby and unreliable by primitive methods, or there should be carelessness in the count of the pieces sent home.

That kind of standard of service did not so much matter in the absence of a demand for a higher standard, and so long as the uncles, the cousins and the aunts were content with it.

But immediately prospective buyers of the service became interested—people paying real money—it became necessary, apparently, to conform to the standards of those buyers.

It would appear that because the islanders thought these buyers highbrows and, doubtless, said, "What is good enough for us is good enough for them," the buyers ceased to be interested.

And the moral? Well, it can happen again.

But not if men as sane as those who attended the fifth annual meeting of the A. B. C. continue with the Bureau.

STANLEY CLAGUE NOW AND THEN

THERE is one more comparison in the two meetings—January, 1918, and June, 1919,—that I must make,—the attitude of the members towards Stanley Clague, the managing director. In January, 1918, Mr. Clague had been in command only some three or four months. In spite of his previous record as director, and as one of the founders of the Bureau, it was plain that the attitude of those in attendance was ultracritical, almost censorious. The dues were to be increased, and any man in an organization who is thought to be the suggestor of an increase in dues is seldom, temporarily, popular. Also, owing to great difficulties, and lack of sufficient funds, it had, until just before the meeting, been impossible to catch up with the arrears of audit-making.

But last week there was general appreciation and approval, and a motion to congratulate Mr. Clague was adopted enthusiastically, not perfunctorily, but with the heartiness that men always show in appreciating accomplishment.

And Mr. Clague, like all good organization managers, accepted the resolution for the organization, and not only for himself.

BY the way, I heard incidentally that when it became known that Stanley Clague had been re-elected managing director by the directors of the A. B. C. office staff were overheard 'phoning to their families that everything was "O. K." for another year, anyway. Commercial Attaché at Buenos Ayres.

Houston Is a Firm Believer in Use of Advertising

Business Men and Associations Determine to Make City Best and Biggest in the Southwest

HOUSTON, Tex., June 23.—If publicity will do it, Houston will reach the goal she aspires to—the biggest and best city in the Southwest—and she will do it by means of advertising and printer's ink; for there isn't a town in the South that believes in getting to the public through the medium of the press more than does the city of Houston. Her merchants in every line of business are advertisers and spare no means to tell the public what their commodities are.

A clever idea was evolved recently by a dry goods firm here and proved to be a great success. The firm devoted pages of advertising to tell the public throughout the State about the exhibit it was preparing of articles made in Houston An entire floor was devoted to this exhibit and everything from a tin cup to a piano was attractively shown in the various booths built for that purpose.

Another dry goods firm had its 35th Anniversary Sale recently, and for a week previous it carried in the local papers page advertising space telling of the coming event. It used a clever idea in showing each day a map representing the town along the railway lines of easy access to Houston and below gave the time of arrival and departure of trains from each point.

Through this advertising the event was known all over the county and talked about and the morning of the day when the doors of the store were opened 3,000 people were waiting to be admitted. Throughout that day and the following days of the sale each floor was jammed with people.

What helped to make a success of the million dollar bond election for the improvement of Houston ship channel a few weeks ago? The liberti use of advertising and the newspapers. Likewise, publicity helped to secure Ellington Field to Houston, thus making her the possessor of the largest flying field in the world.

Expansion is the slogan of the Young Men's Business League and it is putting on an expansion drive June 23.

The Houston Post has opened its free swimming campaign. It is an annual affair and has been with great success in the past. It represents a course of free swimming lessons for boys from the ages of 11 to 14 and is conducted jointly with the Y. M. C. A. The only formality necessary for entering the campaign was to clip the coupon which appeared in the Post and send it in to the office of the Y. M. C. A.

The Rotary Club is a hustling organization here, and it believes in printer's ink.

Buck and Hammersfahr Join Hands

CHICAGO, June 21.—Glen Buck and A. C. G. Hammesfahr have become associated in the advertising business heretofore conducted here by Mr. Buck individually. Mr. Hammesfahr has resigned as vice-president and general manager of P. F. Collier & Son, New York. He is well known in the Middle West through having formerly represented Collier's in the territory.

JOHN RING, JR., HONORED

President of St. Louis Ad Club Given Bronze Plaque for Patriotic Services

ST. LOUIS, June 24.—A bronze plaque was presented to John Ring, Jr., president of the Advertising Club, by members at the regular weekly luncheon meeting, in recognition of Mr. Ring's services in maintaining the work of the Demobilization Bureau for Sailors, Soldiers and Marines, which has done splendid work in finding jobs for these discharged service men. The presentation speech was made by George M. Burbach, of the Post-Dispatch.

Since the bureau opened on December 16, 1918, 11,338 men have registered, 11,639 firms and individuals have applied for men, 10,686 men have been referred to jobs, and 8,290 men placed.

Before the War

During the War

After the War

THE NEW YORK GLOBE presents for the consideration and study of advertisers and space buyers the battle scenes of its circulation experience from January 1, 1912, to and including May, 1919, (a period of 89 consecutive months).

By following the curve for the year 1914 to the month of August, where the outbreak of war inflated circulation from 169,000 in July to 213,000 in August, it will be seen how the interest in the war, as reflected by the sale of newspapers, declined along normal lines of experience during the latter part of the year.

During the year 1916 the taking on of the publication of the special war service of the Chicago Daily News, in April, caused a steady gain in circulation, reaching the peak in September, when the print paper panic broke out and circulation was limited by possibility of supply. During the first week in October The Globe reached sales exceeding 250,000 copies a day, with one day over 300,000, when war conditions compelled it to stop its presses at 210,000 to 220,000 a day.

During the year 1917 it was a battle to secure an adequate supply of print paper to meet demands of the newspaper for an average sale of approximately 212,000 copies per day.

In January, 1918, war necessities forced the New York newspapers to go to two cents a copy, leading to a memorable strike by the news trade, which inflicted a temporarily serious drop in sales for February and March.

Circulation came back about 10,000 a month until the usual Summer declines, with circulation reaching the peak for the year in November, with the coming of the armistice, with 196,000.

The year 1919 opened with the usual drop in February, with the Spring peak reached in May instead of April, by reason of the late starting of the baseball season.

May, 1914—before the war—with a one cent newspaper	180,000
May, 1919—after the war—with a two cent newspaper	190,000

The Globe's presentation of its circulation figures, all subject to A. B. C. audit and verification, stands unique and in striking contrast with the usual presentation of bare figures. The sale of a newspaper has its ups and downs, according to the season, the same as any other commodity.

In the graph we have added the year 1908 merely to indicate the wonderful growth of The Globe over a period of eleven years:

May, 1908—a one cent newspaper	91,000
May, 1919—a two cent newspaper	190,000

Double the circulation and at two cents the copy, with print paper costing more than twice as much—an increase from $43 to $90 per ton—and all labor vastly heavier, for less than 25 per cent. increase in average net rate to the advertiser!

SUCCESS IS ASSURED RECRUIT CAMPAIGN

Returns Near Close of Government's $16,000 "Flier" in Newspaper Advertising for Army Show Large Increase in Enlistments

There is every indication that the Government's paid-advertising campaign to obtain recruits for the United States army, which ends Saturday of this week, is to be a big success—a much bigger success, apparently, than was anticipated even by those who were confident it would prove a paying venture.

The cost of the two-weeks' campaign was only $186,000 and as EDITOR & PUBLISHER pointed out in previous issues, if it brought in only 10,000 or 12,000 men, the Government would not be out of pocket, as the present cost of recruiting a man for the army has been between $18 and $19 per recruit.

Daily reports that are being received in the Adjutant General's office at Washington from main recruiting stations in 56 cities of the United States seem to indicate that the paid-advertising campaign is going to prove to Uncle Sam that paid newspaper advertising is the best way to get results not only in this but in many other of his official activities

Should Reduce Expense

So far as this particular campaign is concerned, it is believed at Government headquarters for it in New York City that the number of enlistments obtained thereby will be so much larger than is the case, week by week, under ordinary conditions, as to point the way to reducing the cost of enlistments, materially.

For instance, in Greater New York, 700 more enlistments were obtained during five days of the campaign than ever had been obtained in the same territory during six days previously. The number of inquiries concerning the service, most of which were directly attributable to the paid newspaper advertising, averaged 1,100 daily, or four times as many as the average daily number, previously. Many of these inquiries, it was pointed out, will be turned into enlistments later.

200 Papers Participated

There are four pieces of advertising being used in the campaign, appearing in all English-language newspapers in the cities where recruiting offices are located, or more than 200 newspapers in 56 cities. There were two full page and two pieces of 1,100 lines. The account was handled by Frank Seaman, Inc.

The newspapers have co-operated generously in the way of giving all possible space to the campaign in their news and editorial columns, as EDITOR & PUBLISHER contended they would.

"A Whopping Success"

"I don't believe there is any doubt but that the campaign will prove a whopping success," said Captain Floyd Keeler, who has been in charge of it for the Government, with headquarters in New York City. "It will take some time to check up on what actually has been accomplished by the end of the week, but, of course, the campaign will be bearing fruit for a long time, thereafter."

Those who favor the creation of a special Government bureau to apply advertising methods scientifically to enterprises of the various federal departments, such as is provided for in a bill prepared by Senator Cummings, see a strong likelihood of this becoming a reality, if the recruiting campaign proves as big a success as seems probable.

Tea Ads in Newspapers Exclusively

The John O. Powers Company, 461 Fourth Avenue, New York, is conducting an advertising campaign on "Schilling Tea"; 156 advertisements are now appearing in nearly 100 newspapers in the Pacific coast and Far West states. The publication advertising is being done exclusively in newspapers, with the exception of a list of Far Western farm papers. Besides the publication advertising Schilling, bulletins and posters are being used in towns where Sehilling tea is on sale.

ADVERTISES OTHERS TO MAKE FRIENDS

Unusual Campaign in Omaha, in Which an Awning Maker Buys Space to Boost All Lines of Business in City

The "service department" idea is steadily gaining headway with newspapers. And, as an example of what may be accomplished through such a department in the way of creating new advertisers, the Scott Tent & Awning Company's campaign, now running in the Omaha World-Herald, is interesting.

A. C Scott had never been "sold" on advertising. He usually spent a few hundreds a year in the special editions of Omaha newspapers, just to be in the procession—without any expectation that he would get actual results. Then along came James A. Austin, manager of the service department of the World-Herald, with a plan of campaign for Mr. Scott.

It was proposed to him that he should advertise Omaha and its business men. In striking display the various lines of business were to be treated, and advertised—Mr. Scott's own advertising consisting in the statement that he had paid for the publication of the matter. Mr. Scott contracted for fifteen hundred inches, to be used in a series of sixteen advertisements.

In one of these ads Mr. Scott lists the department stores and tells of their importance; in aonther, the specialty shops, etc. The copy has the constructive element in it, and the natural question in all minds has been, "Where does Scott, the awning man, come in?" He seemed to be advertising everybody but himself—every business except the awning business.

Omaha business men praise the spirit he has shown in this campaign. They talk about it—and about the unusual thing Scott has done. He is doing a lot more business just now than usual. That's one result. He has made hundreds of friends among the men who use awnings—and that spells good-will of the cash-value kind.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among nan-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines of advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in naw business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial in many ways—it has made new advertiseers and helped circulation—It has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for twenty weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

Wonderful Stockraising Development in the South

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World hold their next Convention in the South at New Orleans.

THE writer remembers when he represented a batch of Southern papers and solicited advertising for them in the North ten years ago. It did not take long for him to learn it was useless to call on manufacturing concerns that made goods pertaining to livestock raising, such as cream separators, feed choppers and silos, for example, because he would meet the rebuff, "No use advertising our goods in the South; you have no dairy cows down there."

It was very nearly the truth! The Southern farmer had not then realized that his broad stretches of green pasture lands, with capacity for furnishing feed nearly all the year, and their heavy yield of legumes made the South ideal territory for cattle raising.

What a change in ten years! Now there are thousands of head of pure bred registered cattle—and hogs, too—in the South, whereas ten years ago there were not that many "scrubs."

As a sidelight on the interest in the Southern States in pure-bred stock, it was decided last fall at the North Carolina Farmers' Convention in Raleigh to raise a fund of $25,000 to loan to boys and girls in that State to buy pure-bred pigs for breeding purposes.

The splendid work of the pig-clubs—all boys and girls—has done much to stimulate the swine industry throughout the South. These youngsters have taught their daddies a thing or two—one thing, for instance—the importance of raising only pure-bred stock. A few years ago it was hard to get a farmer to pay $10 for a good hog. Now he'll pay $50 or $100, or even more, because his boy or girl has shown him it is worth while.

To give an idea of the growth of the animal industry in the Southern States, the following figures are quoted:

The number of cattle from Mississippi sold on the St. Louis stock yards in 1908 was 8,000; in 1916 it had increased to 162,000.

Four years ago not a carload of hogs was shipped from seventeen counties in Southern Alabama. In the year ended April 1, 1918, these seventeen counties there were 28,072,000 head of swine on the farms of shipped 2,352 carloads.

On the farms of the Southern States Jan. 1, 1918, there were more than fifty-eight million (58,338,000) head of cattle, sheep and swine—a gain of 1,981,000 (3½%) compared with 1917, and 4,196,000 (7.7%) increase compared with 1915.

The same date there were in the South 6,983,000 dairy cows, an increase of 165,000 (2.4%) in twelve months, and 556,000 (8.6%) more than in 1915.

Increase in hogs was even greater. On Jan. 1, 1918, the South, an increase of 1,665,000 (6.3%) compared with 1917, and 2,341,000 (9.1%) compared with 1915.

In a recent bulletin of the Southern Railway, referring to these statistics on cattle and swine in the South, it was pointed out that Georgia and Alabama had each more hogs than all the New England States and New York, New Jersey, Delaware and West Virginia combined.

Advertise your goods in leading newspapers of the South and you will be highly gratified with the results.

NEWSPAPER ADS SELL "11TH-HOUR" LIQUOR

Dealers Who Never Used Space for Display Previously Are Surprised at Big Rush of Customers—Soft Drinks Advertised, Too

There was an eleventh-hour rush of the liquor dealers into the newspaper advertising columns this week and they came en masse—big dealers and little ones, many of whom had never used newspaper advertising before and needed such a crisis as the possibility of having a lot of liquor left on their hands after next Monday to make them appreciate the selling power of ads in their local dailies.

Some of them rubbed their eyes at the throngs of buyers in their establishments and frankly admitted they had overlooked a good thing in not having used newspaper advertising before.

"Since we started using fair-sized display advertising in New York newspapers, we have been doing a business of $30,000 a day," said R. A. Cunningham, sales manager of Grovenor Nicholas & Co., of New York City, dealers in champagnes, sherries, whiskies and brandies.

"No, we had never advertised in the newspapers before and are agreeably surprised at the results we are getting on this clean-up sale. We will have all our stock sold out before the bone-dry law goes into operation.

Results were "Amazing"

At Ph. Goldberg's, another large liquor establishment which is using large display in New York newspapers to move a stock worth $300,000, the advertising agent said that the trade obtained in this way had been "amazing."

"We will be able to sell all our bottled goods before the country goes dry," he said. "As for the barrelled stuff we have in warehouse, we do not care whether we sell that or not, as we can easily export it to South America, Canada or England, and sell it there at a good profit."

The New York Times, which carried a considerable amount of display advertising for liquor houses in their "last-chance" campaigns, obtained most of it without solicitation, B. T. Butterworth, the advertising manager, said.

"If we had cared to go after the business, I suppose we could have filled the paper with liquor ads," he added. "But we are not sufficiently interested in that kind of advertising."

When the liquor dealers hurried to get into newspaper advertising before the bell rang, they discovered that many of the old-established soft-drink makers, as well as quite a few new ones, had decided that they could use a little more display advertising than usual, to advantage also.

Soft-Drink Makers Active

Among them, of course, was "Bevo," which the advertising said, was "soon to appear in all good dictionaries," to be described there as a "delicious, non-alcoholic beverage"—the adjective "non-alcoholic" having the sanction of its makers, the Anheuser-Busch Company. This may be bad news for many who had entertained hopeful suspicions to the contrary.

After the ban has been put on booze, which, presumably, will then be marked "obsolete," even in the slang dictionaries, all up-to-date lexicons, according to the same advertisement, will contain a derivative of the noun "Bevo." This is "Bevoer." Anyone who is called a "Bevoer" hereafter should not become angry but learn from Webster, Revised, that it means "one who constantly enjoys the best of soft drinks."

Conspicuous among the soft drink display advertisements, also is the little chap who habitually carries the huge bottle of Clicquot Club ginger ale, smiling as usual in spite of his Esquimo attire, and his smile seems to be broader.

In the big newspaper display, is also to be seen "Fifty-Fifty," one of the many little newcomers in the beverage business—soft-drink strangers, gurgling with joy, or ready to gurgle, because Mr. John Barleycorn is soon to be put out of business.

Coffee and Tea Companies

The coffee dealers have not been slow to seize upon the psychological moment, either. The National Coffee Roasters Association and the Green Coffee Merchants has spent in the last six weeks, $60,000 in newspaper display advertising in 350 papers in 200 cities.

"Results have been very satisfactory," said R. T. Snodgrass, of N. W. Ayer & Son, which places the advertising.

"We are figuring that the ban on alcoholic drinks will increase greatly the consumption of coffee. In fact we know it will. When prohibition went into effect in Porto Rico, the consumption of coffee increased fifty per cent. within a year."

The tea merchants think they see big possibilities in the demise of King Alcohol, also. The Tea Association of America has progressed with its plans for a $2,000,000 advertising campaign to the point where it has been decided that the fund shall be raised by the payment of one-fifth-of-a-cent contribution by importers of this country on every pound of tea brought here, and a similar contribution by the growers, or exporters of Japan, China, Formosa, Ceylon and Java.

OREGONIAN STAFF CHANGES

PORTLAND, Ore., June 25.—Edith Knight Holmes, editor of the Oregonian's women's department, is resigning to marry Joseph A. Hill, president of Hill Military Academy. With her retirement Miss Florence Holmes, her daughter, joins the force. Mrs. Gertrude P. Corbett, society editor, is also leaving to engage in other work. Additions to the staff are Miss Lucile Saunders, from the Salem Statesman; Miss Dorothy Duniway, and H. L. Lyman, of the Walla Walla Union. Lieut. Fred G. Taylor expects soon to be out of the Marine Corps and to resume his old place on the Oregonian copy desk.

The "Q. & A." Service Department of EDITOR & PUBLISHER is open to all readers. Use it!

REPORTER MADE GOOD USE OF HIS ASSIGNMENT

Edward S. LaBart began newspaper work as an office boy, and became editor of the City Press Association of Chicago. The last assignment he had as a reporter for that organization was a grand jury investigation of the so-called "beef trust." The knowledge of the packing industry he acquired thereby had not a little to do with his getting a job with Morris & Co., and later he became publicity director for Wilson & Co., Chicago. He also is advertising counsel for the subsidiary concerns. He is 34 years old.

E. S. LABART.

The Advertising Women's Club of Boston has re-elected Miss Entistle president, Miss Laurice Moreland vice-president, Miss A. Frances Hanson secretary, Miss Blanche Frederickson treasurer.

There is really no reason why news of special interest to women should not be accurate, interesting and helpful. Philadelphia women know from its famous woman's page that

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Is "Always Reliable"

The "a-b-c" of advertising is the "A. B. C.", because you must start with the truth when you start to advertise.

The "A. B. C." guarantees the quantity; you measure the quality yourself.

Consequently, when you think of Brooklyn, you naturally think of the Standard Union.

NEW YORK STATE

The World's Greatest Market Unit

		Square Miles	Population
Arizona	Nevada
California	Oregon
Colorado	Utah
Idaho	Washington
Montana	Wyoming	1,066,668	8,661,760
Arkansas	Oklahoma
New Mexico	Texas	511,922	9,208,888
Kansas	Nebraska
Minnesota	North Dakota
Missouri	South Dakota	460,290	10,484,728
New York		50,326	10,646,989

The cost of covering a market depends, largely, upon the square miles of territory and the population contained therein.

As noted above, New York, with 50,326 square miles, has more possible customers for any kind of merchandise than have any of the groups of states shown.

Not only that, but New York stands out as prominently as regards to buying power, and, in a great many instances, is much stronger in its demand.

The state of New York is today

The Greatest Market on the Face of the Earth and, because of its splendid railway systems, its elegant roads, its great interurban systems, is the easiest state to cover, as well as the most productive state in results.

The daily newspapers listed here cover New York so thoroughly that, every day they reach two out of every three people in the state.

The combined advertising rate of ALL these newspapers, per line per thousand, is the lowest advertising rate possible to find anywhere.

And not only do they reach the people, but they tell each reader just where, in his own town, he can get your goods.

Daily newspaper advertising is the thing—daily newspaper advertising in New York daily newspapers, as listed here, covers the best ground in the country.

"AMERICA MUST
WHAT HAPPEN

MR. FRANK A. VANDERLIP, retiring president of the National City Bank, chairman of the War Savings Committee, and America's first authority on international finance and the author of "What Happened to Europe." This is a book that reviewers declare is the most amazing revelation of post-war European conditions yet presented, and one that will possibly change the entire American foreign policy.

UNDERSTAND"
ED TO EUROPE!

GREATEST NEWSPAPER FEATURE OF THE YEAR

For five months, Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip has been studying European conditions.

No American private citizen had opportunities equal to his of obtaining the truth.

He talked with premiers, finance ministers, great employers, important union labor leaders, manufacturers and bankers. King Alfonso conferred with him on the business problems confronting his country.

Governments called in their experts from far away stations in order that they might talk with Mr. Vanderlip.

He saw England close to revolution—and he saw the great leaders of Capital and Labor work out the problem.

His articles on the internal conditions of England, France, Italy, and Spain contain so much that is new, that they read with freshness of a cable dispatch.

His chapters on the results of Syndicalist and Bolshevik agitation in southern Europe are amazing revelations to American newspaper readers.

Mr. Vanderlip was a newspaperman before he became one of the world's great financiers. The story he tells has the sustained and fascinating interest of a best seller.

WIRE FOR OPTION TODAY

"What Happened to Europe" will be syndicated for newspapers in at least ten installments of 2000 words each, for early release.

The truth about Europe has not been half told.

Mr. Vanderlip tells it.

"I have reached," he writes, "what are to me some startling conclusions."

"America must understand how her own future is bound up with the fate of European civilization. Without America's help—I do not mean America's charity—the catastrophe cannot be averted."

"Time will move rapidly."

Mr. Vanderlip's new book . . . is a reminder in dramatic form of the total inadequacy of our information concerning the peoples and governments, regarding which it is now necessary to formulate a policy. It is a proof that all our diplomacy has been secret diplomacy in the sense that few of us understand the factors with which we were dealing.—The New York Globe.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER Q & A Service Department

NOTICE: Questions concerning newspaper technical trade matters and newspaper advertising should be addressed to Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER, 1117 World Building, New York. Those communications and answers will be published, unless the correspondent requests private reply; then self-addressed stamped envelope should be furnished. Correspondents desiring anonymity should indicate initials to be published.

Q.—We recently ordered some photo-engraving done in New York and are astonished at the high cost of the work. Please advise why engraving is so expensive in New York. T.

A.—The photo-engravers say that their material and labor costs are very high, but the real answer is that all union shops in New York, since Sept. 1, 1918, have been doing business under a so-called "standard" scale of prices which are dictated by the photo-engravers' unions. The same practice obtains in Chicago. The rule workmen insist that their employers charge at the scale and enforce the rule rigidly, and, it is said, the men will strike a shop where price competition is engaged in. The matter has been twice appealed to the courts, but the practice has been sustained on the ground that engraving is a "service" rather than a commodity, as we understand the matter. At any rate, the minimum for a half-tone is $3, and the minimum for a line cut is $2. Rates are two or three times greater than in former years.

Q.—What was the agate lineage of the New York newspapers in May of this year? L. M. L., Cineinnati.

A.—Total lineage of 16 New York city newspapers for May, 1919, was 13,078,840.

A.—(To confidential query from "Harkness") We believe you are absolutely justified in your course, if you have stated all of the facts, and that you would be sustained by the New York courts.

Q.—Do you believe that the prejudice among advertisers against premium-guided circulation is justified? If I have the readers does it make much difference how I obtained them? What is your position? R. W. J.

A.—Yes, there is real objection to premium-gained circulation from the advertisers' point of view. He buys space in a newspaper on circulation figures assuming that the newspaper is read for its general interest and that its circulation is a true test of its popularity and standing in the community. The premium is an artificial stimulation or inflation of circulation. People buy it for special rather than general value and may not respond to it as in the case of the newspaper the circulation of which is based on actual news or feature values. Yes, we hold that the point is well taken, but there are instances where newspapers have used premiums to introduce the paper and have actually held circulation thus gained.

Q.—Is there such a thing as rotogravure in colors for newspapers? Martin H. H.

A.—There is no practical use of it, but it is being worked on in the United States, and is predicted as a future development.

Q.—Why don't you advise advertising writers to abstain from the use of the word "monstrous" in the sense that it means "big." It makes me tired to read it in sale advertising. Knowles.

A.—All right, we will. Our idea of "monstrous" is that its synonyms are "hideous," "preposterous," "overwhelmingly absurd," not at all that it merely means "big." Perhaps usage in certain kinds of advertising copy has long since justified it in that sense, however. Thus is the language made.

Q.—(1) What is the Simplex typesetting machine and what does it cost? (2) Are there any other cheap methods of machine setting of type available for country papers (weekly)? (3) Do any weekly papers attempt publication without typesetting machinery of any kind, doing all composition by hand? (4) Would a Simplex machine take care of an 8 page, 6 column weekly, 4 pages patent? JOHN L. OCHERLY, Cohoes, N. Y.

A.—The Simplex typesetting machine followed after the old Empire and the Thorne; in fact, it is a modification of the two machines mentioned. It sets founder's type, which must be specially nicked. It requires two operators, one to set and one to justify. Very likely a machine of this character would take care of an eight-page six-column weekly, four pages patent, but the question arises concerning the economy of the operation.

A.—To P. H. M., St. Louis: We were mistaken in our answer of June 5. Cruse Carriel informs us from San Francisco that Mr. Raine Bennett, Chronicle Building, that city, publishes the "Rice Courier," a monthly.

NEW DAILY IN ALASKA

Morissey and Stone Will Issue Ketchikan Journal in July

PORTLAND, Ore., June 24.—A new daily paper is to be established at Ketchikan, Alaska, by Edward G. Morissey and B. M. Stone, who were in Portland a few days ago purchasing their plant. It will be known as the Ketchikan Journal. It will be an eight-page, seven-column paper and the first issue will come out in July.

Mr. Morissey, who was secretary to the late Congressional Delegate Sulzer, will be editor and president of the holding company. Mr. Stone, who formerly owned a paper at Vale, Ore., will be business manager.

Gurley Leaves Kansas City Post

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 21.—Boyd F. Gurley, for the past four years managing editor of the Kansas City Post, resigned today. He will be succeeded by E. N. (Dick) Smith, former city editor. Mr. Gurley some years ago founded the Denver (Colo.) Express.

COURT SEIZES TOLEDO PAPER

New Voice Charged with Inciting Strike and Contempt

TOLEDO, O., June 21.—On the ground that the editors violated terms of an injunction issued in the Willys-Overland labor controversy, Federal Judge Killits today confiscated an entire issue of the New Voice soon after it came off the press. Recently the paper contained an attack on the injunction power. The confiscated issue urges a general strike.

The court announced that it will sentence Alex Schwarzenfeld, member of the board of control of the New Voice to a penitentiary. The decision came after Schwarzenfeld, in court for contempt, announced that he "stood pat" on whatever appeared in the paper.

Two other members of the New Voice staff, John Kavany and Walter Voelkner, are in jail. All three are members of the soldiers' and sailors' council.

Wrigley Favoring Newspapers

OTTAWA, Ont., June 22.—The bulk of Wrigley's Chewing Gum advertising in Canada has been placed with the newspapers. Since about ten years ago, when the Canadian public first began to become acquainted with "Spearmint," this advertising has expanded until 267 Canadian papers, magazines and farm papers are now being used, with a total circulation of 3,147,628. Each year the company's sales have increased and the selling cost has decreased.

OWNS ONLY MORNING DAILY IN ALASKA

The Fairbanks Daily Alaska Citizen is the only morning daily in Uncle Sam's greatest Territory. It was established on September 27, 1916, the outgrowth of the weekly Citizen, at that time the only weekly published in interior Alaska.

J. M. CASKEY.

The editor and owner of the Citizen —which is an Associated Press newspaper—is James Harmon Caskey, who was born in Wooster, Ohio, February 17, 1862. Mr. Caskey is a practical printer, as well as a forceful writer. He went to Dawson, Yukon Territory, in 1899 to establish the Dawson Daily News, taking the plant by way of Nome and St. Michael. In June, 1906, he went to Fairbanks, becoming interested in the Evening News.

Mr. Caskey is a 32nd degree Mason. He ranks among the pioneers of Alaska newspaper making, and has been active in the affairs of not only Fairbanks but the Territory at large.

Industrially and economically, Czecho-Slovakia is highly developed.

"Brass Tacks" in Advertising EXPERIENCE COUNTS MORE THAN EXPERIMENTS

By WILBUR D. NESBIT

LAST Thursday we ran one of our "Brass Tacks" advertisements in The Chicago Tribune. As an illustration of the fact that the right kind of advertising pays, before 10 o'clock that morning one of Chicago's largest department stores called us up and made an appointment to talk with us about a $100,000 campaign.

This advertiser was impressed most with the fact that the Wm. H. Rankin Company believes in talking its own medicine. He also felt that an advertiser that prepared and placed the advertising of such high class companies as Marshall Field & Co. (wholesale); The B. F. Goodrich Company, Wilson & Company, Mead Cycle Company, Haynes Automobile Company, Illinois Glass Company, Grinnell Glove Company, Talking Machine Company, and Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Company must be working for such concerns far from one to twenty years—ought to be the right company for him to start with.

Experience counts in advertising. Just as in everything else. We bank more on experience than we do on experiments. We look upon advertising as a means not only to create good will but to help make sales.

We know that getting down to brass tacks pays. It pays us; it pays our customers. In our own advertising we do not pay for space just to make a good impression.

WE use this space just as in years past to tell you of the service we have to tell our story to get new customers. We find printed advertising a more economical for our purpose. We have no solicitors. We do not like business with us to you talk with one of the principals in the business. Our advertising gets us more business at less cost than when we had several high salaried solicitors.

One of the important things we do right here in our own offices is to sell our whole organization on the tremendous value of advertising. Our aim is that everybody in both our Chicago and New York organizations, from the office boy up, shall feel that he personally believes in the advertising we do. And frankly, everybody in our organization is loyally proud of our service and our work.

Our "Brass Tacks" talks have been very effective for us. They have brought you a sale of our service that we know to be most important for our customers—the buying of space, planning the campaign, depending upon the size of space and the mediums to be used. First of all, we want to help our customers invest their advertising money wisely and profitably. We avoid waste. We make the dollars count. And that tells its own story when your books are audited at the end of your year.

MOST advertisers know of the high standing of the Rankin organization when it comes to copy and art service. They have seen our work in national publications for Wilson & Company, Grinnell Gloves, Kellogg's, Goodrich Tire Lines Truck Tires, Adams-Pearl Co., Haynes Automobile, Apperson Tudorvar, Klaxter Cottens, and others. In Chicago newspapers we have seen the campaigns we prepared for the Retail Dealers' Association, Swift & Company, Goodrich Safety Tread Tires, Goodrich Silvertown Cord Tires, Schuler's Bread, Haynes Automobiles, De Luxe Bed Springs, Crapo Overalls, Diamond Tires, Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes, The Fox Brewing Building Sites and many more.

Back of this advertising and art service is our merchandising and sales co-operation work. At a recent sales convention the customer frankly told us that as a result of the way our executives sold the advertising to his salesmen the value of the campaign was increased at least 50 per cent. He also said his advertising was intrinsically worth 100 cents on the dollar, but that his salesmen would use the campaign in a manner to make it yield a profit of at least 100%.

That's the way we look at advertising. It must not only bring back 100% of what it costs, but must show a profit. That's why there never was a time when the best way to invest money in advertising helps us in our work and benefits our customers.

We have no salesmen. This advertisement is a salesman for us. It will build good will; it will help us with those in our company that is not yet ready to advertise. We look ahead. We are planning for work and for the years thereafter. We want to be in touch with advertisers of constructive as well as those of today. Our best work is often done for an advertiser before he has put a penny into the purchase of space. This is shown by what a new customer of ours in New York wrote about us:

"The Rankin Company have been constructive in our account and are preparing for us a national campaign to be incorporated next April. During our association with them they have displayed a breadth of vision and keen knowledge of merchandising and advertising that has won our admiration and confidence."

"Newspaperdom" recently wrote our customers relative to our method of working for and with them and we quote below extracts from three of their letters:

The B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co.

"The Rankin Company, and their predecessors, have served us for the past six years, and in all that time, the Rankin Agency is particularly known for its splendid service, copy-writers, and 2 Service Department men that we have had."

F. C. TIBBITTS, Adv. Mgr.

The Haynes Automobile Co., Kokomo, Ind.

We have dealt with Rankin first through the Advertising Agency Company, and since then the Rankin Advertising Agency, in all about six years, having been frequently solicited during that time by practically every agency in the country. The above statement therefore implies that we have in fact not consider that any agency could do more for us than the Rankin Agency. Rankin, Nesbit and Groth are noted, as are also other members of their organization all the way down the line. They are always on the job, always looking for an opportunity to do some thing which will benefit their clients. They are constantly on the alert and, personally, I regard them as an all around, five-wire aggregation. They strike me as a high class concern.

A. G. SAPPERLING, Gen. Mgr.

Mead Cycle Company, Chicago, Ill.

The Rankin Advertising Agency and its predecessor, the Mahin Advertising Agency, have handled the Mead Cycle Company in highly efficient manner for about twelve years. During seven years under the personal direction of the writer, formerly a stockholder, ever so long a period would seem to indicate that satisfactory service that might easily deteriorate into inefficiency but the contrary is true. We note in this agency a constructive attitude and co-operation rather than a diminishing sense of service.

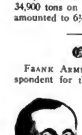
6½ DAYS AHEAD IN PAPER MILLS

May Report of News Print Service Bureau Shows Conditions

The 39 companies reporting to the News Print Service Bureau produced 144,621 tons and shipped 155,807 tons during May. Shipments exceeded production by 11,186 tons or 7 per cent. Production figures include 1,106 tons of hanging, of which 281 tons were made in Canada. The average daily production of news print paper by the mills reporting for May amounted to 88.3 per cent of the average daily output during the three months of greatest production in 1918."



The report says: "The comparisons for 1919 with 1918 are based upon the same identical mills. Production by the United States mills during the first five months of 1919 was 28,522 tons, or 7 per cent greater than during the same months in 1918. Canadian production during this period exceeded that of the same five months in 1918 by 17,779 tons, or 6 per cent, making the combined production of the 39 reporting companies 46,301 tons, or 6 per cent greater than in the first five months of 1918.

"The United States mills shipped 1,480 tons less and the Canadian mills 12,195 tons more in the first five months of 1919 than in the corresponding period of 1918.

"Stocks during May decreased 9,293 tons at United States mill points and 1,720 tons at Canadian mills, making total stocks 11,013 tons less on May 31, 1919, than on April 30. The total of 34,900 tons on hand at all mills May 31 amounted to 6½ days' production.

Obituary

FRANK ARMSTRONG, legislative correspondent for the Chicago Daily News, died suddenly June 20, in Springfield, Ill., of heart trouble. He kept busily filing wire reports up to within a few hours of his death. Mr. Armstrong was 46 years old and had been active as a newspaper reporter since boyhood. A wife and two children survive him.

Gov. Lowden and both Houses of the Legislature paid public tribute to Mr. Armstrong in learning of his death, as did the Chicago Daily News and the Herald & Examiner editorially.

FRANK J. WARG, editor of the Hawley (Pa.) Times, is dead.

HAROLD V. AUPPERLE, at one time managing editor of the Grand Junction (Colo.) Daily News and identified with newspapers in Denver and San Francisco, died June 20 in Western Siberia, where he was captain of the Red Cross in complete charge of its activities in that region. He was only 24 years old. During his college days he was captain of the Stanford University track team.

EDWARD H. BUTLER, JR., three-year-old son of the editor and publisher of the Buffalo (N. Y.) News, died June 20.

DAVID H. WALKER, newspaper writer and music critic, died in San Francisco recently. Mr. Walker had been active in the daily newspaper life of the city for more than 40 years, his principal work having been on the Morning Call and the Evening Bulletin, for which paper he edited children's pages that were read throughout the country. He also edited occasional financial pages. Among his more recent activities were his services in behalf of the Home Industry League and employment bureaus. He also was for some time connected with the California Development Board and was associated with the Chamber of Commerce journal.

MRS. SOPHIA C. DANAHY, mother of James Danahy, of the New York American's editorial staff, died June 19 in New York.

JOHN L. CONKLIN, at one time business manager of the Paterson (N. J.) Evening News, died in Paterson June 19, aged 71 years. For years he was a leader in Republican politics in Passaic County.

COL. JOHN SHEPLER, owner of the Lawton (Okla.) Constitution, died June 18. His father died June 13.

JOHN P. KENNEDY, an employee of the Minneapolis Journal for 10 years, died June 16 from injuries received June 14, when an automobile hit him. Mr. Kennedy, who was born in Manchester, N. H., in 1852, was formerly editor of the Lawrence (Mass.) American and the Mason City (Ia.) Times. He had been in Minneapolis 20 years.

COL. JOSIAH H. KELLOGG, oldest living member of the Press Club of Chicago, died June 20, aged 85 years. He was a veteran of the Civil War. Col. Kellogg is fondly remembered by many friends in the Chicago Press Club for his great booming voice, an unfailing good humor, inexhaustible and intimate little anecdotes. It was his daily practice for several years, at exactly 10 o'clock, to begin a dizzying walk—briskly always—of five miles round and round the four large billiard tables of the old Press Club building.

JOHN P. DRENNAN, principal owner, general manager and treasurer of the Decatur (Ill.) Review, died June 18 at Nevada, Mo. He was born in Mansfield, Ohio, September 6, 1861. In the early 80's, with his schoolboy friend in the printing business, William Metcalfe, Mr. Drennan started the Roodhouse Eye, a daily paper in a town of about 1,500. In 1888 "Jerry" Donahue became associated with Mr. Drennan in publishing the Eye. In August of that year they moved to Decatur and bought the interests of R. E. Pratt and A. C. Thompson in the Review.

DR. JARVIS R. NORTON, founder of the Homeopathic Eye, Ear and Throat Journal, died in New York, June 18.

WALTER E. SMALLEY, a copy editor on the Philadelphia Inquirer and at one time news editor of the Detroit Free Press, died recently of pneumonia in the Pennsylvania Hospital, Philadelphia.

Picturesque Canadian Dead

OTTAWA, Ont., June 24.—The recent death at Toronto of Alexander Whyte Wright, aged 71, removed a picturesque figure of the passing generation. He was a labor leader, organizer for the Conservative party, a participant in the Fenian raid episode, a reporter and afterwards editor, and a well-known campaign speaker. Mr. Wright toured the United States in the interests of McKinley and Great Britain in the elections prior to the ascension of King George.

Investigating P. O. Complaints

TROY, N. Y., June 25.—Consideration of protests received in large numbers from patrons of the rural free delivery system of the Post Office is under way by Postal Inspectors, who have established headquarters in Troy. They say they will not leave until their investigation is fully completed and a report made to their department. The Record has printed some of the most striking complaints.

SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE "A. B. C."

Newspapers and Publications

The total membership was shown to be 1,303 which includes the newspapers and publications—"ready for preliminary inspection."

The treasurer's report attested by Arthur Young & Co., Certified Public Accountant, showed receipts for the year of $270,025.52 with disbursements for all purposes of $263,090.36.

The cost balance as of April 30, 1919, was shown as $41,486.62.

The balance sheet shows furniture and fixtures as $5,948.89 and U. S. Liberty Bonds of $15,000.

The following section was added to Article I of the By-Laws as printed on pages 8 and 41 of EDITOR & PUBLISHER for June 5:

"Each report issued to members shall embrace verified figures and facts bearing on the quantity, quality, distribution of circulation and circulation methods; thereby enabling quality as well as quantity to be established. Facts, without opinion, to be reported."

The paragraph in Article 3, Section 7, covering a morning and evening edition was amended to read:

Additional By-Law Changes

"A morning and evening edition of the same publication can be admitted under one membership and pay dues on combined distribution, if all foreign advertising in both editions is sold only as a unit. If not, each edition will be regarded as a separate member and pay dues separately, based on gross distribution."

Section 8, Article 3, was amended to read:

"Two or more publications (except daily newspapers) published under one ownership, cannot be admitted to the Audit Bureau of Circulations under one membership, based on their combined circulation, but membership must be taken out for each publication, except when all advertising in such publications is sold only as a unit."

An extra Section No. 13 was added to Article 3, reading:

"When, in the judgment of the board of directors, the regular dues from the members are producing a surplus larger than necessary for actual working capital, they may order a discount on quarterly bills, to apply to all members alike."

Addition was made to Section 3, Article 4, reading:

"Provided, however, that such member shall have the right to appear at the next general meeting of the Bureau and show cause why he should be reinstated, said reinstatement requiring a two-thirds vote of all members present."

An extra paragraph making Section 2 was added to Article 10:

"Amendments may be proposed by any Sectional Division. All such amendments shall be submitted to the board of directors, which shall report the amendment to the convention, together with the result of their action."

Mr. Clague and Officers Thanked

Following the adoption of the revised by-laws in the afternoon session Friday, Chairman Davis, of the Resolutions Committee rendered his report on the six different resolutions proposed by the departments.

These included a resolution of thanks to Mr. Clague, the officers and directors for able work during the past year and was as follows:

"Whereas, the annual report of the board of directors is the best and most satisfactory report ever presented to the annual meeting of this Bureau, it shows faithful and efficient work and deep interest on the part of the officers and directors,

"Therefore Be It Resolved, That the thanks of the members of the Audit Bureau be extended to Stanley Clague, Managing Director, who has rendered such sincere and unselfish service in promoting the best welfare of the Bureau and its various members, and that all officers and directors likewise receive the thanks of the convention."

Other resolutions included a recommendation as to the advisability of universal military training which was referred to the board without being read; a resolution that hereafter circulation figures be omitted in publishers' reports to the post office on the grounds of being misleading and unnecessary.

This was tabled as being based upon a fallacious premise and, moreover, as being wholly outside the province of the A. B. C. to regulate.

Consider Monthly Bulletin

A fourth resolution recommended to the board of directors that an official bulletin be hereafter issued monthly, informing members of changes in the rules, new members admitted to the bureau and such other matter as might prove of general interest. This was referred to the board of directors for further consideration.

The following three resolutions from the farm paper group all were referred to the board of directors for subsequent decision:

"Moved, whereas the Audit Bureau has now been in existence for five years and most of the present members have been in the bureau for more than two years, therefore be it resolved that the A. B. C. require that when an audit has been brought out certain facts with regard to circulation getting methods, that the publisher be required to continue to keep records so that this information shall be available in his future statements and audits.

"Moved and seconded that it is the sense of this meeting that the standard form on farm papers be so changed that the paragraph under the heading of 'Mail Subscriptions' individuals include: 1. The portion of the total secured through the aid of premiums. 2. Portion secured through contests. 3. Portions secured through sheet writers or 100 per cent commission men and also clubbers.—4. Proportion of the total that is in arrears from three to nine months.

"Moved, that the publisher members may have the right to show what have been their total cash receipts from subscriptions for the period covered by this statement or report. Were these cash receipts banked regularly for verification?

The convention closed with the annual banquet on the roof of the La Salle Hotel. The members were the guests of the advertising council of the Chicago Association of Commerce. About 600 were present. The entertainment was spirited and consisted of singing by the Council Glee Club of 60 voices and

QUOTING PRICES IN BOOK REVIEWS

THE contention of the Post Office Department that, under the zone law, book reviews in which prices are stated must be classified as advertising is, obviously, not a sound one. The New York publishers are fully justified in opposing such a ruling, and should fight it, if necessary, in the courts. No newspaper or other publication receives pay for book reviews. They are written and published, wholly at the expense of the newspaper, solely in the line of service to the reader.

There could never be any question seriously raised as to the cultural value of book reviews. They are aimed not merely to afford routine information as to new books—for this may be accomplished entirely through the advertising columns; but their purpose is to afford a critical valuation of such books. This is properly within the province of any newspaper.

If the Department shall be permitted to enforce, without a fight, such a ruling it will lead to endless confusion in newspaper offices. If officials of the postal establishment are to be allowed to decide as to what is and what is not advertising in a newspaper, the business of publishing will be gravely menaced. The Bourne law provides that advertising appearing in the news columns, or in the textual guise of reading matter, shall be designated as such by the use of the word "advertising."

The zone postal law requires that a tax shall be paid, in the way of additional postage, on all advertising in a publication. Common sense application of that law requires that the definitive line shall be plainly drawn.

The present attitude of the Department looks to an inevitable postal censorship over reading matter, based upon some official's judgment as to whether certain news, reviews or other reading matter contains an element of advertising. As a matter of fact it very often happens that in telling the news, or in giving necessary and useful information, somebody or something is advertised—incidentally, of course, but inevitably.

Trade newspapers, in the course of printing the absolutely legitimate trade news, are compelled to give facts and include references to men and commodities which, therefore, have an element of advertising in them. A drastic application of such an interpretation as is now proposed would serve to classify as advertising a great volume of useful, helpful and strictly ethical trade news.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER does not contend that the publication of prices in book reviews is a good business policy for newspapers. As a matter of fact the practice is a costly one. But, if editors believe that the price of a book should be stated in a review, solely for the convenience of the reader, they are wholly within their rights in following that policy.

Just now the War Department is carrying forward an admirable campaign of paid advertising for recruits. Realizing the news value, and the vital interests involved in this campaign, editors are getting and printing the news about it, and editorial writers are urging upon young men the advantages of army training. If, in such news or editorials, the amount of the army wage is mentioned—as it has been in hundreds of instances—then such matter would be classed, under the new ruling, as advertising and would carry the postage penalty thereby imposed.

There should be an end to such nonsense. The underlying principle of the present postal law is bad enough. No petty interpretations of its provisions by administrative officials should be permitted. The publishers should carry their fight, if necessary, to the highest court in the land.

COL. RAYMOND ROBINS, head of the Red Cross Mission to Russia, is considered by some people to be an extreme radical. But when he says, "If America is to meet the menace of the Soviet it will have to be done through a serving State, a serving Church and a serving economic order," most men will applaud the sentiment as eminently sound and conservative. Our democracy is based upon precisely that ideal. To the extent that we fail to make it a living thing we fail to measure up to our political creed.

"KEEP IT OUT OF THE NEWSPAPERS!"

THE Bridgeport Post, in editorially chastening a critic who contended that the newspapers were responsible for the present social unrest because of their habit of publishing complaints of bad service by so-called public service corporations, says:

"To carry the thought to its logical conclusion, the newspapers are responsible for the recent war in Europe; for, if they had not printed stories about it, nobody would have known that there was a war and, consequently, nobody would have fought."

Every offender against public policy, morals or law is anxious to "keep it out of the newspapers." If the newspapers tell about a thing, and public sentiment is aroused against that thing—or against the man or corporation responsible for the abuse—then the newspapers are, according to this reasoning, responsible for any uncomfortable results that may be visited upon the offender. Hence, the newspapers incite revolution, encourage resistance to the established schedule of things.

Every issue of a good newspaper prints items of news calculated to excite the public mind. Without such excitement we should soon lapse into a state of coma, content with all that is, resigned to the rule of greed and wrong. The newspaper which should fail to put on record the unpleasant events of daily life, or to turn the light on malefactors, would commit a daily offense against society.

GETTING THE BROADER VIEW

IT has been the practice at the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri to arrange for members of the faculty to spend their vacations —plus ample furlough—in newspaper work in foreign countries. One spent a year on the staff of the Mellbourne Evening Herald, another a year in Tokyo on the Japan Advertiser; others in China and on world tours.

Thus, this Missouri institution has proved the wisdom of the suggestion made in EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Ralph D. Blumenfeld, of the London Express, for an interchange of staff men between British and American newspapers, for short periods. The Missouri plan has had excellent results, greatly increasing the value of the training to be had there by aspiring newspapermen. It is to be hoped that Mr. Blumenfeld's idea may find acceptance both in Britain and the United States and that its obvious value may be demonstrated in actual practice.

REGIONAL or territorial advertising campaigns are practicable only through newspapers. And such campaigns are essential to manufacturers who are not ready to undertake nation-wide distribution. When they are ready, the newspapers still afford to them the only fully effective channels through which to localize their advertising and tie it up with dealer-identity.

IF the American people wanted newspapers without advertisements they would get them. They don't get them.

THE PYRAMID MAKE-UP IN ADVERTISING

THE pyramid make-up of the advertising on a newspaper page gives to advertisers the best possible position advantage and the strongest reader-appeal. The old passion for "top of column next to reading matter" had its origin in the idea that advertising carried very little interest in itself—that it must be cleverly forced upon the attention of the reader through occupying a position which would, of necessity, catch the eye.

The progressive advertisers now realize that they must give to advertising an interest quite as compelling as that carried by the average run of text matter. They realize, too, that an attractive appearance in a newspaper page, taken as a whole, counts for more than mere "position." It is doubtful whether anybody nowadays ever reads an "ad" because of its position next to reading matter. It must have more than that to commend it to reader-attention.

It is important to both advertisers and newspapers that the bother and fuss growing out of the special position contracts should be eliminated; but the still more important consideration is in the protection by advertisers of the intrinsic value of good copy and of the news-interest centering in a group of well displayed "ads"—an interest which does not come from their position in contact with reading matter, but which is independent of such considerations.

Of course cover pages, and special positions in relation to departmental text matter are necessarily exempt from the pyramid make-up plan. Generally speaking, however, an advertisement placed on a page which presents an attractive typographical appearance and a good balance between text and advertising has a distinct advantage over one which is so placed that it impairs the balance and symmetry of a page, even though it should be at top of column and surrounded by reading matter.

MARLEN E. PEW

MARLEN E. PEW, the new editor and manager of the International News Service, is a good newspaper man and a good friend.

He has held, through twenty-four years of work for newspapers, undimmed vision and unshaken loyalty to ideals.

He has never ceased to believe that the newspaperman is a vital factor in the day-by-day work of safeguarding human liberties.

His public service, as head of the News Division of the War Department during the critical period of the war, will figure with significance in the great record. Historians of the press in the days to come will appraise it as due to the nation and to press freedom of that service.

As editor of EDITOR & PUBLISHER Mr. Pew has had the satisfaction of reaping the immediate appreciation of newspaper and advertising men for intelligent, zealous and highly constructive effort. He has won, in this organization, the affectionate friendship of all connected with it through his genuineness as a man and his ability as a craftsman.

Mr. Pew enters upon his new and important duties carrying with him the cordial good wishes of his associates here—friends who know his qualities of heart and head and his splendid equipment for constructive work.

THAT the congestion of store advertising in certain issues of daily newspapers should be eased through the adoption by merchants generally of a better balanced schedule of copy throughout the week is highly desirable—not alone to the newspapers, anxious to render the best service, but to the advertisers themselves. Abnormal shopping conditions result from abnormal advertising schedules. To give the people an impression that only on certain days of the week is it profitable for them to visit the big stores is to create a dangerous sentiment.

WHAT strides American newspapers have taken in the direction of material development since they first adopted the policy of advertising their advertising! That example is to be followed as an evolutionary suggestion to publishers in many of the Allied countries.

J. Thomas Lyons, service manager of the Baltimore Sun, was one of the orators of the occasion when a new State ferry line was opened last week connecting the eastern and western shores of Maryland.

George M. O'Neil has resigned as secretary of P. F. Collier & Son, Inc., to become assistant sales manager of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, New York. Mr. O'Neil has been in the publishing field for ten years.

L. A. Bishop, for the past year display advertising man for the Des Moines Register and Tribune, has resigned to become manager of Brinsmaid's retail store.

David Chapman and Howard Slocum have joined the advertising department of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star.

Ramon L. Hall will soon resume his position as advertising manager of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Garette, after service overseas. John Goetz, who was filling in during Mr. Hall's absence, will continue as assistant advertising manager.

HAS HELPED DEVELOP HIS FIRM FROM $250,000 TO $7,000,000

JOKESMITHS have had a lot of fun with correspondence schools, but O. A. Brock believes in them. He took two courses in advertising by correspondence, and now he is advertising manager of the Keystone Steel and Wire Company, of Peoria. In the eight years he has held that job he has seen the concern develop from a capitalization of $250,000 to $7,000,000.

O. A. Brock.

His first advertising work was done for the old Frank B. White agency in Chicago. Then he spent a year with Libby, McNeill & Libby's sales department and later was advertising manager for the United Woolen Mills Company, of Chicago, which operated a chain of tailoring stores through illinois and adjoining states.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

H. P. Lehmann has been made advertising manager of the Ely & Walker Dry Goods Company, St. Louis. He formerly was advertising manager for the W. C. Stribling Company, Fort Worth.

H. A. Merkel has been appointed advertising manager of the Racine Rubber Company, Racine, Wis.

R. P. Robertson, formerly national advertising manager of the Los Angeles Evening Express, is in charge of a new Seattle office, Post-Intelligencer building of the Baranger-Weaver Company, San Francisco.

S. N. Rosenstein is now in charge of advertising for the Art Metal Works, Jamestown, N. Y.

R. C. Mower has been appointed advertising manager of the Futurist Underwear Company, Chicago.

S. G. Hyde has been appointed advertising manager of the Buda Company, Harvey, Ill.

R. W. Canfield, late of the Rankin Agency, has been named advertising manager of the Pepsodent Company, Chicago.

Lewis E. Ryan, head of the Ryan Advertising Service, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has returned to his business duties from Winchester, Va., where he has been recuperating from influenza.

George N. Wallace has joined the production department of Hoyt's Service, New York, as account manager. Mr. Wallace was formerly associated with the Cheltenham Agency, which he left to become a member of the firm of Delamico, Wallace & Geller. At the outbreak of the war he withdrew from the firm and entered the Naval Service and was mustered out on May 4.

Webster Wagner has been appointed copy director of the Wales Advertising Company, New York, and J. H. Conesqu production manager. Edward H. Putnam is a new addition to the staff.

John J. Ward of the Frank Presbrey Company's staff, New York, is home from Army service in France.

H. L. Roth has severed his connection with the International Products Company and has joined the staff of Hoyt's Service, Inc., New York City, where he will be engaged in the commercial research and plan departments. Mr. Roth was previously in the statistical bureau of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and assistant advertising manager of the Industrial Finance Corporation.

versal Service), Truman Tally (New York Herald), L. P. Collins, the Boston Transcript, and the Christian Science Monitor. In addition the assistant correspondents on the staffs of these newspapers and news agencies are eligible to membership.

Associate membership is open to visiting representatives of American newspapers, publications and news agencies and occasional mail correspondents who are properly accredited. Full membership fee is £3 yearly and for associate membership the fee are £1.

There is no doubt that the association will result in a closer union of newspaper interests and the American men who present British news to the U. S. A. public show in this admirable co-operative movement a large-mindedness and singleness of purpose that cannot be otherwise than to the good of all.

"Tanks" Inventor as Publicity Officer

The retirement of Major-General E. D. Swinton, C. B., D. S. O., R. E., from the control of the Publicity Department of the Demobilization Department of the Ministry of Labor recalls the fact that this distinguished officer was the first military man to conceive the tanks as a fighting weapon.

He was also the first official "Eye-Witness"—telling the British public what it was thought fit they should know of the war conditions at the front, and performed his duties with complete success as far as the limitations permitted, from the battle of the Marne in September, 1914, to July, 1915.

In his period of office as responsible for the publicity in connection with demobilization he swept aside all traditions and tackled the disturbing elements with a bold employment of display advertising that had the dual effect of informing the soldiers what the demobilization arrangements were and quieting the impatient who believed that the machinery of British army routine could be taken to pieces with a screw-hammer in an hour.

The new Publicity Controller appointed in General Swinton's place is Captain E. J. C. Chapman, M. C., with headquarters at 8 Richmond Terrace, Whitehall.

Northcliffe's $2,500 for Staff Ideas

Viscount Northcliffe last month offered prizes amounting to five hundred pounds to the members of the staff associated with the Daily Mail, Evening News and Weekly Dispatch for the best suggestions for the improvement of either of those papers or their production methods. In characteristic fashion, Lord Northcliffe insisted that all ideas submitted should be signed only with a nom-de-plume and be placed in sealed envelopes. It was a generous impulse, well-calculated to inspire every member of the Carmelite House staffs and likely to be productive of interesting and valuable results. And still there are some who wonder why Lord Northcliffe is a giant among publishers!

Belfast Telegraph Speeding-Up News

The Belfast Telegraph is the first paper in Ulster to adopt the Creed System of high speed telegraphy. By this system matter handed in at the London office of the paper and prepared by machines which perforate Morse characters in type, is transmitted over the wire by automatic means, and reproduced in the Belfast office by an instrument known as the Creed Receiver.

It is then passed into another instrument, the Creed Printer, which transcribes from Morse code into plain Roman letters. The receiver is capable (weather permitting and wire conditions favorable) of receiving messages at the rate of 200 words per minute, and the printer of turning it out at the rate of 120 words per minute.

By an ingenious device this slip is then gummed on sheets of paper, and is ready for the sub-editors. R. H. H. Baird, the managing director in London, sent through the first message from the Fleet street office, and it was received in Belfast by the Lord Mayor of the city and A. W. Stewart, the managing editor.

Advertising Volume Growing

The popularity of newspaper advertising is increasing beyond all expectations. A few months ago it was comparatively easy to secure space in any of the London dailies. Today it is almost a matter of waiting one's turn.

The Daily Mail is booked up for weeks ahead and each day's issue is the result of a juggling feat that pleases those who find themselves duly installed, but is not so satisfactory to those who endeavor at short notice to synchronize their London advertising with their provincial campaigns, though the Mail is essentially studious and sympathetic.

But it has not yet adopted elastic pages. The Daily News, the Daily Express, the Evening News, the Daily Telegraph, and the Times show the same prosperity and are increasing in favor with those advertisers who plump for the newspapers.

The special feature pages which some of these papers run—the Daily Express has been giving a special Saturday music page, the Evening News and the Star have been conducting movies pages—the former as a weekly feature—and book pages) have been highly successful in their appeal to advertisers.

Merchants' Column Popular

The Galveston News devotes a double space half column or so each Monday, Wednesday and Saturday to paragraphs of interesting and timely topics on advertising. It is called "The Merchants' Column." New ideas in advertising are discussed and suggestions made for advertising in attractive ways. Little stories or sketches are related and some clever idea, evolved by someone, has been used successful in advertising, is explained. Altogether it is a good feature and one that the readers of the News enjoy and look for each week.

Lewis Secretary of Collier's

Fred Lewis, who has been with the Collier organization for nine years, during the last two of which he has been comptroller of the company, has been made secretary of P. F. Collier & Son, Inc., New York. Mark Huntington Witeman has been appointed assistant to the vice-president and manager of the department of publicity and promotion. Charles Colebaugh has been placed in charge of the advertising department promotion.

ADVERTISE TO FIND THEIR MARKETS

Secretary Sullivan Tells A. B. C. Members What Factors Influence National Advertisers in Selecting Media—Matter of Plain Business

One of the features of the Friday morning session of the A. B. C. convention at Chicago was the address of John Sullivan, Secretary-Treasurer of the Association of National Advertisers. Mr. Sullivan said:

"As you know, I work for, and represent here, an association of nearly three hundred of the largest advertisers in the United States, who are spending around $100,000,000 a year through their advertising departments.

"The association is not an advertising association in the ordinarily accepted sense. It is an association of manufacturers who advertise. There is, as you will readily see, a distinct difference in those definitions.

"We, therefore, know nothing of what is frequently termed an 'advertising cause,' the 'cause' being that of the increase of volume of advertising. Essentially we are not concerned whether, within the next year, there are published billions of lines of advertising or none at all.

"What we do care is that, through the mediums they use, our manufacturers find markets in which to sell their products at the lowest possible percentage of cost. They want media of such excellence in their standing with their subscribers that they can reach their markets economically and effectively.

"These manufacturers are not tied down to the use of any particular class of medium, any more than they are to any special type or description of salesman. If, through inefficiency in the general conduct of their business publications fail to provide a suitable audience for the manufacturer's advertising message, then the manufacturer can, and must, turn to the use of other media which will enable him to reach his markets economically and effectively; even as he refuses further to employ one salesman who is too expensive because of his inefficiency, and takes on another salesman who can sell a large volume of goods at a reasonable, or necessary, percentage of cost.

Must Know Certain Facts

"In order to determine the value of a publication for his purpose, the manufacturer must have certain information about it, even as he must know certain facts about a salesman's character and ability before he can employ him.

"That is, of course, generally recognized today by publishers, and it may seem superfluous to mention it. But it accounts for the initial interest of the advertising manufacturer in the movement for circulation audits, and it accounts for the steady growth of interest in the A. B. C. on the part of the Association of National Advertisers. Now, the A. N. A. is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York. But in its past attitude towards the A. B. C. the association has been from Missouri. It certainly desired to be shown why it should place all its weight behind the A. B. C.

"The A. N. A. sat tight 'on the fence' for nearly three years. If it showed any particular interest—and it did—it was a critical interest.

"Then came a time when it got off the fence and strolled over to the edge of the sidewalk—to get a closer look at you.

"Seven months later it determined upon a still closer inspection, and the result was that the A. N. A. really found out how good you had become. Thereupon we performed an operation, so to speak, upon our habit of mind towards you. For nearly a year and a half we have been acquiring a new habit of mind, while still observing you closely.

To Rely Upon A. B. C. Service

"Finally, at our recent meeting in Cleveland, we first determined to abandon our own plan of auditing, which, though a perfectly good and workable plan, had never been in the least actively promoted, because of our desire to leave a fair field to the A. B. C.

"Then we adopted a resolution which expressed inferentially our confidence in the A. B. C., in its competency, and its worthiness to receive our exclusive endorsement.

"We crossed the Rubicon, not like Caesar, to dominate solely a great territory, but to meet you even more intimately and to march with you.

"In doing so we undertook a new responsibility—responsibility for you. And we ask you to march with us.

"Before we took the step we had acquired confidence in you, confidence that you would march with us as a wing of an army striving after economy and effectiveness in distribution in the United States, a field of business in which the United States is neither economical nor sufficiently effective.

"We have, I have said, assumed responsibility in taking this step, and, actually, our doing so throws a responsibility upon you. May we not ask that you do not, at any time, do anything, individually or collectively, to diminish or destroy our confidence in the Audit Bureau of Circulations."

Coal Industry Now Resorts to Newspaper Ads.

CHICAGO, June 20.—Newspaper advertising will be used extensively by the coal industry hereafter in an attempt to bring home to users of coal the need of early storage, the reasons for prices, the labor problem and other issues about which coal producers and distributors believe the public is misinformed.

This decision was reached by the National Coal Association after years of effort on the part of Amedee J. Casey, editor of the American Coal Journal, to convince members of the need of using the newspaper for fundamental purposes.

Mr. Casey says the coal situation is to acute that scarcity and higher prices are certain to stare us in the face soon. The only solution is to buy coal now, he says. To bring these facts home, individual coal operators will spend between $10,000 and $50,000 for newspaper advertising. The total amount will run into the hundreds of thousands.

star vaudeville acts from leading Chicago theatres.

Victor F. Lawson, proprietor of the Daily News, was the guest of honor.

Speaking began about 10 P. M. with L. B. Jones as toastmaster.

Governor S. R. McKelvie, of Nebraska, discussed "Americanism."

Harry F. Atwood delivered his famous address on the Constitution. His theme was—"The Antidote for Bolshevism."

Prof. Walter D. Scott enlivened the proceedings by taking issue on important fundamentals with Mr. Atwood and all in all it was a most enjoyable evening for next to the longest day in the year.

The revenue of this little State is over $11,000,000 a year.

West Virginia is Wonderful by any comparisons, as a seller and as a BUYER.

True it has only about 1,500,000 people, but they have a higher-than-average purchasing capacity. They have more money to spend than double their numbers in many of the more congested sections, and a first class willingness to lay down the cash for the things they want.

Why not tell them in their daily papers the merits and advantages of your goods and give them a chance to try for themselves. Remember that you are as far away from this territory by itself as it is from you!

Advertise in these papers, where a little appropriation will make you BIG business!

Jack Dillon's Assignment

Jack Dillon, who is known in retiering circles as "Jack the Giant Killer," owing to his long record of successes against leading heavyweights, was secured by the Universal Service the past week to box vigorous workouts with Willard and Dempsey. Out of these workouts, Dillon wrote a series of three articles—one on his go with Willard—the second on his workout with Dempsey—and the third analyizing the strength and weaknesses of the two pugilists and selecting the man whom he thought would win the big contest. He picked Dempsey to win on points.

Military Trial for Minor

COBLENZ, June 31.—A special military commission has been appointed to try Robert Minor, American newspaper correspondent and cartoonist, who is under arrest here.

MISS BOOTH TELLS OF THE WAR WORK OF SALVATION ARMY

"The War Romance of the Salvation Army" is the title of a humanly-interesting book written by Miss Evangeline Booth and Grace Livingston Hill, just published by Lippincott's.

With the simple ardor of a woman whose life has been a benefaction to humanity, and yet with striking eloquence, Miss Booth outlines the spirit of her army as it shone so brightly in the battle trenches. She pictures the self-sacrifice of the brave women of the organization who ministered to our fighting boys with the tenderness and affection of sisters. In all of this record of Christian service she sees but the application on the battlefields of the ministry of the Salvation Army as so long conducted among our poor in the cities.

CIRCULATION NOTES

Felix Davis, formerly with the New York American and the Atlanta Georgian and American, has been appointed assistant circulation manager of the McGraw-Hill publication, in New York.

William Elder, circulation manager of the Toronto Evening Telegram, has just completed forty years of service with that newspaper. His associate members of the International Circulation Managers' Association took the opportunity of honoring him on the occasion by electing Mr. Elder a member of their board of directors, at their recent twenty-first annual convention in Buffalo, N. Y. There is a no more popular man in the I. C. M. A. membership than William Elder, and his advice is eagerly sought, and readily given, on circulation problems at all I. C. M. A. gatherings.

WILLIAM ELDER

An Aerial Edition will mark the delivery of the Utica (N. Y.) Daily Press to subscribers in the Fulton Chain district of the Adirondack Mountain June 21, when more than 300 papers will be carried over an air line of fifty miles from Utica into the heart of the northern wilderness. The Aerial Edition will feature the entire day's circulation, but the papers carried in the plane will bear the stamp, "Aerial Delivery." The plan is the result of co-operative effort by the news, circulation and advertising departments of the Press.

The Des Moines Capital conducted a 3½-mile modified Marathon race through the streets of the city one day last week. W. E. Frevert of Iowa State College was the winner.

A perfect day, unprecedented crowds, skillful management and Riverview Park assisted the Des Moines Evening Tribune's Kiddie Klub to put over the biggest children's frolic and outing, that has even been witnessed in the city, June 19. It is estimated that 10,000 kiddies passed through the gates of Riverview during the day.

The Portland Oregonian, through its sports department, conducted a roller skating marathon for the boys of the city as a feature of the annual Rose Festival. For several years this has been an official feature of the Festival, attracting a large number of entrants.

The three newspapers of Towson, Md., county seat of Baltimore County, will issue large special editions on the Fourth of July in honor of a big home-coming demonstration to be held there.

The Easton (Pa.) Express will raise its price, June 30, from 1 cent to 2 cents. "Having done everything in our power to keep subscription rates at the old figures, we have learned by experience that it is impossible," the publishers announce.

John A. McNeil, for several years circulation manager for the Bridgeport (Conn.) Telegram and lately in charge of the same department for the new Evening Herald, has resigned. He has not announced his future plans, further than a somewhat extended vacation respite. C. S. Eddy, formerly of the advertising department of the Post, is temporarily filling Mr. McNeil's place.

Alec Pennig, mail room superintendent of the St. Paul Daily News, after two years' service in the A. E. F. has returned and taken up his old position.

The record of the I. C. M. A.'s recent meeting at Buffalo would be incomplete if EDITOR & PUBLISHER had not been able to print a picture of the man who endeared himself to everybody at that convention and tell how he did it. D. M. Treble, circulation manager of the Times, of Buffalo, had a program for the entertainment of the visitors which was so complete that it kept everybody stepping lively throughout the spare moments of the session. One surprise after another awaited the members, and the entertainments were so cleverly timed and managed that the party had little time during the recesses to dwell on thoughts of home and work to be done upon their return.

D. M. TREBLE.

The ladies of the party pronounced their visit one they will always remember with pleasure and were loud in their praises of Buffalo hospitality. Mr. Treble was unanimously elected a director of the I. C. M. A. just before the close of the session. He has demonstrated his qualifications as a manager and a hustler and his appointment to the board will add force and strength to the organization.

Sergt. Robert E. Mattice, formerly assistant circulation manager of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star, has returned from France and Germany. He had charge of the Treves branch of the Stars & Stripes.

The first delivery of the Kansas City Star by airplane was made June 21, when a thousand copies were delivered in Manhattan, Kans. The regular train schedule for this trip is four hours; the airplane time is less than two hours.

Miss Anna Ludgis, for several years in the circulation department of the Bridgeport Post, has gone over to the new Evening Herald as assistant to the circulation manager. She will succeed Mrs. Edythe M. Wildman-Langner.

Submission of Allies' final answer on peace terms to Germany brought forth Victory Edition, of 10 sections and 128 pages, from presses of Minneapolis Tribune, June 17.

Between 75 and 100 newsboys of Tulsa, Okla., are at Tahlequah for a ten-day outing.

Two hundred Wichita (Kan.) Eagle newsboys picnicked at Riverside Park, June 24, as the guests of the paper.

Paterson (N. J.) News Dealers' Association is considering a new price schedule for New York and Paterson daily and Sunday papers, as follows: Door delivery, New York daily, fifteen cents; Sunday, nine cents; local, daily, thirteen cents; Sunday, four cents.

Padgett With Detroit News

DETROIT, June 24.—Since his honorable discharge from the army as captain, Edward Riddle Padgett has been editing the Detroit Sunday News. The rotogravure section has been increased to eight full pages, the magazine and supplement section now appearing in convenient tabloid size. Mr. Padgett was Sunday editor of the Washington Star for nearly ten years. Prior to that he was Sunday editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer and city editor of the Louisville Post.

Students Learned Much

ATLANTA, Ga., June 24.—The Emory class in journalism returned to their college duties on the Oxford Campus after a strenuous day with the Constitution. The young men declared that they never knew before that editors and reporters are such nice and hospitable people and that they never before realized that it requires real work to write editorials and gather news.

DE FREEST VICE PRESIDENT OF OMEGA CHEMICAL CO.

After four years as advertising and sales manager of Ferd. T. Hopkins & Son, one of the oldest newspaper advertisers and manufacturers of "Gonraud's Oriental Cream" and other toilet articles, Charles R. De Freest has resigned to become vice-president of the Omega Chemical Company, also of New York. He was elected to his new position yesterday by the board of directors and will take up his new duties July 1.

C. R. DE FREEST.

De Freest is a young man who has devoted his whole life to advertising and sales work. He started with the old Circle Magazine and subsequently was with the Fourth Estate and was a member of the Whiting Special Agency firm, New York, prior to his Hopkins' connection.

Mr. De Freest has the best wishes of many friends for success in handling the affairs of "Omega Oil," "Cadum Ointment," "Birt's" Headwash, etc., all of which are widely known through advertising.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 20.—The 15th annual outing of the Providence Journal family was enjoyed by over 300 employees. The Junior Journal, so-called "Official medium of translating the Journal family," was published and a copy issued to each employee as he boarded an electric car for the outing grounds. The objects of the paper were "to promote idleness, encourage nonsense, foster impulses and engender repulses."

U. S. MUST ADVERTISE TO SOUTH AMERICA

ment for prompt payment could be effected.

"I therefore made arrangements with all the important publishers whereby American advertisers can secure local rates by paying their bills promptly through the local branches of American banks in South America.

"As regards other forms of advertising such as street cars, painted walls, bill boards, etc., which are widely used in many of the large South American cities, in their present shape I doubt if they are readily usable by an American advertiser.

Poor Agency Representation

There is need for more activity on the part of American advertising agencies in South America. None of our agencies has more than the barest nominal representation there, and while they have done some good work, and are well thought of by the publishers, they have not regarded the field as sufficiently promising or profitable to establish capable local points of contact.

"However, the last two years have produced a tremendously greater interest in all foreign sales propaganda, and with it the manufacture is asking his advertising agency for specific marketing and merchandising information about South America.

"As a result of this, the American advertising agent is setting about the task of securing information that will eventually enable him to render some such the same service abroad as at home.

"Possibly the most significant development along this line is the very ambitious plan recently inaugurated by a group of some of the largest advertising agencies, who have formed a separate corporation to act as United States representatives for Latin American publications and other media.

"I understand that this corporation will provide not only a placing and copy service, but, what is most important, a market survey service as well. This is but one of the significant changes that are taking place before our eyes as we are gradually coming to fit ourselves for the opportunities of foreign trade.

Few Native Agencies

"At present there are no advertising agencies anywhere in South America except in Buenos Aires, where their work is purely local in character. They have neither the training nor the ability to render the intensive and highly complex services required of a modern American advertising agency.

"They have partially met the demands that have been made on them but these demands were very simple ones.

"We have passed the point for employing advertising in a perfunctory way in Latin America, and the advertising agency that will render a foreign service at all commensurate with his domestic service will be a highly important factor. He will be one of the indispensable links in the merchandising chain that will uncover the markets, determine the media, and devise the copy appeal to use.

What Kind of "Copy"?

"What kind of copy shall we use in reaching the Latin Americans? is a common question. It seems to me that we have been floundering between two extremes. On the one hand are the advertisers who assume that a translation or translate their American copy literally by merely putting it into Spanish or Portuguese.

"On the other hand are those who tell us that South Americans have no point in common with us and that therefore an entirely new type of advertising must be devised as though they had nothing they came from Mars and saw everything upside down.

"Personally, I don't think the job is either as simple or as difficult as these two extremes make it out to be. A literal translation of American advertising into Spanish or Portuguese is nearly always ineffective and sometimes absolutely misleading, because it is impossible to render our idioms exactly into another language and make them understood as the writer understood them.

"Even if idioms are not used to any great extent, an exact translation is unfortunate. Just where the spirit of the original is lost and in translation it becomes weak and unnatural.

"Taking the other extremist—the one who thinks Latin Americans walk on their heads instead of their feet—the "bogey" he uses is the phrase "they are different." He is right, they are different. But, how different, and in what way? That's what we want to know.

A Few Suggestions

"Here are a few suggestions I would make with the idea that on them we can adapt and modify our American copy appeals so as to be effective with Latin Americans. Their language is different, and whether we use Spanish or Portuguese, it should, if possible, be written by one of their own people.

"By that, I mean that a Brazilian should write for Brazilians, an Argentine for Argentinians, a Cuban for Cubans, and so on. He should be given as much latitude as the man who conceived the original idea in English, because his is the task of adapting that idea into the language of his own people so as to have it reach them in the easiest and most effective way.

"He should have a sufficient knowledge of the English language, and of our habits of thought, to be able to grasp the basic idea that lies behind the advertising as it is originally presented in English, and then he should be left free as possible to "put it over" with his own people. He knows the customs, the habits of thought, and the little everyday habits of his own people just as we know ours.

National Characteristics

"He knows the little-big differences that climate produces in people, and he knows these things automatically and without consciously thinking about them at all.

"If he is writing to an Argentine, he will know that neither languid senoritas nor moth-eaten bull fighters will make any personal appeal to them, while if he is writing for Peruvians he is aware that the toreador and the bull ring are still national features.

"He will never under any circumstances encourage a campaign to sell overcoats along the coast of Brazil, nor breakfast foods in Peru, lawn mowers in Chile or Palm Beach clothes in Buenos Aires in July, which is the middle of the winter there.

Educating the Dealer

"We need to educate the dealer more, and supply him with helps which are not provided by European exporters. This is an American idea also, just as are practical demonstrations of merchandise, and showing a dealer how to conduct his store along more modern and profitable lines.

"The South American retailer won't take to these things over night because his training and traditions are all against it, but he can see that these things will bring him more business, the idea will win with him, provided it is presented persistently and tactfully.

"The South American importer and merchant, by the way, is seldom if ever a native South American, but nearly always a Spaniard, Italian, Englishman, German or other European.

Register Your Trade Marks!

"Regarding trade-marks, register your trade-mark before you enter South American markets, not afterwards, and have it registered in your own name and not in the name of your agent or representative.

"Long continued use of a mark has nothing whatever to do with the ownership of it anywhere in South America. The man who registers it first owns it and can prevent you from using your own mark. In some Latin American countries it is not even necessary for the one registering it to ever make any use of it, and it is not an uncommon practice to make a business of registering foreign trade-marks with the sole purpose of "holding up" the owner later on.

"Even if you have no representation, and think you never will have, if you send any goods there through commission houses, register your mark just the same. The day may come when you will need it and when it may cost you $50,000 to buy it back, instead of the $50 it may cost you today.

Are Friendly Toward U. S.

Just a word about the attitude of South America toward us, and I'm through. All in all, it is one of distinct friendliness toward us, and in certain countries, notably Brazil and Uruguay, the feeling of friendliness toward us is particularly marked. There is no suspicion of us as the great Colossus of the north ready to take advantage of them and gobble them up when opportunity offers.

"Generally speaking, their people are not any better acquainted with us and our conditions than we are with them. However, the last five years has seen increased travel between the two continents, and the better acquaintance that travel provokes will have its results in better trade relations and better understanding between the two peoples.

"Our entrance into the war was something that brought us to their notice as something more than a geographical

GREAT GAINS IN AD VOLUME IN MAY

Figures Show Big Growth Over Last Year in 18 Cities—Of 88 Newspapers Only One Recorded Loss

The tremendous gains in advertising volume made by the leading newspapers of the country are summarized in a bulletin issued by the Statistical Department of the New York Evening Post, covering the lines carried in the months of May of last year and of the present year.

The figures listed cover 88 newspapers, published in 18 cities. The fact that but one newspaper in the entire list showed a loss is considered remarkable, while the total volume of gain is full assurance that the forecasts made, early in the year, by EDITOR & PUBLISHER are certain to be more than realized.

It has been, indeed, a banner year for newspaper advertising. One large agency informs EDITOR & PUBLISHER that, during the first five months of 1919, the entire volume of business placed in 1918 had been exceeded.

The statistics for 18 cities are given herewith:

	1919.	1918.
New York	13,678,840	8,774,424	3,304,416 Gain
Birmingham	2,207,704	1,342,500	765,204 Gain

spot, and the second event of significance was the coming into the South American field of the Associated Press and the United Press. Previous to their arrival we were best known as the country that had lynchings, train robberies, scandals in high life, and municipal graft. Bad news travels fast, and that was all they heard about us.

Improved Press Service

"When these two great press associations arrived in the field, they proceeded to put us on the front pages every day with real news, and not merely the sensational occourrences of the day.

"All this has happened in two years, and today an American can pick up his paper nearly anywhere in South America, and if he can read Spanish or Portuguese, he will find there all the important news items of his own country, side by side with those of England, France, Spain and Italy.

"It isn't until one has been in strange countries speaking strange tongues that one realizes what splendid makers of good will these two press associations have been. They deserve the gratitude of every American who is proud of his country and wants to have the truth about it known."

SEE NO EARLY REPEAL OF ZONE LAW

Republican Members of Congress Who Have Pledged Their Aid to Publishers Are Swamped by Other Emergency Legislation

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The decision of the Republicans in the House to enact legislation repealing the Postal Zone Law has encountered such a serious obstacle that it does not now appear likely that Congress will take such action in the immediate future, certainly not before July 1, when another cycle of the increased rates becomes operative.

Members of the Ways and Means Committee declared today that the question has not been considered, and that in view of the fact that the committee has just started extended hearings on tariff measures it is not likely that the zone rates will have an inning for some weeks.

Will Push Legislation

Majority Leader Mondell announced a few weeks ago that the postal zone repeal would be taken up as a party measure as companion legislation to the repeal of the excess profits taxes. He stated definitely that the Republicans were convinced of the inequity of the zone law and that they would push the legislation on the ground that the man in California and Texas had just as much right to obtain both reading matter and advertisements at the same cost as the man in the East, the publication center of the leading papers and periodicals.

Since Mr. Mondell made his reassuring statement a variety of circumstances have appeared to render his course more difficult, the most powerful of which is the financial condition of the Government. Treasury officials have made it clear that the Government is going to require every cent of revenue promised under existing law and must find ways and means of raising additional funds.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has the definite statement of majority members of the Ways and Means Committee that Congress will have to go "very slowly indeed" in the matter of repealing any part of the tax law and that it is not at all unlikely that instead of passing such measures the Senate and House may find themselves forced to provide additional revenues to meet expenses of the fiscal year beginning July 1.

May Have to Leave Law

Into this situation the repeal of the postal zone law has been thrown with the probability now dawning that the Republicans instead of killing the zone rates may be forced to leave them on the statute books and let the Democrats continue to take the blame for having enacted them.

Postmaster General Burleson is keeping in close touch with the situation and is prepared to wage a fight to the bitter end should repealing legislation take form.

Republican leaders themselves are said to be convinced that a direct return to the old rate of a cent a pound is not possible. They believe there should be some flat increase in the rates, but just how much of an increase they are unable to say at this time. Their fight will be directed against the zone system.

It is a matter of regret to members opposed to the principle of the zone law that the question of postal charges has been linked with that of revenues, such a matter having been an essential one for handling by the post office committees instead of the revenue raising bodies of Congress.

The second-class rates should have been handled by the post office committees and never allowed to become part of a revenue bill, but that fact does not alter the existing conditions, and it is with these which the publishers must contend.

The situation now may be epitomized as one in which an improper principle must give way to the financial needs of the Government.

EXHIBIT OF FASHION IN GAY PAREE

Col. House's Newspaper Dinner Array Gives Warning That "Stay-at-Homes" Must "Spruce-Up" When Peace Reporters Come Back

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

PARIS, June 10.—The Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune scored a distinct beat when it reported exclusively and with a fine eye to detail a luncheon party given to American newspapermen in Paris by Col. E. M. House. It was a fine bit of journalistic enterprise, showing that the Tribune is staffed, even 4,000 miles from its natural habitat, to handle the most exacting assignments.

Incidentally, too, the Tribune in this "beat" gives a "close-up" of many well known journalists as they appear in Paris, the fashion capital of the world.

The feature story referred to follows in full under the heading:

IF JOSEPH HAD ONLY BEEN THERE, NEWSPAPER PARTY WOULD HAVE BEEN JAKE

The patient Col. House, court of last resort for American newspapermen in France, entertained the bloodhounds of the press Saturday at luncheon at the Hotel Crillon. There was a generous response.

The modest Colonel, representing the administration and various other insitutions of peace and plenty, was attired in Texas black. No such restrictions, however, governed the attire of his guests, and since what the Colonel speaks is never written, one must fall back upon the costumes of those present for a truly brilliant picture of yesterday's event. Thus we have:

Here They Are

THOMAS M JOHNSON, New York Evening Sun—Gorgeous in the first ice-cream suit of the season. Neat collar effect of white.

J. CARLISLE MACDONALD, New York Herald—Ravishing neck piece of canary gold, offset with blue serge suit of recent cut.

FRED FERGUSON, United Press—Overcut pumps of tan; soft hose; indented serge of some dark color, pinch back effect; cane.

LINCOLN STEFFENS, At Large—Soviet van dyke; clothed in deep thought and humble robes of indulgence.

PAUL SCOTT MOWRER, Chicago Daily News—Impressive stick pin, gloves to match. Pepper and salt effect cheviot.

CHARLES THOMPSON, Associated Press —Army shoes; tight fitting street suit of not over gentle brown; fetching hat of straw.

That "Biled" Shirt

RICHARD (DICK) OULAHAN, New York Times—White "boiled" shirt open neck effect; loose slung drapes of sack design.

FRED MOORE, New York Tribune— Oriental garb, suggestive of Far East. American turban. Stepover shoes; cigarette holder inlaid.

CLINTON GILBERT, Philadelphia Evening Ledger (as if it made any difference whether it was morning or evening). Noisy walking suit, street car blue.

CHARLES SELDEN, New York Times— Ministerial black; white tie ending in clerical bow. High shoes, lacing up the front.

LAWRENCE HILL, New York Sun—Immaculate in white collars and cuffs, domestic finish. Flowing tie of Republican red.

HAROLD STOKES, New York Evening Post—See G. O. on Regulation dress for Lieutenants—or is it Majors?

HAROLD BICHTAL, Newspaper Enterprise Association—Athletic tone to his nifty outfit, held in place by inch-wide black belt.

JAY HAYDEN, Detroit News—Flivver proof vestment of Belle Isle blue. Trouser cuffs. Turned down collar buttoning in front.

In Golden Brown

JOHN PARKINSON, International News Service—Radiant in golden brown. Gold cuff links; Park Row cut to receding civilian Twentieth Century attire. Brisbane buttons.

WILLIAM G. SHEPHERD, Everybodys— (Note; if you are the Shepherd that's mixed up our race track tickets, will you please lay off. S. L.).

G. C. HICKOK, Brooklyn Eagle— Queens County three button afternoon jumper, with pearl grey trousers. Black tie. Tan shoes.

RAY STANNARD BAKER, wore little George Creel's mantle, which is much too small. Hello Ray!

Chairs were turned down for Herbert Bayard Swope of Mr. Pulitzer's publication (deleted) and Hank Wales of the W.G.N.

The ladies—God bless 'em—were represented by Mrs. Fannie Fern Andrews, U. S. Bureau of Education, and Mrs. John Wilson, of Ye Baltimore Sun. A pleasant time was had by all.

Lawson Succeeds Flenner

BOISE, Idaho, June 21.—Guy Flenner, one of the pioneer newspaper men of Idaho, has retired, after 31 years' active service. He resigns as managing editor of the Capital News. Mr. Flenner recently organized the Idaho Press Bureau, of which he is the directing head. H. A. Lawson, political writer, becomes managing editor of the Capital News.

Priest as Labor Arbitrator

OTTAWA, ONT., June 24.—Interesting evidence about relations existing between a paper manufacturing concern and its employes was recently heard by the Industrial Relations Commission at Grand Mere, Que. George Calhoon, Jr., president of the Laurentide Company, the parish priest and a number of employes told how all labor questions were arbitrated by the priest. The workers declared they were quite satisfied with the situation and that they do not want any labor organizers around the place.

Bingham Estate Not Delinquent

LEXINGTON, Ky., June 21.—County Judge Kreiger gave an opinion to-day that the estate of Mrs. Robert W. Bingham, late owner of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, is not delinquent in payment of inheritance tax in Kentucky. The decision virtually knocks out the suit by which Walter Byars, revenue agent, sought to collect an inheritance tax of $4,537.48 on an estimated valuation of the estate of $99,584,806.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Wants a Formula

Editor & Publisher:

This letter is occasioned by your story in the June 12 number of the "nefarious"—I think you called it—publicity connected with the army recruitment campaign. For the last year, I have been in charge of the University of Idaho Press Service (Moscow) and have met on all sides the w. k. feeling of righteous indignation experienced by every honest editor when he gets press agent stuff.

Our problem is this: We find that the University has access to large number of experts in various lines and a large amount of information that would be valuable to the citizens of the state if they were told how to get it. The best way to get this information available, we feel, is via the newspaper. In other words we consider ourselves publicity seekers and not press agents, if we succeed in helping the people of the state to keep in touch with the things that will be helpful to them we will, we feel, have done our work.

In order to repay the editors for making their papers educational mediums, we send out considerable localized and general news. That our stuff has value is indicated by the fact that it is widely copied in the middle West and the east. Two stories have found their way into the Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune.

Now this is where I want your advice. Can you give me a formula that will remove the "press agent" stigma?—considered as press agent stuff become it comes through the mail? Can you tell me how it should be opened, if it comes in my place?

Any other information you could give me will be considered appreciated.

Yours truly,
R. D. JAMISON,
Wallace (Idaho) Press Times.

Editor & Publisher:

Far be it from me to take any credit from our good friends, the Mount Vernon Argus. They are entitled to all they can get and a whole lot more besides, for producing such a fine building. We hope they get rich—and stay longer.

But the Argus is not the only one whose home is a model of its kind in the world, which I say in between New York and Bridgeport on the line. That is, when I'm not at home. Poughkeepsie Star, midway between New York and Albany, "on the north" has had a fine new 32 page Hoe press for more than a year now.

Georgians Plan Meeting in Monroe July 14-16

Patterson, O'Shaughnessy and Brown Among Prominent Speakers—Much Interest in Linotype Contest.

COMMERCE, Ga., June 24.—The Georgia Press Association will meet at Monroe, Walton County, on July 14 to 16. President Harber and his committee have provided for a specially attractive and profitable program.

The Place of the Rural Press in American Journalism" is the big theme to be handled by Wright A. Patterson, president of the Western Newspaper Union.

"National and Foreign Advertising" will be the subject of a talk from James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the American Association of Advertising agencies; J. W. Brown, of Enrow & Franzsines, New York, is expected, also, to be present. Mrs. Edith O. Keefe Susong, vice-president of the Middle Tennessee Editors' League, will also be a speaker.

Last year's success of the contest conducted by the Mergenthaler Linotype Company has prompted a repetition of the competition this year. Cash prizes amounting to enough to practically meet the expense of a few weeks' vacation for the editor have been offered for the weekly and semi-weekly papers not connected with daily publications, which submit the most attractive editions printed from linotype matter.

A number of Georgia's newspaper men of the weekly, semi-weekly and small daily press recently organized the Select Newspaper Association. This organization is for foreign advertising business getting only—and plans are afoot to keep a paid representative at work soliciting advertising for the Georgia paper-members all the year round.

Welcomed Home 82d Division

ATLANTA, Ga., June 24.—The special "82d Division Home-Coming Edition" of the Service Record, Atlanta's military weekly, published as a successor to "Trench and Camp," is a complete war record of that organization. Eighty-two pages and a three-color cover make up the issue.

LENINE TO THROW OUT CORRESPONDENTS

Head of Bolshevists Declares They Are "Liars and Fakers," Says Frank J. Taylor, United Press Correspondent, Just Home

The Russian Bolshevists have issued a manifesto ordering that all American newspaper correspondents coming into the country be jailed or thrown out until the United States makes peace with Russia; also Dictator Lenine says all foreign newspaper men are liars and he considers himself "too good" to be seen by any of them.

FRANK J. TAYLOR.

These are just some items of information on affairs in Russia told to EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Frank J. Taylor, staff correspondent of the United Press, who arrived from Europe this week on his way back to his old home in Los Angeles. When he gets a good rest, Mr. Taylor is to be attached to the headquarters staff of the United Press in New York.

Went with First A. E. F. Troops

Mr. Taylor went abroad as a U. P. correspondent with the first A. E. F. troops and saw service on the various fronts where American soldiers were engaged. When the armistice was signed he went into Germany and visited Berlin and Weimar. In May he managed to become a member of a group of Russian prisoners of war that were being exchanged by Germany, got into Russia and worked his way through the land of the Bolsheviki to Moscow.

Mr. Taylor says all Russian newspapers are communist sheets. The Soviet government will not allow them to be anything else. When it came into control, it seized all the newspaper presses and divided the spoils for printing newspapers and printing money. Very little news gets into Russia, he says, and practically little of anything is printed except "Red" propaganda. A paper can be owned by no private individual or political party.

The conditions in Russia are not disorderly, as the average outsider believes, Mr. Taylor says. Instead, the order maintained everywhere is astounding, being kept so by tyrannical rule. Local tribunals of three officials, or so, have the say on all things, passing sentence on all violations of rules from murder to the slightest offence, and what they say goes.

People cannot buy or sell, all stores being boarded up. They must wait for distribution of supplies, and this amounts to very little, but they must be satisfied. Nor can a person travel, except on official business. To go from one place to another it is necessary to find an official excuse to procure authorization, which covers where a person must sleep, eat and go while he is away.

Quitting a job is treason, and owning anything of value is absolutely forbidden. "The money system is a race between the printing presses and the value, with the latter steadily decreasing," said Mr. Taylor.

It isn't at all necessary to be able to speak Russian to get along there, Mr. Taylor says his knowledge of German, French and English was sufficient for him to learn all he wanted. The guards on the trains all speak German. The trains likewise are splendid sources of news information, for the Russians are strong for arguing, and miss no opportunities to express themselves on all questions, big and little, loudly enough for all to hear, when they go traveling.

Robbed of All Belongings

When he had seen enough of Russia and turned his way homeward, Mr. Taylor had his roughest experience. He started for Berlin by way of Finland, and when he arrived at the border was held up by a Bolshevist guard, in charge of a youngster not more than seventeen years old. He refused to let Taylor pass, and threatened to send him back. However, after much arguing, he was allowed to go, but not until he was subjected to the most searching examination that could ever be conceived and robbed by the soldiers of everything of value in his possession, except a few worthless Russian rubles.

Mr. Taylor says the Russians honestly believe the whole world is in a state of revolution and that they are leading the world to salvation.

The newspapers of Germany are the least independent of any country in the world, except Russia, in Mr. Taylor's opinion. The result of the war hasn't changed them a bit, they are the same old Government organs as of yore. He says there has been no question in Germany but that the treaty would be signed, but that reports of opposition coming to the United States have been really propaganda spread by the old regime government press.

Sunday "Newsless" in Norway

CHRISTIANIA, June 24.—Publication of newspapers in Norway on Sundays and holidays is forbidden henceforth by royal decree.

PRESS CENSORSHIP FAILS IN VANCOUVER

to work by the International at Indianapolis, after the publishers had presented the case.

There is a curious conflict of charges as to the responsibility for the strike. It is plain enough that the strike started when, on Saturday morning, June 14, the members of the Sun chapel took exception to an editorial intended for publication that day. They issued an ultimatum that it be withdrawn, or that they would quit. They quit. It was then that the publishers notified the International, and that orders came from Indianapolis for the men to resume work immediately. This order was sent to one Jordan, late president of the Vancouver local. He failed to deliver the message, or, at any rate, President Yoshill of the union claims he did not receive the order of the International.

Refused to Handle Ads

Tuesday, June 17, members of the Province and the World chapels refused to handle certain advertisements intended for publication by returned soldiers and a citizen's organization dealing with the strike situation, contending that they were detrimental to the interests of organized labor. The Province refused to submit, and the typos on that paper walked out. The World rejected one advertisement and modified another and remained alone in the field. The International was again appealed to, and the Sun and Province resumed publication the next day. The Sun editorial which had been objected to was then published.

It has been stated here that the publishers would seek redress for their losses incurred through a five-days' tie-up from the International Typographical Union. In such event it is believed that their participating in the anti-union coercion will be held jointly liable as violators of existing agreements between the Vancouver publishers and the I. T. U., whereunder sympathetic strikes and censorship by the union are registered as illegal. The situation as it stands today is that the publishers have dictated the terms of peace, included in which is the demand that the offending resolution as passed by the typos' local union be expunged from the records.

McCARTHY MADE CITY EDITOR

Other Changes Also on Staff of Corpus Christi Caller

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX., June 24.—Dennis McCarthy, formerly of the San Antonio Evening News, has been appointed city editor of the Daily Caller, to succeed Honore L. Comette, resigned. Frank L. Savage, formerly of the Kelly Field Eagle, has become staff correspondent.

Additions to the advertising staff include Frank H. Scott, formerly of the Miami Record-Herald, and F. C. Simpson, just returned from overseas service. Miss Jeannette Howard has been appointed secretary to Frank B. Harrison, general manager.

St. Louis Discusses A. A. C. W. Plans

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 24.—A special convention meeting of the Advertising Club of St. Louis was held today, when plans for sending a big delegation to the New Orleans convention of the Associated clubs were discussed. This was the last luncheon meeting of the summer, adjournment having been taken until the last Tuesday in August.

Burke Buys Two Elyria Papers

ELYRIA, Ohio, June 24.—John F. Burke, of Oberlin, has purchased the Telegram and Chronicle of this city from Perry S. Williams, who retires. Mr. Burke will consolidate the two papers within the next two weeks.

J. J. Otringer, telegraph editor on the Des Moines Tribune, has returned to his desk, after a serious illness covering nearly four months.

PENNSYLVANIA

a State of

Concentration and Condensation

	Population	Square Miles	Assessed Valuation
Arkansas New Mexico Colorado North Dakota Delaware Oregon Idaho South Dakota Montana Utah Nevada Wyoming	7,580,528	1,052,089	$6,329,134,158
Pennsylvania	8,798,067	45,126	$8,021,904,539

In putting over a merchandising campaign concentration and condensation are the things that really count.

Pennsylvania's possibilities in concentration and condensation are splendidly illustrated by the figures shown above. They bring out the fact that, with less than one twentieth the area to cover, Pennsylvania has MORE PEOPLE and MORE WEALTH than ALL of these states put together.

Less than one twentieth the expense and more possible customers.

The daily newspapers listed below reach the people in Pennsylvania and tell them, not only about your goods, but about your local representative—the home folks that they know, and who stand sponser to them for you and your product.

The use of these daily newspapers enlists these local dealers as enthusiastic salesmen for you—pushers of your products. It also enlists the local newspaper men—for it is only natural that newspaper publishers, like all other business men, look with favor upon their customers.

Modern salesmanship means concentration and condensation.

The net paid circulation of the Sunday edition of The New York Times is in excess of 500,000. The average net paid sale, daily and Sunday, exceeds the combined distribution of the three other New York morning newspapers popularly classed with The Times as to quality of circulation.

The New York Times, Wednesday, June 25, published 203 columns of advertisements, the greatest volume ever printed in a week day issue of a New York morning newspaper.

Business Men Believe in Signs

Digitized by Google

At their clubs and offices, even in their homes, "signs" are sought, studied, discussed. Men believe in them and act on them because "signs" are usually truthful indicators of the trend of affairs—business, political and social.

Here is a sign that deserves special study by men in the automobile, tire and accessory industries—a sign of broadening recognition by the leaders of this great business alliance of the principle that a compact and adequate market that is effectively reached at a single cost through one newspaper is susceptible of the highest and most economical development. This sign is in the display advertising score for Chicago newspapers for the month of May, 1919. In that period automobile, tire and accessory manufacturers and dealers, local and national, placed more advertising in The Chicago Daily News than in any other six-day Chicago newspaper, and with a single exception more than in any other Chicago newspaper, morning or evening, daily or Sunday.

The Six-Day Figures Are:

		Total cost at minimum rate per line.
The Daily News	49,315 lines	$17,753.40
Post	46,983 "	5,637.96
Journal	24,952 "	4,366.60
Tribune	23,738 "	9,495.20
American	19,202 "	6,336.66
Herald-Examiner	10,752 "	3,333.12

Including Sundays (on which single day the leading newspaper printed nearly four times as much of this kind of advertising as on its six week days) The Daily News is in a very favorable second position, the score being as follows:

Tribune (Including Sundays)	112,019 lines	Herald-Examiner (Including Sundays)	43,133 lines
The Daily News	49,315 "	Journal	24,952 "
Post	46,983 "	American	19,202 "

Every line of the 49,315 lines printed by The Daily News was paid for at the full rate. No "trade deals" or other considerations affected a single dollar of the total.

An Important Detail: In the first five months of 1919 The Daily News showed a greater gain in automobile, tire and accessory advertising than all of the other Chicago evening newspapers combined. During this period it printed more of this kind of advertising than both the morning newspapers combined, excluding Sunday editions. This is indeed a "sign" of the utmost importance, because it marks the acknowledgment by a class of seasoned advertisers of the inherent worth of great newspaper circulation when that circulation is concentrated upon so fertile and responsive a field as the Chicago market.

Contact—Breadth—Results

CONTACT. We have already told advertising men what a remarkable contact Associated Advertising has with the big buyers of space. In one issue of a large national publication there were thirty-two advertisers of automobiles, tires and accessories. Associated Advertising has points of contact with 96 4-5 per cent of these.

BREADTH. As an illustration of the breadth of this contact, let us point out that, in the case of one tire advertiser, who invests $1,500,000 a year in advertising, the contact was as follows: 1, the president of the company; 2, the advertising manager of the company; 3, the president of the advertising agency placing the business.

RESULTS. Results are, after all, what count: One advertiser carried a two-inch, ten-dollar advertisement, and after the first insertion "received three orders and three inquiries."

A full page advertiser in the June issue, within two weeks from date of publication "received 80 high-grade inquiries and one order."

What would you do with 80 voluntary inquiries?

These are some of the reasons why Associated Advertising has jumped from 32, to 48, to 56, to 64, pages in three months.

Circulation in excess of 15,000. Member A B C. Large Page, 8x10. $5 an inch, $150 a page. All advertisements next to reading matter. Wire your reservation today.

Influencing the dealer and the consumer is best brought about by regular advertising in Philadelphia's dominant newspaper.

Dealers stock and push articles that are strongly and regularly advertised; they don't pay much attention to the things that the public don't ask for.

Philadelphia's 392,000 dwellings and 18,000 manufacturing places comprise a big market that needs constant cultivation because it pays big dividends to the advertiser.

SOUTHERN PUBLISHERS TO MEET AS DIXIE'S GOLDEN AGE OF DEVELOPMENT DAWNS

Seventeenth Annual Convention at Asheville, July 7, 8 and 9, Finds Publishers of Southland Up and Doing, Progressive and Prosperous—Many New Members to Be Elected and Problems of Timely Importance to Be Discussed

THE Seventeenth Annual Convention of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association—one of the Big Three among the organizations of newspaper makers in the United States—will be held at Grove Park Inn, Asheville, N. C., July 7, 8 and 9.

The factors which count large in making this year's convention notable in importance are numerous. They have to do with the new chapters which the war and its aftermath are contributing to the history of nations.

The South, having borne her full share of the burden of service and sacrifice in the great task now so happily accomplished, finds herself confronted with an unprecedented opportunity for commercial and industrial expansion. She finds herself, indeed, entering upon an era of prosperity of which she had scarcely dreamed through the long years of patient reconstruction.

Her cities have become centers of trade, matching those of the Northern States or those of any land. Her soil yields new and amazing riches. The magic wand of world-need has caused to spring up within her States vast manufacturing industries. Her people are busily employed, at a wage rate hardly thought of a few years ago.

The South's New Wealth

Manufacturers everywhere turn now to the South as a potential market for every good product—a market long neglected yet now affording all of the alluring promise of a newly discovered empire of plenty.

The South's great staple, cotton, long her sole major asset, still brings to her a flood of wealth—a flood never so full and high as today. But she has found other sources of wealth scarcely less in value. She is developing, in the great Mississippi valley, an alluvial empire whose soil is a mine of unmatched richness— a development destined to play a mighty part in provisioning the families of the nation. She is raising tobacco and rice and wheat and corn on a larger scale than ever before. She is raising stock and utilizing her great timber resources in a big way. She is manufacturing almost everything that man needs, and selling her products not only at home but abroad.

Newspapers Coming into Their Own

Having met every test of service imposed upon them by the war, the South's newspapers have emerged into the new era greater and more prosperous than even their publishers hoped.

These newspapers—American to the core in profession and practice—have always held the confidence and full allegiance of their readers. They have always fought for the progress and development of their States. They have always exhibited a solidarity of purpose. Now they have come to the days of realization, when dreams of betterment and of full rewards for constructive effort are coming true.

So the members of the S. N. P. A. meet this year under conditions fitted to stir the hearts and minds of the most pessimistic—if, indeed, there is any pessimist left in the South.

FRANK G. BELL,
President Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association

Their newspapers have already responded to the new impulse which is remaking the world—the impulse to be up and doing that we may rebuild our shattered temples on foundations which shall endure. The editors of the South have caught the new vision. They will hold to the new faith which has come to mankind.

Additions to Membership

The S. N. P. A. at the Asheville convention, will elect many new members. This is a sign—unmistakable—of the representative character. Among the usefulness of the association and of its newspapers which will be admitted to membership are these:

The Richmond News-Leader, Palatka (Fla.) Post, Sumpter (S. C.) Item, Paris (Tex.) News, Americus (Ga.) Times-Recorder, Corpus Christi (Tex.) Caller, Columbia (Tenn.) Herald, Clarksville (Tenn.) Leaf-Chronicle, Greensboro (N. C.) Record, Greenwood (S. C.) Index-Journal, Kinston (N. C.) Free Press, Lake Charles (La.) American Press, Owensboro (Ky.) Inquirer, Orangeburg (S. C.) Times & Democrat, Orlandn (Fla.) Reporter-Star, Rock Hill (S. C.) Evening Herald, Shreveport (La.) Journal, and Memphis Press.

The election of the Memphis Press will make Tennessee one hundred per cent in membership. The grand total is 149 and still growing.

Some of the Problems for Discussion

The topics for discussion at the sessions of the convention include the following:

The matter of changing subscription rates for various zones, and the general subject of second-class postage and postal service.

Profit-sharing arrangements—have they proven beneficial?

Rates and scales for union labor—advances made since last meeting, bonuses paid, etc.

How many publishers are getting out their papers without union arrangements?

How many publishers have installed the Ludlow machine; have any successfully operated the new Mergenthaler Model 20, which sets type up to 36-point?

What is the street sale price of each paper represented? How many have advanced prices on street sales and on monthly and yearly subscriptions?

How many publishers have lost circulation since the war ended, and what steps have been taken to regain the loss?

How many members have suffered from inefficient wire and telephone service during the past year? What is the extent of the delays and how are newspapers effected?

How far do Southern newspapers go on co-operation. What is legitimate co-operation?

Is it legitimate for a newspaper to offer to supplement advertising in its columns by free space on billboards and in street cars?

What members refuse all medical advertising, and why?

It is also expected that there will be

FLOOD GATES OF GOLD ARE OPENED TO SOUTH AND PRODUCTS OF SOIL ASSURE PROSPERITY

Newspapers by their Leadership Prepared the People for their Responsibilities in the New Era of Plenty—Diversified Farming, Stock Raising and Dairying Have Revolutionized the Land Called Dixie

A DRIZZLING RAIN was falling; lights blazed through the haze of early night. A former vaudeville actor had just finished his "stunt," and a chorus of two hundred voices had taken up the tune of a rollicking marching song when a white-haired woman, erect standing and fair—daughter of another day—reached the rear of Atlanta's great auditorium and beckoned to a camp service man.

A few minutes later, with her head thrown back proudly, a mother smile on her lips and her eyes ablaze with the light of new youth, she made her way from the great regular Sunday concert and entertainment for men in the fighting service of the United States, with a private in the army of her country walking on either side of her.

One was a Yank from Massachusetts, the other a Wop from the East Side of New York. They were going home to dinner with this daughter of the real South—a daughter whose body had been racked by sobs under the sorrows of another war, the conflict of the States—stately, well dressed, tender and hospitable, symbolic of the land called Dixie as it is today.

"Old South" Is Gone

There is no "Old South." It is still, however, a land of hogs, hominy and calico, but the poverty that was once an accepted condition in certain wide areas has disappeared. The razor-back hog has given way to the pure-bred; the hominy no longer comes from the lightly scratched mountain patch of corn or the grain centers of the mid-West, but from the rich acres of the South's modern tractor-farmed lands; calico made from the South's own cotton is no longer shipped from New England to clothe her people, for the mills of the South are today making calico and better prints for the markets of the world.

Today the South is rich and on a three-century-old foundation of generosity and joy in living is building solid a worth-while empire within the nation. It is no longer a land of cotton, tobacco and cane alone, and an unusual thing about this is that the South is building from the land. Last year a million-dollar cattle parade, all pure-breds of the South, was a feature of the Tri-State Fair at Memphis.

The real awakening of the people of the nation to the possibilities in the South really began only ten years ago. The passing from a condition of reactionary conservatism to constructive progressivism has been rapid.

Constructive Progressivism

Only the best of the old traditions have been kept under the new order and in the construction of roads, better agricultural possibilities, development of water-power, the establishment of better trade relations with foreign countries, especially South America, industrial expansion and farm financing, the South is now setting a pace for the nation.

Newspapers as Educators

Cotton, the world's greatest textile material and the stabilizer of our international credits, which is money every day in the year that does not hide in secret places, is naturally the first crop of the South, but it no longer holds the fields alone. Diversified farming is rapidly becoming general and is playing a big part in the southward flow of wealth that has, it is said by authorities, trebled the per capita income in the last two years.

The educational work carried on by the Southern newspapers during the last quarter of a century had prepared the people to take full advantage of their opportunities when the States came into their own.

Great newspapers build great communities, and the newspapers of the South were in the front rank, forcing the new order of enterprise and development. They kept faith with the South at all times and are now sharing in one of the greatest harvests that has fallen to any section of this country.

Circulation is climbing steadily upward; each community is spending a proportionate fortune for local advertising; foreign advertisers are awakening to the purchasing power and possibilities of the empire that no longer slumbers, and newspapers like the people, are now in the buying market for the best the world has to offer.

Press Is Prospering

There has been no suspension of publication on the part of any daily member of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association within the past year.

Charles H. Allen
Second Vice-President S. N. P. A.

Three morning dailies, however, in the same period started the publication of evening editions that are coming up to the expectations of their owners and editors.

At least fifteen dailies have placed orders for larger presses, and a conservative estimate of the number of daily members of the S. N. P. A. that have installed or placed orders for additional Linotype and Intertype machines is placed at 50 per cent. A large percentage have also put in Monotypes and Ludlows.

The volume of local advertising has been phenomenal, and despite the big raise in the prices of everything else, advertisers will find that the newspapers of the South, taken as a whole, have increased their advertising rates less than 12 per cent.

Under the new order, news departments have been made over, news gathering facilities have been increased and

"BUYING POWER OF THE SOUTH NOW EQUALS ANY OTHER SECTION OF THE COUNTRY"

By James O'Shaughnessy, Executive Secretary American Association of Advertising Agencies

ADVERTISING is making greater strides and progress in the South than in any other part of the country. It is showing a higher percentage of increase. It is showing a better measure of desirable advancement.

In some essential respects the newspapers of the South are more modern than any other section of the country. The South had, at the time of the armistice, more latent advertising potentials than any other portion of the country.

During the war the subject of advertising was given a study by the people of the South which was not exceeded anywhere. The work on the loan campaigns in the South was attended by remarkably efficient advertising. The results on all the loans in that part of the country, as everyone remembers, were a continuing matter of agreeable surprise.

The support given by the newspapers of the South to the various war activities was such as to reflect over into the time of peace.

The buying power of the South was increased until it now equals any other section of the country.

Our survey and analysis of the buying power of markets, which has just been completed, reveals that the Southern states, taken as a whole, have as much money to spend per capita as the North Atlantic and New England states. The Southern cities are as desirable to the national advertiser from a standpoint of per capita buying power as cities of equal size in the north.

The question of colored population, for instance, does not bear the relation to the markets that it did before the war.

South has been levelled up as a market to the degree that it is not yet fully appreciated in other parts of the country. It is largely understood now, however, as is shown by the volume of national advertising running in the Southern newspapers.

In the matter of cleaning up their advertising columns the Southern newspapers are setting a splendid example. This is a strong indication of the spirit of fine enterprise which argues so much for the continuous growth of advertising volume in the South.

The advertising agencies which form the Southern Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies are well distributed over the South. These agencies have a proficient and modern equipment for creative service equal to every demand for the creation and development of advertising. The Southern manufacturer has the facilities of proficient agency service at his door. The South is full of potential advertisers. These are rapidly being brought to the surface by the Southern members of our association.

Judging by reeent progress it is fair to predict that the volumes of national advertising originating in the South will be multiplied within the next year. This will have an influence in attracting still more national advertising from other sections to the Southern territory.

The co-operation of the Southern publishers with our Southern members is a very encouraging sign to us. It has already reached a stage in sympathetic team work that has not been excelled in any other part of the country. This cannot have any other than a splendid effect on the volume of advertising going Southward.

The South has grown magnificently as a market for the national advertiser. It is now growing in an extremely promising way as a source of national advertising.

NATIONAL ADVERTISING GOING TO SOUTHERN NEWSPAPERS IN UNPRECEDENTED VOLUME

New York Agency Men and Special Representatives Analyze Causes Contributing to Present Development of Market Possibilities of South—Manufacturers Appreciate Significance of Industrial and Commercial Growth and Expansion.

THE present power of Southern newspapers as advertising media as generally recognized by advertising agencies in other sections of the country, and the South is being counted in on every national advertising campaign that these agencies inaugurate.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER presents here the

WALTER C. JOHNSON,
Secretary-Treasurer S. N. P. A.

views of advertising experts connected with some of the largest Eastern agencies, and also the opinions of men associated with special agencies, representing Southern newspapers in the Eastern field.

All these authorities are agreed that the Southern newspaper, along with the Southland, has come into its own, and is now enjoying, rightfully, the greatest period of prosperity in its history.

"We have placed more advertising business in the South in the last six months than we ever did before in the same period of time," said H. C. Brandau, of the George Batten Co., Inc. "It is high-class business, too. We are placing some advertising there that never went there before. The Southern newspapers are improving wonderfully. I should say that they were more lively."

"The newspapers all through the South have increased their advertising rates and that is one indication that they are doing a big business," said Frank J. Hartos, of N. W. Ayer & Son. "All the Southern papers are doing splendidly, and there is no sign of a slump, either."

"We wouldn't think of making up a campaign without going into the Southern papers, if there was any market at all for the commodity we were advertising," said Frank Arnold, of Frank Seaman, Inc. "The Southern newspapers are sharing in the general prosperity, proportionately, with newspapers in other parts of the country."

"The wonderful crops of the South this year makes that section of the country a rich field for newspaper advertising," said A. C. Smith, of Van Patten, Inc. "Texas, for instance, has a huge wheat crop, although she has never gone in very heavily for wheat before. Oklahoma has a $100,000,000 wheat crop. Georgia has a monster cotton crop. We are using lots of advertising space in the newspapers of these States, as well as in other parts of the South.

"Most of the advertising we are placing in the South is of auto-trucks. The good roads movement down there is helping the campaign immensely, and then, too, there is plenty of money there to buy trucks with."

Following are statements by Eastern representatives of newspapers in the South, analyzing conditions that are responsible for the prosperity of the press in that section of the country:

By J. T. BECKWITH,
S. C. Beckwith Special Agency

If national prosperity is at hand, I feel the South at this moment of her history is making a headway that is in keeping with her long cherished hopes, and in fulfillment of the promise of those who have understood her wonderful situation, who have examined her exhaustless resources, and predicted a growth that sooner or later must be away and beyond everything ever attained by any other section of America.

Show Huge Gains

This is not an idle dream. Every point of view justifies the thought. The past six months have broken all business records in the South and, being in the advertising business, I am in position to say with full knowledge that real progress and prosperity have set their seal upon the South, and is not only on hand, but there to stay.

Measured by the scope of that great barometer of business, National Advertising, there has come to the South a measure of general business that is not only gratifying, but unprecedented.

Among the newspapers we represent none have failed to show a gain of huge dimensions, varying from 90 per cent to 160 per cent increase in foreign advertising over the highest figures of record. When one considers the market offered by the Southern tier of States, the whole section fairly teeming with energy and commercial activity, and growing in population equally, if not more rapidly, than any other part of the country, according to the latest Government figures, is it any wonder that advertisers are falling over each other to invade this virgin soil?

When cities like Augusta, Ga., double in population; Birmingham with 255,000, an increase of 75,000 since the last census; Atlanta, over 240,000; New Orleans now beyond the 400,000 mark; Beaumont, Tex., the wide-awake, shipbuilding, oil and lumber town, where everything is in a hub-bub of beehive industry; Dallas with 175,000 population;

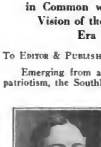
MARCELLUS E. FOSTER,
Member Executive Committee S. N. P. A.

El Paso, on the western border of this great State, with 85,000, one cannot fail to see the importance of the South's awakening; giving full credit to St. Louis, of over 800,000 population, feeding the great Southwest, and the real main artery which is pulsating with the same vigor of advancement, and its meaning to the national advertiser.

While it is true that general conditions are good all over the country, it is my positive belief that few, if any sections, begin to approach the South in actual improvement.

Prosperity Is General

Everything is prospering down there. The price of cotton and its subsidiary products have enriched the whole Southern section. The automobile now tracks the cotton fields of Georgia, and the Carolinas and Mississippi and Alabama, as it does the trucking section of New Jersey. The cities everywhere down there are driving ahead. The farmer's crops are promising and cotton has made him richer and happier than his hopes ever conjured.



There is no outlook from Maryland to Texas that is not blooming with the fullest measure of standard growth—a growth that has started, to stay started, and that makes the future loom up like

GOVERNOR W. P. HOBBY OF TEXAS OUTLINES REASONS FOR WAVE OF PROSPERITY

Himself a Newspaper Owner and Former Editor, the Chief Executive of "The Empire Commonwealth" of the South, Holds, in Common with Other Newspaper Makers, a Broad Vision of the Significance to the Nation of the New Era of Thrift and Plenty in Dixie

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

Emerging from a period of sacrifice, conservation, thrift, energy and patriotism, the Southland of which Texas is a component part, looks forward to the most remarkable development and the greatest prosperity it has ever known. In common with the people of the entire nation, the Southern people have profited by the restrictions that have been laid upon them in the demands made upon the food supply, have become more saving since they have responded to the financial requirements of the Government, and have learned how to produce more than was produced in the past. In all of this Texas has had its part, and today diversified crops, more intensive cultivation, thrift and saving, are actuating the five million of population within the borders of this empire commonwealth.

Gov. W. P. HOBBY

We are producing food and clothes, crude oil for the world, and raw materials for factories of all kinds, and within our borders factory products are being fashioned ready for the market. New people are coming among us, and we expect that we will have a full share in the increase of the natural wealth, and after we have been served with that which is due us for our energies and activities, that the added value to the first cost, will benefit those to whom we pass the products which originate with us.

But I would have you understand that we of the South do not covet isolation in the matter of Prosperity and Happiness. We feel that we are but an integral part of the forty-eight States in the Union, that each and every one is to have just the proportion of prosperity that it is entitled by virtue of its natural resources, and we are glad to see this come about.

Sincerely yours,
W. P. HOBBY,
Governor of Texas.

a rainbow of promise, and all this is not mere rhetoric and excessive speech. It is merely emphasizing what is already there in the living reality, existing in every State, county, town, village and hamlet.

because good times have come to stay in a section that at last possesses sufficient capital and an amazing amount of energy that will carry it forward for all time.

BY EDWARD S. CONE
Cone, Lorensen & Woodman

Never in the history of the newspaper and advertising business have conditions in the South been as good as they are now. Of course we all know the gains in foreign or national advertising are enormous. Our average gain in our Southern papers, and we only represent morning papers in the South, has been over 100 per cent for the first six months of 1919.

The reason for this is that the people in the South certainly have more money to spend at the present time than they ever had before, and they are spending it for luxuries and for necessities, for clothes, shoes, automobiles, talking machines—in fact everything.

Retail Stores Active

Take, for instance, New Orleans. The big retail stores there really only have one trouble, at the present time. That is to get the goods fast enough to supply the demands of their customers.

Everything produced in the South, cotton, corn, hogs, rice and everything else, are selling at the top price. Proportionate increases in wages in the South have been larger than in the North. Instead of seeing the old Southern darky with a mule and steer hitched to a broken-down wagon you will find him now driving his own automobile with mammy sitting in the back and piccaninnies all over the car.

Are Buying More Freely

The people of the South are buying today more freely than they ever did before. They have an advantage over us up North, inasmuch as it does not cost them near as much to live; that is, it does not cost them so much for rent and for food as it does the people in the Northern States; consequently they have a greater portion of their income to spend for pleasures and for luxuries. I have been spending the winter every winter for a great many years in New Orleans, and of course I have traveled all the South for 25 years. The remarkable thing to me in the prosperity of the South is the wonderful growth in population of the leading cities, and the number of Northern people and European who are now settling in New Orleans and the other Southern cities instead of (as they used to do) settling in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago.

No Vacant Farms

New Orleans today is the second seaport of the United States, New York City only leading it. It is almost impossible to find a good house for rent in any Southern city. Riding through the Southern country you will find practically no vacant farms, every bit of good land is being cultivated.

While the local retail business in the South today is 50 per cent better than it was a year ago, I believe it is only the start. I believe the increase in the South will reach up to 100 per cent in local retail business, and, of course, local retail advertising.

The Southern people are making the money and they are spending it. National advertisers know this, and of course the increases in national advertising are simply wonderful. The South today is a sure, profitable market for any well advertised goods of merit.

BY FRED A. MOTZ
John M. Branham Company

When you talk "South," you are talking of a section that has had unprecedented prosperity, a section that has been favored with everything that has been good. The South is today enjoying not only one of the best periods in its history, but probably one of the best periods ever enjoyed by any section of the country.

Cotton, one of its staple products, has been averaging over 33 cents a pound, and anybody who knows what cotton means to the South will easily understand the amount of money per capita that the Southern people have at the present time.

In former years they relied practically entirely on cotton when it was selling at one-third its present value. With its present high price and the additional fact that diversified crops have passed through the experimental stage and are one of the South's outstanding features, you can easily realize the wonderful prosperity of that section.

A New Era

Never before in the history of advertising have the Southern newspapers carried as much national advertising as they are at present. Foreign advertisers were quick to realize the condition of the Southern market and have taken full advantage of it. The local merchants, of course, being in close touch, have been taking advantage of it for some time with the result that practically every paper in the South has reached a point far beyond their earlier expectations.

CURTIS B. JOHNSON,
Member Executive Committee S. N. P. A.

There is no section of the country that has as much undeveloped natural resources as the South, and the past war has made the Southern people realize just what they have, and "God's Country" today, with its diversified crops, its wonderful price for cotton, and its new and fully awakened progressive spirit, makes it necessary for every business man to keep his eye carefully on the Southern market.

Port Cities Favored

Every port city in the South has been favored by the Government with millions of dollars of new shipping industries, new manufacturing pursuits, that will make it a permanently successful and prosperous section.

Take Mobile, for instance, wonderfully favored as it was by the shipbuilding industry. It has been doubly favored by the Steel Corporations building practically a new city right outside of Mobile.

The South has always had room to take care of these new developments and the big interests are now realizing fully that they have been overlooking a wonderful field in years past. The South with its present progressive spirit, is fully able to absorb its big measure of success.

The Texas Oil Fields

Every part of the South has been wonderfully favored. Take the State of Texas, for instance. Millions of dollars have been invested and millions of dollars made in its new oil fields.

W. D. SHOWALTER APPOINTED TO POSITION OF EDITOR OF EDITOR & PUBLISHER

New Honors for Experienced Craftsman Won through More than Three Years of Service as Managing Editor and Editorial Writer---John F. Redmond Succeeds to Managing Editorship---Plans for Larger Service.

By James Wright Brown.

It is indeed a pleasure for me to announce to our readers—our family circle—the appointment of W. D. Showalter to the position of Editor of Editor & Publisher.

Few men are so well equipped in experience and in successful administration in the fields of editing, publishing and advertising as Mr. Showalter. Leadership is an old story with him. For more than 20 years he has been suggesting ideas and fighting for right ideals in newspaper making and advertising with a vigor that few men possess.

Pioneer in Creative Work

In the course of a long newspaper experience he has originated and developed hundreds of constructive and sound promotion plans for newspapers and advertisers. The record will show that he was actually the pioneer in conceiving and creating what is now known as promotion advertising for newspapers. He fought for years to persuade publishers that the advertising of advertising was an essential in progressive management, and that this policy should be extended beyond the empty aim to sell more and more space—that, indeed, it should include campaigns of educational copy planned to develop reader-responsiveness to the advertising published in a newspaper. Mr. Showalter started writing copy on these lines 30 years ago, and has written more on the subject than any other man.

Among the many promotion ideas which he has originated, perhaps the most widely used has been the "Dollar Day" idea for clearance sales. He is perfectly satisfied never to have made a dollar himself through this idea, inasmuch as it has earned millions for the business men of the country and has also been of incalculable value to the newspapers which have promoted its use.

Champion of Constructive Policies

Mr. Showalter writes with clarity of thought and expression, breadth of vision, keen analytical insight, and real tolerance. As readers of Editor & Publisher know, he has helped, through his editorials and special articles, to keep the way straight, no matter how grave and difficult might be the problem under discussion. He has shown the error of insane local competition. He is to be credited in large measure with the new era of craft association and the trend and tendency to mutual helpfulness and co-operation in evidence on every hand. He has fought for a policy of liberal Government advertising, in and out of season; kept on the trait of the press agent and space grafter; helped to draw the line between "publicity" and advertising. He has worked for the development of the market unit idea in national advertising and for everything calculated to make newspaper space of greater service to those who use it in an advertising way.

He is a West Virginian by birth. Early in life he came under the newspaper tutelage of some powerful leaders of thought and action in our field—among them R. W. Patterson, then editor of the Chicago Tribune, and James W. Scott, publisher of the old Chicago Herald and an early president of the A. N. P. A. His first interest in the development of advertising on the broadest lines of usefulness was aroused through his many talks on the subject with Mr. Scott, for whom he was acting as promotion man.

W. D. SHOWALTER

Has Had Wide Experience

In 1891 he was called to the New York World by Ballard Smith, editor-in-chief, to serve as idea man for that paper. His work at that time attracted the favorable notice of Joseph Pulitzer, who urged him to remain with the paper after Mr. Smith's retirement. However, Mr. Showalter had received a flattering offer from George W. Turner to join the old Recorder staff as idea man, and he accepted. He remained with the Recorder for three years, acting for most of that time as city editor and originating hundreds of the ideas which made that newspaper famous.

When Mr. Hearst came to New York, he invited Mr. Showalter to join his forces as idea man and exchange editor. He remained in this position for seven years, and in the course of that time originated hundreds of feature ideas for the Hearst papers, some of them attracting wide attention.

Leaving the Hearst organization Mr. Showalter became editor of the early mail edition of the New York Herald for a time, but failing health intervened and he devoted several years to outdoor life, playing golf; and, incidentally, developing an advertising service for newspapers. Throughout his career he has devoted himself wholly to creative and constructive work.

Mr. Showalter joined the staff of Editor & Publisher in February, 1916, as editorial writer, accepting the position of managing editor in August of the same year. He is a loyal supporter of every principle for which Editor & Publisher stands, and his record of more than three years' service here is an assurance of what may be expected of him under his added responsibilities.

Promotion for Mr. Redmond

John F. Redmond, who has been news editor for some time, succeeds Mr. Showalter as managing editor. Mr. Redmond's whole life has been devoted to this field, and his knowledge of it, and of the men and factors in it, is wide and thorough. His work as news editor has stamped him as a newspaper man of signal gifts, and his energy and initiative particularly fit him for the work to which he is now called.

Dan F. Miller, who is an all 'round newspaper man of wide experience, and who has done much good work for Editor & Publisher, becomes news editor, and Ben Mellon will devote himself to feature work. Both Mr. Miller and Mr Mellon know the field practically, and fit in admirably with an organization which has gained the reputation, through actual performance, of achieving large, worth-while results.

Plans for Future

What the Editor & Publisher organization has achieved in the past, through the consecrated devotion to an ideal of a body of earnest men, is but an indication, in a limited way, of plans for helpful service to its clientele which have been matured and which are to be inaugurated in the fall. To measure up to the opportunities for the development of newspapers and advertising, which have been created by unprecedented events in the life of the nation and of the world, calls for new effort, new enthusiasm, clear vision.

"A measure pressed down and running over" is the standard of service fixed for Editor & Publisher.

MONDELL STARTS WAR ON ZONE LAW

Republican Leader of House Assures "Editor and Publisher" That His Repeal Bill Will Get Prompt Attention from Congress

(By Telegraph)

Washington, D. C., July 2.—Representative Frank Mondell of Wyoming, Republican leader in the House, assured Editor & Publisher today that his bill for repeal of the postal zone laws will be considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House early next week and that it probably will be before the House itself for consideration within two weeks.

"I hope to get the bill considered by the Ways and Means Committee soon after the Fourth of July recess," Mr. Mondell said, "and it probably will be considered in the House soon after the prohibition enforcement and alien deportation legislation is disposed of.

"I believe the Zone Law will be repealed because it is another of those emergency measures that should be repealed during peace times.

"The argument that the bill should stay in force because it will provide more revenue for the Government is erroneous, I believe. The former system, it seems to me, will provide more, mainly because of the many difficulties in collecting the postal charges under the zone system.

"I have been assured that many Democrats will support the repealer despite the attitude of former Democratic Leader Kitchin, whose efforts were largely responsible for the zone system.

"Because other war-time postal rates have been repealed we will try to pass this legislation as soon as possible."

Representative Kitchin is confident that he will have the support, not only of Democrats, but of many Republicans, and it is assured that Postmaster-General Burleson will make a hot fight against the Mondell Bill.

Senator Smoot of Utah will champion the repealer in the Senate in an effort to obtain early action upon it.

Lemuel E. Quigg Dead

Lemuel Eli Quigg, former newspaper man, member of Congress and for years a well-known political figure in New York, died July 1 in New York of Bright's disease. He was born in Cecil county, Maryland, in 1863, and in his youth was the editor of a newspaper in Montana. Mr. Quigg came to New York and held a similar post for a time in the employ of the Flushing Times. From 1892 until 1893 he was an editorial writer and political reporter for the New York Tribune, which he left to enter politics.

Plans have been completed for the construction of a rubber tire plant at Birmingham at a cost of $1,000,000.

SOUTH'S PAPERS BUY NEW EQUIPMENT

Enlarged Mechanical Facilities Indicate New Era in Publishing Business in Dixie—Several New Newspaper Homes Under Way

The growth and prosperity of Southern newspapers are shown impressively

WALTER G. BRYAN.
Member Executive Committee S. N. P. A.

by the great amount of new mechanical equipment installed during the past year.

Many members of the S. N. P. A. have found the old facilities entirely inadequate to take care of increased production, and have secured new and bigger presses, additional type-setting machinery and stereotyping equipment.

The record of purchases since the date of the 1918 convention, shown in part below, is an indication of the strong trend toward better production facilities and better and more economical output.

Anniston Star—Duplex tubular press.

Atlanta Journal—Four Linotypes, one Monotype

Augusta Herald—Two Model 14 Linotypes.

Albany Herald—Model 8 Linotype, seven-column casting box.

A FREE PRESS THE FIRST LINE OF DEFENSE FOR THE WORLD'S DEMOCRACIES

Great Principle, Safeguarding Human Rights, Always in Conflict With Ruling Classes and Special Interests—Popular Governments Still Adhere to Secret Processes in Conduct of Public Business

By W. D. SHOWALTER

FREEDOM of the press, the corner-stone of the structure of American democracy, was at first rejected by the builders. The states were asked to ratify a constitution which made no provision for safeguarding the freedom of petition, speech, assembly, religion or the press. The people of our young Republic realized that, unless these were included, the great adventure in nation-making was doomed to failure. So they insisted that they should be included in the fundamental plan, be made a part of the basic law—and they became living things through constitutional amendment.

The builders of the Federation of States appear not to have been eager to embrace and to proclaim press freedom. Few of our rulers have held in their hearts and minds an actual fighting loyalty to the principle. There are not many Kings, Presidents or Premiers in the world to-day who support press freedom except in the abstract. They consider it a high ideal, to be attained literally in some state of society of the far future, when the rule of human passions shall have been ended.

The friends of press freedom have always been on the defensive. They have had to fight to preserve it under the assaults of autocracy, both in monarchies and in republics—to shield it from extinction at the hands of statesmen and bureaucrats. In this respect it has shared the perils of the democratic idea in all ages. Democracy is never so gravely endangered as in the house of its pretended apostles.

Press freedom in America, while always subject to some extent to limitations set upon it by its declared advocates, has been the mightiest force for progress in our national life. It has been abused, of course—but not more by those who would interpret it as license than by those who would set upon it undemocratic restrictions.

To-day, still fighting its age-old foes, it is the main source from which springs government of and by and for the people—the hope of those who scorn shackles, of those who wish to live in the light. It is the despair of politicians—a whip made of fiery thongs with which intrigue and corruption are scourged.

There are not many men in public life who can endure criticism with patience—for criticism of the acts and policies of public servants affords the only protection against usurpation of power. Unjust criticism never, in the end, injures a public official—it reacts upon its author; while constructive criticism, however it may wound personal pride, never fails to benefit its subject.

So we have in America a Free Press—Limited. In some of our states it is limited by unjust libel laws. In every community it is limited to some degree through selfish interests. The Congress of the United States adheres to the great principle only in part—for we continue to have "executive sessions," in which the business of the people is conducted in the dark.

Plausible excuses are advanced in support of secret processes of legislating. The press itself has mistakenly conceded, through nonresistance, the validity of these arguments. Entering upon the new day of the world's life, setting a period after the story that is told of the long night of struggle toward the sun, the free peoples of the world face the problem of how to make a free press free indeed.

To an extent greater than that of any other phase of human effort, carrying private profit to those engaged in it, the business of newspaper making is the people's concern. The independence of our newspapers is not a private matter. Their freedom from sinister control, either by a party, by public officials or by private interests is fundamental in a democracy.

It may be said, without exaggeration or prejudice, that the newspapers of America as a whole measure up to the lofty standards demanded by our citizenship.

No newspaper may prosper, or attain influence and prestige, unless it is consecrated to the service of the people. Our newspapers meet that test.

In America we have a larger number of great newspapers than is to be found in any other country. Yet not one of our newspapers has won power and profits of the enduring kind except through high service to the people. That is the heartening fact. That is the message we would send to our kinsmen of the press in other nations.

Only a press in which the people have faith could have awakened in our people a sense of the world's peril in the great war. Only a press to which an enlightened people turn for information and guidance could have mobilized the power of the great Republic in the darkest days of the world's life, and have made it the decisive factor in the battle of Armageddon.

An American free press, imposing upon itself a reasonable censorship, moulded the American love of freedom into a resistless weapon which, wielded in the cause of righteousness on the desolated fields of a sister Republic, broke and destroyed the assault of barbarism upon the free peoples.

The task remaining to our press—of safeguarding the fruits of the awful struggle that is ended, of restoring to us the boon of peaceful lives, of bringing to our people the sense of the new sun that is in our skies—is to paint a new rainbow of promise that paints for us the glory of an attainable national ideal—that task will not be shirked.

SOUTH KNOWS POWER OF ADVERTISING

Success of National Campaigns for Southern Products Has Taught Section to Believe in Printed Words as a Building Factor

The South believes in advertising, and its belief is founded upon returns and results that it has witnessed. This belief is not confined to its advertisements, but carries with it an interest and trust in the advertisements of others. This is reflected in the things the people of the South are buying.

A realization of the power of advertising was first driven home to the people by the successful campaigns of the various fruit growers' associations, Southern resorts, popularized brands of Southern grown tobacco, Tobasco Sauce, Coco Cola and a few other products of the South. Trust in advertisements was greatly increased, however, about 12 years ago when the business of the lumber industry of the South had reached low ebb and was given new life by national campaign advertising.

Lumbermen Big Advertisers

At this period the entire lumber industry of the country was practically at a standstill. The nation-wide advertising campaigns of manufacturers of wood substitutes was partly blamed. It was about this time that C. L. Williams, a Chicago advertising man, read an article on the red gum lumber of the Mississippi valley and became so impressed with the advertising possibilities of the claims made that he took the matter up with some of the larger gum lumber companies. His suggestions finally resulted in the calling of a meeting of the gum lumber men at Memphis, the organization of the Gum Lumber Manufacturers' Association and the launching of a national direct-to-the-people advertising campaign. The campaign was a success and the cypress, pine and manufacturers of other woods shortly afterward organized and opened campaigns for reviving the lagging business of the entire lumber industry of the South.

The Gum Lumber Manufacturers' Association and the American Oak Manufacturers' Association have been amalgamated. The name of the newer organization is the American Hardwood Manufacturers' Association and its activities are going to be felt in the rebuilding of Europe.

During the recent State convention of the Texas Advertising League, held in Dallas, city advertising was one of the principal topics discussed. One speaker advocated cities of 150,000 population spending $1,000,000, smaller cities proportionately, if they wished to present their claims to strangers in a manner that would bring results.

The Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce immediately took the matter under consideration and has completed a campaign for an additional $150,000 for their yearly budget. Twenty per cent of the amount, or $30,000, will be spent in newspaper and magazine advertising. Dallas is now raising a fund for like work.

The largest single city advertising campaign under consideration in the South is that of Jacksonville. Plans of the Chamber of Commerce, Real Estate Board and Rotary Club to spend $100,000 a year for five years for advertising, have been approved by 300 representative citizens. These are only a few examples and proof of the South's belief in advertising and the reason for it.

The South has 420 daily newspapers and 2,785 weeklies out of a total of 3,789 publications.

SOUTHERN PAPERS IN THE A. B. C.

Forty-Six Per Cent of Them Are Members—A Fine Showing

IN the A. N. A. office a few days ago we made an examination of the proportion of papers furnishing A. B. C. audits to the total number of daily newspapers in the various territorial divisions of the country. The divisions of states were Western, Southern, Central, Northwestern, Southwestern, Middle Atlantic and New England, New York and New Jersey.

It was somewhat of a surprise to find that the proportion of Southern daily newspapers that furnish A. B. C. audits was 46 per cent—6 per cent higher than the New England, New York and New Jersey section, and 24 per cent higher than the Southwestern section, the lowest in the scale.

The total number of newspapers taken into calculation was 1,631, and the total of A. B. C. membership papers was 611, the number shown in the last printed list of the A. B. C. membership.

This is certainly a good showing for the South, and is evidence of the fact, as a newspaper representative said the other day, that Southern newspaper publishers have been aggressive.

AUDITS OF NATIONAL MARKETING

THE figures given in the foregoing paragraph are not of mere academic or mathematical interest. As has been said before, the interest of the national advertiser in the work of the Audit Bureau of Circulations is first, last and all the time dictated by an essential concern in the economical and effective marketing of manufactured products.

It is this concern that makes national advertisers anxious for the success of the circulation audit movement, in which the A. B. C. is the principal operating factor.

The more complete and accurate the facts concerning circulation and distribution furnished by a newspaper, the more likely are the advertising plans of the national advertiser to be sound, and, therefore, effective. If this is true of one newspaper, or of the newspapers in one city, it is no less true in connection with all the newspapers in a marketing territory.

If there should be a doubt as to the possibilities of economical and effective marketing through newspaper advertising in two divisions of the country, other things being equal, it can readily be seen that a division in which 46 per cent of the total available newspaper information is furnished on the basis of the thorough and exhaustive audit of the A. B. C. is likely to be more acceptable and convincing to a prospective advertiser than one in which only 22 per cent of the possible information is available.

Of course, 46 per cent is something to brag about only in comparison. In itself, it is a very low figure. But in the face of necessity—assuming that there is necessity for an advertiser to use any particular medium—even as half a loaf is better than nothing, a territory that furnishes 46 per cent of necessary data is to be preferred to one that furnishes 22 per cent, 28 per cent, and 30 per cent.

It should really be the concern of newspapers that are already furnishing A. B. C. audits to see that their prospective territories furnish as close as possible to 100 per cent of information concerning circulation and distribution.

MEDICAL ADS IN THE SOUTH

THE forthcoming convention of Southern publishers at Asheville, N. C., suggests drawing attention to one form of advertising in which publications in the South are generally supposed to distinguish themselves—medical advertising.

An examination made in the A. N. A. offices not very long ago showed that in one week newspapers in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia carried 3,461 medical advertisements—passable, debatable, or bad. The average number of objectionable ads appearing in these Southern States' newspapers for one week was 346, and the average per paper 46.

Contrasting nine Northern States with these ten Southern States, the number of medical advertisements appearing in the Northern States' newspapers in one week was 4,026. The average per State was 447, and the average per paper was 32.

These figures do not seem to justify the traditional belief that a much greater quantity of medical advertisements is carried in Southern newspapers than in Northern newspapers. Owing, however, to peculiar population conditions in the South, some of the medical advertising carried there may charitably be said to be of a more brazen character than in the North.

Among the most objectionable types of ads are those that are calculated to lead Negroes to suppose that they can make their black skins light, or take the kink out of their woolly hair.

Whether the religious papers published in the South compare as favorably with those in the North, I am not in position to say, not having examined the two classes of publications thoroughly. The general supposition is that Southern religious papers reek with medical advertisements. Certainly, out of a mass of Southern religious papers examined in the A. N. A. offices only one publication could be given a clean slate. Out of forty-three advertisements carried in that publication, not one was of an objectionable character.

On the other hand, there was one publication that carried forty-six advertisements, thirty-three of which were of a conspicuous type of fake remedy, guaranteeing to effect positive cures of ailments that have for years puzzled the most skilful physicians.

A few publications carried but one advertisement that could be called objectionable. Many carried an average of twelve questionable advertisements out of an average total of twenty-nine published.

The advertisements included everything from eczema to tuberculosis cures.

DIFFERENTIATION VS. UNIFORMITY

THAT title is correct enough; it would be difficult to use another that would express concisely the burden of this paragraph, as well as two opposing schools of thought and practice in all departments of human endeavor. A somewhat sarcastic title would be "Thought vs. Non-Thought." Or, "Brain Exercise vs. Mental Inaction."

On one or two previous occasions the subject has been written upon in this page, with a view to urging newspaper publishers to sell their markets instead of assuming that national advertisers necessarily think of newspapers on the basis of a standard or a rule, or even as something apart from the merchandising possibilities of their territories.

It has been pointed out that in business there is—and must be—as infinite variation as there is generally in human life—that no two businesses can be conducted alike because there are no two of them alike in any respect. And a business, like an institution, is, throughout the whole of its history, the lengthened shadow of one man.

An A. B. C. report is a passport into the markets of a country, so to speak. The bearer of a passport does not expect to get business solely because he has that document. He has to proceed, after his entry, to sell his proposition on its merits, and on its relationship to the interests of the prospective purchaser.

There is no set or uniform method of getting business. If there were, this would be a world of fools, because there would be no necessity for individual thought and initiative and enterprise.

To suppose that the mere presentation or possession of an audit report (necessary as it is) will inevitably get business is mental inaction. It is operating—if there be an operating at all—on the uniformity basis. There is as infinite differentiation in national distribution and merchandising as in newspapers. And the way to get the national advertiser's business surely is to "get up and git"—mentally—and sell the market.

VARIATION AGAIN

DURING nearly two weeks recently I was chiefly occupied in visiting A. N. A. members in Middle West cities. Among the businesses called upon were establishments manufacturing shoes, soap, hosiery, motorcycles, metal goods, building products, office appliances, sanitary goods, and several other descriptions of industries. As soon as I left a building products office my mental outlook had to be readjusted to the needs of a shoe manufacturer. My name—my card—was about the only common denominational thing I could use.

As the president of one well-known concern said to me: "There are in this city twenty-five factories making our type of merchandise. And, apart from such matters as hours and wages, there are not two factories run alike, either in production or in marketing.

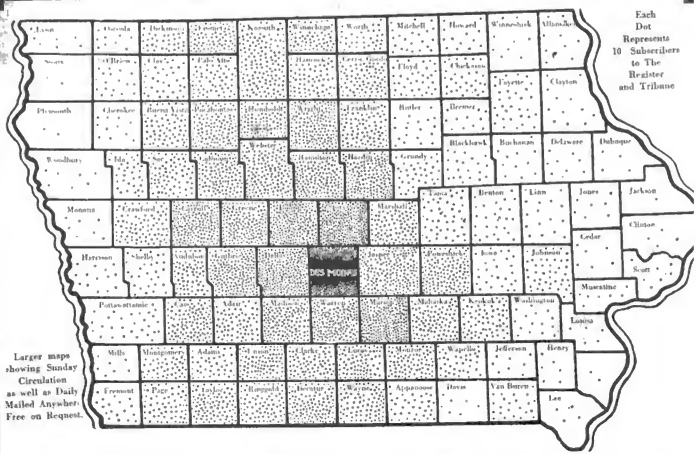
Then, how entirely necessary is it that newspapers not only sell their markets, but also the relation of the market and the publication to the advertiser's business.

FORMATION OF A. N. A. CHAPTER AT ROCHESTER

THE first meeting of the new Chapter at Rochester, N. Y., was held in the Oak Hill Country Club, Friday, June 27. Mr. J. C. McQuiston, manager, Department of Publicity, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, and a vice-president of the A. N. A., outlined the meaning of the chapter idea. It is the purpose of A. N. A. Chapters to bring together representatives of national advertising concerns for the purpose of exchanging confidential information and experiences in methods of advertising and selling trade-marked products that have national or international distribution.

The following firms were represented at the meeting: Stein Bloch Company, Yawman & Erbe Manufacturing Company, Sill Stove Works, Todd Protectograph Company, Mossette, Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Taylor Instrument Companies, Stromberg-Carlson Telephone Manufacturing Company, Adler Bros. & Co., Shinola Company.

A. E. HAWKINS, advertising manager of the Thomas G. Plant Company, Boston, has been appointed to act as the accredited A. N. A. representative.



THE firm name of S. K. F. Administrative Company has been changed to E. K. F. Industries, Inc., and the offices removed to 165 Broadway, New York City.

Arthur Brisbane Says He Has Not Become Part Owner of Ledger

A report that Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal and the Washington Times, had arranged for the purchase of an interest in the Newark (N. J.) Morning and Evening Ledger, was denied by Mr. Brisbane.

"I have discussed the matter with Lucius T. Rnssell, the publisher; that is all," said Mr. Brisbane. Regarding reports that he was planning to purchase newspapers in other cities, he said: "I am always open to suggestions."

To Sell Central Iowa Advertise in the Des Moines Register and Tribune

Each dot on the map represents ten subscribers to these newspapers. Note the remarkable concentration of circulation in the Des Moines Trade Territory!

OVER 100,000 DAILY

You may market anything from chewing gum to high-powered automobiles with a well-planned advertising campaign in The Register and Tribune. Around Des Moines revolves the great business of Iowa, the Greatest Agricultural State. Iowa's soil annually produces more wealth than the world's gold mines combined. For results in this territory advertise in The Register and Tribune.

The Register and Tribune maintains a well organized Service and Trade Promotion Department, which prepares and mails out dealer-broadsides, makes trade investigations, keeps in close touch with the retailer, the wholesaler and the broker. Thus, a campaign placed with these two newspapers means powerful co-operation with your advertising, and not mere white space alone.

National advertisers want steady, consistent, producing mediums! Consider the circulation of The Register and Tribune—over 100,000 daily and over 70,000 Sunday. This immense circulation covers the fertile buying field about Des Moines like a vast blanket. The clean advertising policy of these newspapers stimulates RESULTS because their readers are taught to believe what they print!

SOUTHERN AGENCIES WORK IN HARMONY

Sectional Council of A. A. A. A. Also Will Meet in Asheville—Standards of Recognition Will Be Decided

The meeting of the Southern Council American Association Advertising Agencies in Asheville, July 7, will be the third successive annual session of this organization, which has accomplished a large volume of constructive work since its formation charter. Members include every agency in the southern territory qualified for affiliation with the national organization. Other agencies now eligible will be warmly welcomed to membership and several applications are anticipated in the early future.

JEFFERSON THOMAS,
Chairman Southern Council A. A. A. A.

The Southern Council has labored with good results for correction of improper practices on part of its members and for adoption of higher standards of service with splendid results, though naturally little publicity has been given its efforts in this direction. During the last year much attention has been paid to closer relations between organized agencies and members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, as well as with farm paper publishers of the South. A joint committee (composed of B. Kirk Rankin, Southern Agriculturist, Nashville, representing farm papers; W. C. Johnson, Chattanooga News, Daily Newspapers; and Jefferson Thomas, Southern Council, A. A. A. A.), agreed unanimously on a basis mutual relations and the report of this committee will be considered at joint sessions in Ashville.

Big Help to Business

Members of the Southern Council prepared copy and supplied plates for a series of educational advertisements, advertising, assessing themselves twice the annual dues to provide funds. The Southern newspapers generally donated space for these ads, which have aroused great interest throughout the territory and have unquestionably helped in the development of new business.

The American Association of Advertising Agencies regards the Southern Council as perhaps the most active of its branches in proportion of membership and pays it a great compliment in holding at Asheville, July 8 and 9, its quarterly executive board meeting in joint session with the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association and Farm Paper Publishers of the South on the evening of July 8.

President Johns of the A. A. A. A. will tell what the association is doing for advertisers; Newspaper Committee Chairman W. H. Rankin will tell of its accomplishments for newspapers; Agricultural Committee Chairman Charles ahout its service to farm papers; and Executive Secretary O'Shaughnessy will outline the ways in which publishers may co-operate for greater efficiency.

O'Shaughnessy Will Tour South

Every indication now points to a large attendance and a successful gathering. The Southern Council meets first at 2.30 on the afternoon of the seventh for committee reports and action on unfinished business. At 8 o'clock that evening another executive session will discuss intimate matters on agency practice.

At 10 o'clock Tuesday morning will occur the election of officers for the coming year. Those chosen to qualify after the annual meeting of the American Association in October.

Great pleasure will be manifested by all members if Past President Massengale's health permits his attendance, which now seems probable.

Following the Asheville meeting, Executive Secretary O'Shaughnessy, of the American Association, will address the advertising clubs and civic bodies of Knoxville, Chattanooga and Atlanta and appear before the annual meeting of the Georgia Press Association at Monroe. In each city visited he will have informal conferences with newspaper publishers.

In Atlanta, Publisher W. G. Bryan of the Georgian and American, who is chairman of the advertising committee of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, will entertain Mr. O'Shaughnessy and other members of the executive board of the American Association with a week-end party.

Stanch Believers in Advertising

The Southern Council of the A. A. A. A. believes in advertising as the means more rapidly developing the wonderful resources of the South and is committed to efficient methods for the benefit of clients that the volume of their business may be speedily increased through its profitably productive nature.

To this end members are working cooperatively in perfect harmony and with visibly satisfactory results. More and more southern advertisers are appreciating the character of service obtainable from home agencies and the tendency of their employment is steadily growing.

Membership in the Southern Council is now regarded as a valuable asset by every member and indications are that soon it will be sought by all reputable agencies of the territory.

While all the Southern Council meetings will be confined to the membership there will be ample opportunity between sessions for personal interviews with advertising agencies present.

Officers of Council

Jefferson Thomas, of the Thomas Advertising Service, Jacksonville, is chairman of the Southern Council. H. L. Staples, of Staples & Staples, Richmond, is secretary. In addition to these members the following are members of the Southern Council: Thomas E. Basham Company, Louisville; Cecil, Barette & Cecil, Richmond; Chambers Agency, Inc., New Orleans; Nelson Chesman & Co., Chattanooga; Ferry-Hanly Advertising Company, New Orleans; Johnson-Dallis Company, Atlanta; Massengale Advertising Agency, Atlanta; Frank Presbrey Company, Norfolk, Va.

Changes on La Porte Herald

LA PORTE, Ind., July 2.—E. M. Wolf, advertising manager of the Herald has resigned to accept a position with the Northern Indiana Gas & Electric Company, at LaFayette. R. K. MacDougal of the editorial staff will be his successor, while Russell Lynch of Racine, Wis., takes Mr. MacDougal's place. Mr. Lynch was formerly with the Racine Times-Call.

First

In six months of 1919 The New York Times published a greater volume of advertisements, and recorded a greater gain than any other New York newspaper.

—from the Secretary of the Interior:

In his annual report (December, 1918) to the President, Franklin K. Lane said, " . . . there is no one thing so supremely essential in a government such as ours, where decisions of such importance must be made by public opinion, as that every man and woman and child shall know one tongue, that each may speak to every other and that all may be informed."

The daily newspaper is the University of the Masses. It is the one national meeting ground of all classes, professions, interests, the rich and the poor.

This force, national or sectional as you wish, can educate all classes to buy better merchandise,—your merchandise. It can be localized right where your goods are for sale and extended to keep pace with distribution.

Invest in newspaper advertising.

INDEPENDENT AGENTS PLAN ORGANIZATION

Southeastern Association May Start "Truly Democratic National Body Open to All General Agencies Recognised by Publishers"

At its Asheville meeting, July 7-9, it is quite probable that the Southeastern Advertising Agents' Association will invite all so-called "independent" advertising agencies throughout the United States to assist in the formation of what Dillard Jacobs, of Atlanta, its president, terms a "truly democratic National Association, whose membership will be open to all general agencies that are recognized as such by publishers."

In a statement of his association's plans, Mr. Jacobs said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"Until such a democratic association is formed, or until the existing associations renounce their monopolistic tendencies and become truly democratic, it will be useless to expect any real and substantial progress in protecting the abuses which now exists in the general agency field.

"The Southeastern Advertising Agents Association, was organized primarily for self protection and for the purpose of opposing invidious propaganda of certain so-called National Associations of Advertising Agents, which, in our opinion, constituted cliques rather than bonafide national associations of the thousand or more general advertising agencies of the United States, only a hand full, about ten per cent, are members of any association, and until the birth of the Southeastern Association there was no truly democratic organization, which welcomed to its membership all legitimate general agencies.

"The members of the Southeastern Advertising Agents Association maintain that both the interest of the publisher and that of the advertiser, as well as the efficiency of general agency service, demand that the gate to the general field shall be held wide open on a purely democratic basis to all worthy comers, and that the publishers and not the agents' competitors should determine whether he is worthy of recognition.

"We protest against the autocratic propaganda which seems to have for its motive the converting of the general agency business into a franchise.

"We maintain that open competition of a legitimate type is essential to the maintenance of a high standard of efficiency in the general agency field.

"We protest against any plan or basis of agency recognition which, in whole or in part, would put into the hands of his competitors the power to exclude a new agent desiring to enter the field of general advertising.

"We unreservedly condemn the efforts which are being made by certain associations to make it appear that their membership includes all of the leading representative, respectable or efficient agencies of the United States.

"We maintain that such propaganda is clearly misleading and unfair and works an unjust hardship upon about nine-tenths of the agencies of America, which are neither invited to join nor admitted to the membership of said associations."

The Sustaining Membership List Is Also Enjoying Steady Growth

H. J. Kenner, of Minneapolis, formerly secretary of the National Vigilance Committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, has rejoined that organization in his former position, succeeding G. F. Olwin, who has resigned.

Some recent additional "sustaining members" of the Associated Advertising Clubs are:

Standard Four Wheel Tire Company, Keokuk, Ia.; Little Giant Co., Mankato, Wis.; Century Rubber Works, Chicago; Fitzgerald Manufacturing Company, Torrington, Conn.; Globe Rubber Tire Manufacturing Company, New York; Hills-Varnish Corporation, Brooklyn; Kelly-Springfield Motor Truck Co., Springfield, O.; Diamond Motor Car Co., Chicago; United Security Co., Canton, O.; Harvey Pipeless & Forging Company, Racine, Wis.; McFarlan Motor Company, Connersville, Ind.; National Tire & Rubber Co., East Palestine, O.; Crocker-McElwain Co., Holyoke, Mass.; Scenic Film Company, Atlanta; Russell M. N. Y. German Press Writers Plan Labor Union

Will Seek Raise in Salaries as Soon as Organization Is Completed, Promoters Say

A labor union, to be composed exclusively of men employed in the editorial departments of German newspapers in New York City, editors, copy readers, reporters, proof readers and artists, is being organized among the members of the German Press Club.

Its promoters say it will be completely organized within the next two weeks, and that its membership from the start will be at least 100, or 90 per cent of the men actively employed in the editorial rooms of local German newspapers.

When organization has been perfected, it is planned to make application to the managements of the five German newspapers of New York City —the morning and evening Staats Zeitung and Morgen Journal and the Socialist paper, the Volks-Zeitung, for increased wages.

A committee, of which Theodore F. Cuno is chairman and Arnold Fueredi is secretary, is in charge of organization, and also has been conferring with a committee of Typographical Union No. 7, with a view to having the new organization affiliated with the union. Overtures by this committee to this end, Mr. Fueredi said, had met with a hearty reception.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 25.—F. W. Kellogg, publisher of the Los Angeles Express, is reported to be planning to start an evening daily at Pasadena in the fall.

WANT CLOSER AGENCY RELATIONS

Four Asheville Conventions Will Take Up Matters of Standards of Practice to Bring About More Effective Co-operation in South

A joint committee of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, Southern Farm Papers, Association of Southern Advertising Agencies, and the Southern Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies has drawn up a series of recommendations on agency relations which have been submitted to their respective memberships for action at their annual conventions in Asheville, N. C., next week.

The purpose is to bring about closer and more effective co-operation.

The joint recommendations say:

"It must become evident to any Southern publisher who studies the advertising situation that his interests and those of the reputable advertising agencies are identical and that the closer and more harmonious his relations with such agencies, especially those located in the same section of the country, the better it is for him and for them.

"It should be equally apparent to the advertising agencies of the South that in a very considerable degree their capacity to properly develop new accounts and in an even larger measure their ability to render satisfactory service to clients is dependent upon the character of the co-operation and support they receive from the publishers of their territory.

"In order that there may be speedily attained a more intimate and mutually beneficial relationship between the publishers of the South in every field and the advertising agencies of this part of the country which operate on ethical and sound lines, we heartily recommend and urgently advise the adoption of the following practices by these closely allied business interests:

On the Part of Publishers

"Recognition.—Confining the allowance of commissions to agencies actually qualified to receive them. While it is not our purpose to advise any publisher to withdraw recognition already granted from an agency except for cause, we strongly urge that extreme care be exercised in extending it hereafter. Our services are offered publishers in helping them to determine whether or not new agencies asking recognition are entitled to it.

"Commissions.—Allowance of the standard 15 per cent. commission and 2 per cent. cash discount in cases where not already done. Agency service of the right type earns 15 per cent. on the gross, and in paying this publishers make possible the devotion of greater energy to the development of new business.

"Rate Cards.—Adoption of such forms and adherence thereto as will make these impossible of different interpretations. Up to this time the cards of a number of publications have been so confusing as to lead to many complications. The standard form recommended by the American Association of Advertising Agencies is practically proof against errors and should be universally used.

Make Rates Conform

"Local Business.—Making the rates for this conform with those at which foreign advertising is carried and allowing agencies commission on advertising originated in the home cities of publishers on which they render adequate service will encourage special attention to its development. With the possible exception of purely retail accounts, publishers will find it profitable not to discriminate against agencies on local business.

"Acknowledgment and Bills.—Orders from advertising agencies should be acknowledged in every instance or promptly returned if not acceptable. In the absence of direct information that the advertising will be carried out, a good deal of extra work is required of the agencies. Invoices should be mailed not later than the first of each month for all advertising inserted during the preceding month.

"Checking Copies.—Prompt mailing of issues containing advertisements inserted on their order to agencies at the time of publication is essential to the maintenance of pleasant relations between them and publishers and saves both from useless expense.

On the Part of Agencies

"Order Forms.—There is room for considerable improvement in the form of orders sent out by agencies as heretofore, in some instances these have been lacking in clearness of detail. The adoption generally by its members of the standard order form of the American Association of Advertising Agencies will almost wholly eliminate cause for complaint in this connection.

"Engravings and Plates.—Agencies are urged to more carefully look after shipments of engravings and plates. Often delay in receipt of these by the publishers until scheduled dates of insertion have passed entails considerable correspondence that might be avoided. Unless the agency is absolutely assured of its ability to forward plates at a given time it is better to delay mailing of orders pending definite information. Under present postal service conditions only special delivery mail can be depended upon for quick transmission.

Do More Development Work

"Development Work.—Agencies are urged to give the utmost possible co-operation to the publishers of their vicinity in the matter of development of new accounts. Some important newspapers and farm journals in the territory of the Southern Council have complained that Northern agencies will go to much further lengths in this direction than those of the South. Any 'leads' offered to Northern agencies by a publisher should be carefully investigated and at least followed by correspondence until their potentialities are uncovered.

"Organized Effort.—Since some 150 of the leading agencies of the country are working constructively and in the greatest harmony as members of the American Association of Advertising Agencies—nine of those in the Southern Council—it is urged that every agency affiliate therewith for its own benefit and for the good of the advertising profession and of the publishing business. The qualifications for membership are such as can be met by any agency capable of rendering efficient service to advertisers."

Vogue to Have Foreign Editions

Conde Nast, publisher of Vogue, New York, sailed Monday on the Aquitania with Frank Crowninshield, editor of Vanity Fair, to arrange for the publication of a French edition of Vogue, which will circulate in Russia, Italy, Sweden and Denmark. A Spanish edition of the publication is being well received in South American countries, Mr. Nast said.

In June Texas oil production reached the new high mark of approximately 259,000 barrels of crude a day.

Anniversary of Fall of the Bastile

A furious mob of people,
Aided by fire and steel,
Maddened by righteous fury
Demolished the Bastile

They burst the iron hinges
And flung the cell doors wide,
Where anguished political sufferers
And tortured victims died.

In deepest, darkest dungeons
They plied their grievous task,
And found the moldering bones of him,
Who wore the Iron Mask.

Today (though passing bell is heard

The whole French Nation Joyously
Celebrates Bastile Day.

New Orleans, Wide-awake, Resourceful, Constructively Progressive

New Orleans people have caught the spark of the spirit and fanned it to a roaring flame. Not only the South, but the whole country has come to a keen realization of New Orleans' great marketing, shipping, and manufacturing facilities.

It is the distribution center of an enormously rich and developing section.

It is the natural commercial gateway between the United States and Central and South America, the trade with which is increasing by leaps and bounds.

It is a big, wonderful city and shows potential qualities which are daily making it more of a factor in every line of business in which the country is engaged.

Those who know assert emphatically and in such unqualified terms that modesty makes us hesitate to quote them, that no other force, factor, individual or institution has done more to bring about this state of affairs than

The New Orleans Item

Editorially the ITEM sets a national standard in its appeal to the live, alert, red-blooded and responsive people of its community. It is to this that is ascribed much of its power and influence for aggressive and progressive work.

Its policies have brought to it a tremendous circulation among the "moderns" of New Orleans, and made it the favorite newspaper of those who have a constructive voice and hand in the big things that are making the city great.

Merchandising and Advertising

Realizing that if its advertising columns are to show the greatest measure of resultfulness there must be a real tie-up between the manufacturer's advertising and the selling efforts of the retailer, the ITEM went to work with the same earnestness and unselfish devotion to a great cause that has marked it in other features.

A publication known as Merchandising and Advertising, edited with skill and care, contributed to by some of the brightest and keenest men and women engaged in business promotion, goes regularly to every merchant, big and little, in the ITEM'S territory.

News of advertising campaigns, merchandising suggestions of every kind, methods of co-ordination, of publicity and selling plans, so-called trade helps, are set forth in a way that is making more effective all advertising expenditures in New Orleans, and redounding to the profit and satisfaction of manufacturers, jobbers, retailers, and even to the consumers themselves.

The retailers of New Orleans know from constant experience that ITEM advertising "moves the goods."

ITEM readers are made up of those who have either been born in the more modern era, or who have shaken off the shackles of custom and tradition that all too often render advertising and other methods of sales introduction so slow and difficult of result.

The NEW ORLEANS ITEM has a larger circulation than any other afternoon newspaper south of the Ohio or Potomac rivers.

Its advertising columns are open only to advertisers of clean, wholesome and useful products.

Its Promotion Department, highly efficient, is at the service of such advertising.

Visit New Orleans with the A. A. C. W. Convention in September. New Orleans will make you glad you came.

oductions of some "wonderful" figures recently published in the Birmingham News, both in their own paper ers throughout the United States.

The News carries each month (and did in May) an immense amount of business. But with our own hands we eir "National" advertising for May, and they carried (slightly more or less) 91,522 lines (6,538 INCHES) of onal" advertising that the Birmingham Ledger declines to accept. Herewith, for instance, a photographic re-page 16, of The News of May 6th, 1919, and THE WEEK, ANY MONTH, (now in July, ook), you can find this same class of advertis- iews. Ask your checking department to bring f any day to your desk and SEE WITH YOUR ES!

National Advertising For May

Here, expressed in lines, are the actual figures on the national advertising printed by the three Birmingham newspapers in May, compared with the same month of last year:

	The News	Age-Herald	The Ledger
May, 1919	299,418	180,642	110,670
May, 1918	169,834	96,950	96,894
Gain	129,584	83,692	13,776

It will be noted that The News printed 8,106 lines more national advertising than the other two newspapers combined, and that The News' gain was 32,116 lines in excess of the combined gains of the other two newspapers.

reover, the News in all its claims and advertis- diously avoids admitting that The Ledger is day paper and has no Sunday edition. Take News' Sunday figures from these "compara- claims and they don't "lead" quite so far.

Yes, The News "leads" in ADVERTISING, but not in the faith of the better class of Birmingham people and erchants. Its "lead" in some so-called advertising is SUPREME, and The Ledger for one, is glad of it.

The Birmingham Ledger bars from its columns advertising that The News tries hard to get. That's why The Ledger is booming in both clean LOCAL and NATIONAL advertising and why dollar-for-dollar spent—PAYS BEST.

Birmingham is a city of nearly 250,000 people and serves a radius in which there are probably 500,000. The claim, therefore, that "YOU can cover Birmingham at one cost by concentrating in The News" is used not for your best interest, but to get all YOUR money and prevent any other paper here from getting ANY-THING.

It's up to the high-class agencies and advertisers now—man to man. The Ledger doesn't allow questionable advertising to get in its columns and offset the claims of its HONEST advertisers; moreover, The Ledger "recognizes" and gives commissions only to high-class, competent agents—not the cut rate "sharks."

Think it over and if you want real help and cooperation in Birmingham—you can trust The Ledger.

Let us mail you a sample of The Birmingham Ledger. If you can find an objectionable advertisement of nd, we will give you a full schedule, and, to boot, your agency full commission. Try this: It's worth going after.

WORLD WAR WROUGHT WONDERS IN SOUTH

After Half Century of Slow Reconstruction Her People Have Entered Upon a Period of Marvelous Development

By Meigs O. Frost

New Orleans, June 28.

"The South has found itself, and—confidentially—the South has gone back to work. That's the biggest single factor in the South's amazing prosperity today."

There's the analysis of Arthur G. Newmyer, Southern vice-president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and associate publisher of the New Orleans Item.

"These people of the South lacked self-confidence—that was their chief trouble as it revealed itself to me, as well as one of my relative newness in this part of the United States could judge," said Mr. Newmyer, who has been a resident of New Orleans during the past eight years. "As a group, they were still rehabilitating themselves from the depression that followed the Civil War.

Need Is Backward No Longer

"The whole South, in the main, had the attitude of the fellow who owes the bank—whose note is coming due and who isn't quite sure of himself or his plans for meeting it. The South had its hat in its hand when it approached the remainder of the United States.

"Before the World War bursts upon us, the South was very, very gradually coming out of that class. The farmers and the small merchants were slowly getting on their feet.

"And then came the revelation of the war. It was a searchlight turned on the South whereby the South saw itself and found renewed self-respect in what it saw.

"Those farmers and small merchants —the bulk who make up prosperity, not the few who reflect it—paid their debts. They bought that new tractor for the farm. They enlarged that stock in the store.

"They had known modern possibilities before. But they had felt that they couldn't afford the investment. The South had the conservatism born of suffering. The South had been afraid to dare

Dawn of the New Day

"But the World War changed all that. The small farmer paid his debts and he bought the tools he had long dreamed of owning—but had been too conservative to 'risk' his money on. And with modern equipment he began to get modern efficiency production. That man of weather-grayed walls and wire-loop fasteners on his pasture gate began to tighten up all the loose ends. He even began to get luxuries! He painted his house and his corn-crib and his barns and his tool sheds! He bought his automobile and found that he had something to increase production and efficiency to a point where he looked at his gasoline bill exactly as he did at his bill for selected seeds. It was an investment. It paid dividends.

"From being afraid to dare, the South pocketed the rewards of daring. The Southern farmer felt he was needed by the North. He emerged from that petty pessimism under whose shadows had thrived such abominations as the 'buy-a-bale' movement. He learned that he wasn't the 'Orphant Annie' of the United States. He heard the whole nation rooting for him. Back of that rooting he heard the plea of the whole world. 'Come on, South! We need you!' was what he heard. And he came running. He found himself!

Sequels to Two Wars

"The South discovered its new self by the light of the glare of the World War. The South learned the productivity of its soil—the resources of its people. One war nearly wrecked the South. The War of Wars gave the South a new viewpoint.

"The South dropped the pity that had been riding its back like an Old Man of the Sea. The South took pride in its place. And where that pity had bowed the South's back, pride straightened it.

"Out of that renewed self-respect the South's community spirit was born. It's the community spirit of men bound together by hard work and made rich together by its rewards.

"The South still holds its respect for its ancient chivalry. The South still doffs its hat in reverence to its beauty. But the 'fine old Southern gentleman' and the 'Southern belle' of romantic idleness have ceased to dominate the whole life of the South.

"The Southern man and the Southern woman have rounded the corner of the old days when the contrast between their lineage and culture and their poverty were a national anecdote. They're ceased using their coupon-scissors on 'befo' de wah' to trim the fringe from their cuffs. They're using those scissors more to clip coupons. They're using their pens, not to write memoirs of past glories, but to make out deposit slips for their bank.

"Confidentially—the South has gone back to work. And the South has found joy and self-respect and prosperity in doing that work."

BELLMAN GIVES LAST RING

Minneapolis Publication Staff Holds Farewell Dinner June 26

Minneapolis, June 27.—With a merry ringing of his bell and a Godspeed to all friends and well wishers, the Bellman, for thirteen years a spokesman of opinion, put out his lantern and retired permanently from the field of action last night, attended by members of the staffs of the Bellman and the Northwestern Miller, representatives of grain and milling interests and of other Minneapolis publications.

William C. Edgar, editor of the Bellman and Northwestern Miller, was host. Mr. Edgar says the discontinuance is due to other professional and business engagements to which he is committed and that rather than permit the Bellman to pass into other hands and possibly, in the course of time, suffer deterioration, he and his associates preferred to discontinue its publication. Major H. A. Bellows and C. K. Michener were associate editors.

Marvin Brown Buys Ada News

Ada, Okla., July 2.—Marvin Brown, formerly of the Mcnace, has purchased a controlling interest in the Evening News and has assumed the editorial reins, succeeding Byron Norrell. W. D. Little, who was executive secretary to the State Fuel Administration during the war, is now business manager. Miles C. Grigsby, formerly business manager, is now devoting all his time to the local advertising field.

The Fayetteville Observer is North Carolina's oldest newspaper. It was established in 1817.

"You Have Done More for the Industry of Newspaper Advertising Than Has Previously Been Accomplished by Any Single Factor"

JASON ROGERS, publisher of the New York Globe, one of the dominant evening newspapers of America, in a letter to the publisher of Editor & Publisher, under date of July 1, says:

"Please accept my sincere thanks for the beautifully bound linen mounted reprints from the Editor & Publisher covering newspaper advertising rates and circulations.

"I consider that in gathering and publishing this data you have done more for the industry of newspaper advertising than has been previously accomplished by any single factor.

"The newspapers of the country should show their appreciation in substantial form, for it has remained for you to show us all how a decent, worth-while newspaper trade paper should be conducted.

"Having known you for upwards of twenty-five years, I have gone out of my way to assure other newspaper publishers that in dealing with you they are dealing with a man 100 per cent on the level and absolutely dependable."

Begins Work as Advisor to N. Y. Publishers

Lester L. Jones Will Have Title of Business Manager and Will Conduct Negotiations with Employees

Lester L. Jones, who recently was appointed business manager of the Publishers' Association of New York City, assumed his new duties Monday. Matters requiring his early attention will be considered at a meeting of the association this week or the week following.

Mr. Jones will be in charge hereafter of negotiations between the association and its employees regarding wages and conditions of employment, but the range of his activities will be considerably wider. In general, he will act as business advisor to members of the association.

For the past two years he has been in the West as owner of the Billings (Mont.) Gazette, and part owner of the Missouli Missoulian. Previously he was publisher of the Chicago Chronicle, and for eleven years was vice-president and business manager of the Chicago Journal under John Eastman.

Before leaving Billings, Mr. Jones appointed Leon Shaw, who had been managing editor of the Gazette, its general manager.

DENIES FRAUD IN WAR FILMS

Official of Committee au Public Information Replies to Reports

In discussing a report from Washington that some of the heads of the bureaus that aided in the distribution of propaganda films during the war have filed statements with a Congressional committee, accusing employes of defrauding the Government, Carl Byor, former associate chairman of the committee, said that no such statement had been prepared by former members of the Creel committee.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among non-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines of advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in new business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial in many ways—it has made new advertisers and helped circulation—it has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for two, four weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

Advertising Success Sure in the Sunny South

Last year the Southern States produced enormous crops—the greatest in history. The value of the cotton, the cereals and other staples raised exceeded six billion dollars—more than the subscriptions of all the people in the United States to the Fourth Liberty Loan. Besides these billions the South received hundreds of millions every month last year for erecting cantonments, making war munitions and building ships. Ship building is still a tremendous industry in the South. No section of the country is enjoying such prosperity as is seen in the South today. The people are not only rich but responsive. The South is the ideal territory for a "try-out" or a permanent advertising campaign you can get a big share of this ready patronage by advertising your products in southern newspapers "this very now." A test will tell.

KENTUCKY REPLEDGES LOYALTY TO U. S.

Spirit of War, Just Over, Will Continue During Reconstruction, Say Editors—Need for Changes in Newspaper Advertising Practices

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 28.—The busiest mid-summer session ever held by the Kentucky Press Association was concluded here today. Delegates pledged the same loyalty to the government during the period of reconstruction as was given in troublous period of the war.

Other resolutions indorsed the Towner Bill, now before Congress, proposing to create a National Department of Education with $100,000,000 at its disposal. Of this sum $4,000,000 would come to Kentucky for the purpose of eliminating illiteracy, according to Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, founder of the Moonlight Schools, one of the speakers at the convention.

Other features include an address by Gov. Henry J. Allen of Kansas, who urged upon the editors their duty in warring on the anarchist and American "Red" as they exist in the persons of misinformed foreigners and members of the I. W. W.

Reforms in Advertising

Edward P. Howard, of the American Press Association, urged reforms in advertising rates.

"You Kentucky editors," he said, "have a right to expect business, but on the other hand you have got to come clean with the advertisers." A uniform rate, based on actual circulation, the speaker said, is the need of the hour and is going to benefit everybody concerned. "If your subscription rate is too low," said Mr. Howard, "raise it. Make it adequate and keep it adequate. But don't boost it out of reason."

Mr. Howard's hint found a ready indorsement in the address of Matt S. Cohen, secretary of the Kentucky State Fair, who frankly told the delegates they need not expect advertising unless they provided the fair association with sworn statements.

B. B. Corine of Shelbyville, Ky., discussing the subject of "Legal Advertising," went on record as favoring an adjustment of rates as between regular, transient and political advertising. The occasional advertiser, he contended, should pay more than the regular advertiser. Political "puffs" should cost most of all, he said.

Honorary Life Members

Gen. William B. Haldeman and Lieut. Col. Robert J. McBryde, former editor and associate editor of the Louisville Times, respectively, were elected honorary life members of the association.

At the final session of the association, B. F. Forgey, editor of the Ashland Independent, was elected president to succeed D. M. Hutton of Harrodsburg. Robert L. Elkin, editor of the Lancaster Central Record, was elected vice-president; J. C. Alcock of Danville, was re-elected secretary-treasurer, and G. B. Senff of Mt. Sterling was elected chairman of the executive committee.

A committee to meet at a future date and discuss the raising of newspaper advertising rates in a just and equable way was appointed at this meeting. The committee includes one representative from each Congressional district, as follows:

First District—Clay Lemon, Mayfield, and Henry Lawrence, Cadiz.

Second District—T. C. Underwood, Hopkinsville, and J. G. Kelley, Hawesville.

Third District—John B. Gaines, Bowling Green.

Fourth District—J. B. Gorder, Campbellsville.

Fifth District—J. C. Alcock.

Sixth District—(To be supplied.)

Seventh District—W. L. Dawson, Lagrange.

Eighth District—B. B. Cozine, Shelbyville.

Ninth District—B. F. Forgey, Ashland.

Tenth District—J. L. McCoy, Jackson.

Eleventh District—E. S. Albright, Mt. Vernon.

Jersey Editors Enjoy Outing at Lake Minnewaska

Business Meeting Combined with Pleasure Trip and New Officers Take Over Their Responsibilities

"One of the best outings and meetings yet held," was the general verdict of the 104 members, families and guests of the New Jersey Press Association who journeyed to Lake Minnewaska last Friday for the 63rd annual outing and meeting of this old association.

Business meetings were held Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, winding up with a banquet, at which the retiring president, W. B. Bryant, acted as toastmaster and the new president, Alfred Cooper, of the Cape May Gazette, was introduced.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are: Alfred Cooper, Cape May Court-Gazette, president; W. L. Tushingham, Camden Courier, vice-president; John W. Clift, Summit Herald, secretary; W. B. R. Mason, Bound Brook Chronicle, treasurer; executive committee—J. W. Naylor, Allentown Messenger; E. V. Savidge, Hopewell Herald; E. A. Bristor, Passaic Herald; John Clarey, Madison Eagle; W. B. Bryant, Paterson Press-Guardian; J. S. Demarest, Tenafly Record; W. A. Sweeney, Red Bank Standard.

WESTLICHE POST SOLD

Old St. Louis Daily Passes to Hans Hackel and Associates

BY TELEGRAPH

ST. LOUIS, July 2.—The Westliche Post, a German language daily newspaper, was sold yesterday for $300,000 by the American Press, publisher of the Times, to a group of St. Louisians of German parentage, headed by Hans Hackel, who has been editor for several years. Mr. Hackel will be president, Theodore Lange, of the Louis Lange Publishing Company (publishers of the Abendschnle), vice president, and Otto E. Schuricht, secretary and treasurer of the new company, which will be known as the Westliche Post Publishing Company. The Sunday edition is known as the Mississippi Blaetter.

The Westliche Post was founded in 1857 and is a charter member of the Associated Press. Its early owners were the late Dr. Emil Preetorius and Carl Schurz. Mr. Hackel has been identified with the paper for twenty years. He announces that the paper will be independent. Location of the publishing house has not been announced.

LITTLE ELECTED CHAIRMAN OF N. Y. AGENTS' ASSN.

The association of New York Advertising Agencies has elected Frank H. Little of the George Batten Company, chairman for the ensuing year, and the following associate officers: Vice-chairman, Frank Finney. Storey & Finney; secretary – treasurer, W. T. Mullally, Maclay & Mullally, Inc.; executive committee, W. B. Ruthrauff, of Ruthrauff & Ryan; F. M. West, Calkins & Holden; M. P. Gould and J. A. Hanff, of Hanff-Metzger, Inc.

F. H. LITTLE.

This association has done good work in making advertising better and stronger and in bringing advertising men more closely together. "We shall continue the aims of the association—to promote good advertising—and do it with work that will be both subjective and objective," Chairman Little informs EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Chairman Little has been engaged in the advertising agency business since he was graduated from Princeton in 1903. He started with the George Batten Company 15 years ago and four or five years later was made a director and subsequently vice-president, which office he holds now.

He has been long active in advertising association work in New York and helped from the present Association of Advertising Agents of New York, the American Association of Advertising Agencies. Last year he was vice-chairman of the New York Council of the A. A. A. A.

Explains Dr. Ellis' Detention

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Recent temporary detention in Egypt of Dr. William T. Ellis, correspondent of the New York Herald, resulted from conspicuous activities by himself and his son in connection with the nationalist movement in that country, the Senate was informed today by the State Department in response to a resolution of inquiry recently adopted by the Senate. Both Mr. Ellis and his son have since left for Constantinople, the department's letter said.

Smith Elected President

SMITHLAND, Ky., June 28.—John Smith, editor of the Livingston Banner, was elected president and George Bingham, of Hogwallow Kentuckian fame, was made secretary-treasurer of the First District Press Association, which met here yesterday. In spite of the fact that the State press association was in session at Louisville, there was a good attendance. James R. Keller, associate editor of the Louisville Times, was the principal speaker. The service the press can render the State at the present and in the future was his theme.

Campbell Leads N. Y. Golfers

Sixteen members of the New York Newspaper Golf Club qualified at Van Cortlandt Park Monday to compete at match play for the July Cup during this month. Peter Campbell led the field with a card of 88—20, 68.

"SCORED A HIT!"

In the "News Box News," house organ of the News Box Sales Corporation, there appears, under date of June 20, the following:

"The first shot of the advertising campaign has been fired in the form of a double-page ad in the International Edition of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and, from the inquiries already received, it looks as if we had scored a hit.

"First came a telegram from the Louisville Courier-Journal, Col. Henry Watterson's famous paper, and in quick succession came letters from the Brooklyn Eagle, Chicago American, Boston Herald and Traveler, Ottawa (Ont.) Le Droit, Detroit Journal, Raleigh News and Observer (owned by Secretary Daniels), Spokane Spokesman-Review, Rockford Republic, Detroit Free Press, Jackson News, Waterbury Democrat, Buffalo Express and Syracuse Post-Standard.

"Publishers wrote direct to the Washington Times and the publisher of that paper, Edgar D. Shaw, answered these inquiries.

"Several representatives of newspapers, who have read this advertisement in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, have come direct to our office to examine the machine."

Thus it will be noted that EDITOR & PUBLISHER affords a quick road to market for those who have anything to offer to the newspapers of the country. It is equally effective in reaching the space buyers for national advertisers, carrying to them the messages of newspapers that believe in advertising their advertising.

LITTLE INCONVENIENCE OVER ZONE INCREASE

New Second Class Postal Charges Went Into Effect July 1, but Comparatively Few Publishers Raised Prices to Meet It

From all reports received by EDITOR AND PUBLISHER, newspapers appear to have adjusted themselves to the July 1 Zone Law postal increases without much inconvenience. A number have raised subscription charges to subscribers in the zones affected in order to meet the higher mailing costs.

In New York City only one newspaper—the Times—increased its subscription prices—and this affects only that territory lying west of the Mississippi. To readers there the Times has raised the price of its daily and Sunday editions, combined, from $11 to $12 a year; of its daily edition, from $9 to $10 a year, and of the Sunday edition, from $3 to $3.50 a year.

The managements of the other New York dailies, with the exception of the American, say that they will make no increases. At the American office, the advisability of making an increase is under consideration, but no decision has been reached.

Few "Far Away" Readers

The position taken by most of the publishers of large-city newspapers is that their circulation in the 1st and 2nd zones, where the increase in postage is heaviest, is comparatively negligible and that much of their out-of-town circulation is handled by dealers to whom papers are shipped by express, and so the payment of increased postage is obviated.

The new postal rate schedule, which went into effect July 1 for the period of one year (when it will again be revised upward) provides for an increase on both reading and advertising matter. The increase in postage on reading matter is a "flat" one, without regard to zones, and is from 1¼ cents a pound or fraction thereof, to 1½ cents a pound.

In the case of the portion of any newspaper devoted to advertisements, the increase in rates per pound or fraction thereof vary in the eight different zones.

The first zone has a radius of 50 miles for the center of a given unit of area, the second zone, 150 miles; the third zone, 300 miles; the fourth zone, 600 miles; the fifth zone, 1,000 miles; the sixth zone, 1,400 miles, the seventh zone, 1,800 miles, and the eighth zone, all units of area outside the seventh zone, from 3 to 5 cents, and in the eighth zone, from 3½ to 5½ cents.

Those Raising Prices

A second and additional list of newspapers that have changed their subscription rates to conform to the July 1st increase in second-class postage enacted by the Postal Zone Law, has been compiled by the Publishers' Advisory Board. Supplementing the first list, published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER on June 12, it follows:

A VOICE

I am the New South.
I have suffered much, but when I suffered most my eyes were steadfast and they saw a Vision.
They saw my cities and my countryside change amazingly through faith and fearlessness.
And they see my Vision realized.
They see my States stand shoulder to shoulder with sister States, East, North and West, and pride at their fair showing fills my bosom.
I am proud of all my States, of my beautiful cities.
I am proud of their stately marts, of their bright factories, and their whirring wheels of industry.
I am proud of my soil—and of the sturdy sons who till the soil and make it bear abundantly.
I am proud of my printing presses and their power to promote prosperity, truth and the love of life.
I am at one with ye of the East

SENT 800,000 WORDS BY CABLE IN 1918

Harold J. Learoyd, Editor London Times-Philadelphia Public Ledger Cable Service, Home for Rest After Strenuous Work

Harold J. Learoyd, formerly managing editor of the New York Evening Post and later of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, has returned to New York for a rest after a long engagement as London correspondent of the Public Ledger and editor of the London Times-Philadelphia Ledger cable news service during the war. Mr. Learoyd, during the year 1918, sent to this country by cable nearly 800,000 words.

Among many and varied experiences of interest while acting as an American correspondent in the famous newspaper office at Printing House Square, was an invitation to lecture at the Staff College of the British army at Camberley, near Aldershot, an unusual, indeed unprecedented privilege for a newspaper man.

There, on meeting last October, Mr. Learoyd talked for over an hour to about 140 officers of regimental rank and many of the army women of Camberley, on the subject of Anglo-American history and relations, breaking the ice with the following story:

Thought England Out of Business

"In the summer of 1914 a farmer in Ohio remarked to the country storekeeper: 'Well, Cy, I see there's another war on.' 'Yes,' said the store-keeper. 'Who's it between this time?' asked the farmer. 'Near's I can get at it,' replied the merchant, 'there's Germany on one side and England on the other.' The farmer scratched his head in astonishment, remarking: 'England! England! Why, you don't mean to tell me that old country is running yet!'"

After the illustration of the remoteness of modern America from the war in its earliest days—an illustration which was greeted with recurring waves of laughter and applause—the newspaper man had no trouble. Bringing General Haskell's presided and closed an interesting occasion with a brief word of advice to officers to remember not to magnify out of proportion the sparks that may occasionally fly in Anglo-American relations as the Anglo-American co-operation was necessary in the interests of civilization and humanity Mr. Learoyd was the guest of officer-instructors at the Staff College, while at Camberley.

Mr. Learoyd is taking a holiday at Wadsworth Hall, Arrochar, Staten Island

SOUTH CAROLINA'S NEW LAW SPELLS PROGRESS

Hon. R. A. Cooper, Governor of South Carolina, has written for this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER a special message, calling attention to the legislation recently enacted as evidence of the trend toward progress and fuller development. The Governor's message follows:

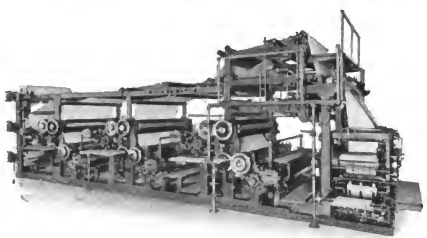
"Since laws are expressions of public sentiment, the present trend in South Carolina may be indicated by calling attention to some of the legislation enacted by the 1919 session of the General Assembly. Among the more important progressive measures just placed upon the statute books are a State-wide compulsory education act; an act providing for vocational training carrying with it an appropriation which will be supplemented by the Federal vocational education fund; an act establishing the budget system for the State government, and various other measures along these general lines.

"During the present calendar year eleven counties of the State will expend approximately $6,000,000 for road work, this aggregate sum being made up of special appropriations by the various counties for road building and repair. In addition to this, the General Assembly appropriated more than $600,000 for the erection or enlargement of public buildings.

"The commercial life of the State, as evidenced by the aggressiveness of the General Assembly, is decidedly wholesome. While the cotton farmer finds himself in a somewhat embarrassing position, he is, nevertheless, in more prosperous condition than formerly. Our chief manufacturing enterprises are operating on full time, I am sure, in better condition than they have ever before enjoyed."

Indianapolis After A. A. C. W. in 1920

(BY TELEGRAPH)



INDIANAPOLIS, June 30.—The Indianapolis Advertising Club sent telegrams to all advertising clubs in the United States advising them that Indianapolis will ask for the 1920 convention of Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. The Executive Committee of the Club is raising $50,000 to entertain the convention.

ADVERTISING GAINS WITH "DRY" WAVE

Prohibition Brings a New Line of Business That Will Mean Millions of Dollars to the Newspapers of the Country

"——— and then the country went dry."

That is going to bring a great many narratives to a close during the next fifty years. Sometimes it will be used with a regretful sigh as it brings back thoughts of days when the country was "wet"; other times it will be a wistful reminder of Jim or Bill who, because it was against the law, hunted for and found companionship only in hidden places; sometimes it will end the narrative of careful planning and fortune within grasp and lost. It will even be put in the middle of the story of some and the second half will be more worth telling because it will be filled with smiles and happiness.

Just what effect prohibition is going to have on the newspapers it is very hard to say, but advertising men generally agree that they are going to be richer for a time at least.

The relationship between the newspapers and liquor has been growing more distant every day for the last fifteen years. Many elements have figured in this change from what was once tolerance at least if not friendship.

Liquor Advertisements Refused

Politics probably stands first on the list of causes and was followed by local sentiment for which politics were responsible. The personal moral element from the standpoint of the publisher or editor probably did not enter seriously into the question until fifteen years ago.

Strangely enough the closing of the doors of newspapers to the liquor interests in many cases started in the business office. Many newspapers, even after adopting a policy against liquor advertising, continued to carry news favorable to the liquor interests.

"Well, what'll you have?" has continued a popular question in those sections of the country that were "dry" and used to it before July 1. It is taking millions of dollars' worth of advertising space to answer that question. The great brewing companies whose distribution was national, have become bigger users of newspaper space than ever before, with their famous "O" lines of beverages (Bevo, Famo, Pablo, etc.). This new line of advertising is welcomed by newspapers that would not accept beer advertisements from the same firms.

Ice Cream Sales Doubling

Hundreds of new firms have also entered the non-intoxicating beverage business and are making a liberal use of newspaper space to introduce their particular brands to the public. The Dallas, Tex., News gives some interesting figures on the effect of prohibition on the cold drink and ice cream business in that city, that has resulted in a heavy line of new advertising. The business has now reached a total of $8,500,000 annually in that city.

This business is divided as follows: Soda fountain fixtures and supplies, $5,-000,000; bottled non-intoxicating beverages, including the "O" lines, $1,000,000; distilled water, $600,000; ice cream, $800,000; ice, $1,000,000. Ice is included because that business is increasing at a high rate under prohibition.

The manager of an ice cream plant is quoted as saying that business is almost doubling annually. A large dealer and distributor of Dallas, who has made a study of the subject, has been quoted as saying that it is only a question of a few years until the soda water fountain business alone will equal the entire sales of beer, wines and whisky as well as the pre-prohibition volume of soda fountain transactions in the nation annually.

Prohibition is going to mean radical changes in all branches of newspaper work. Some persons believe it will make better newspapers. Others believe they will become as dry as the land. The old belief that genius only reaches its full glory when soothed by the cup that cheers and pens to July 1 is going to receive a thorough test, there is no doubt.

Great Gains in New York

Startling results in advertising gains of products directly or indirectly affected favorably by prohibition are disclosed by the figures compiled by the Statistical Department of the New York Evening Post on space measurement in New York newspapers for the month of May.

It shows a net gain on non-intoxicating beverages of almost eight times the amount of total lines of liquor advertising for the month of May, 1918, and candy and gum advertising for May, 1919, shows a gain more than six times the total amount of liquor advertising carried during the same month a year ago. Advertising men generally believe these figures are a fair indication of conditions of returns from an almost new line of business that must prevail for several years at least, or until the people are reiterated in their benefits and uses of the new drinks and sweets which the makers hope will take the place of liquors, beer and wines.

All Papers Affected

The figures show that New York morning newspapers carried: 10,452 lines of liquor advertising during the month of May, 1919, against 4,369 lines for the same month a year ago, a gain of 6,083 lines; 34,192 lines of non-intoxicating beverage advertisements against 12,236 lines for the same period last year, a gain of 21,866 lines; 13,203 lines of candy and gum advertising against 565 lines for the same period a year ago, a gain of 13,205 lines. The only morning paper included in the list that carried candy and gum advertisements in May, 1918, was the American, while the advertisements carried in May, 1919, were distributed among all morning papers.

Evening papers listed carried 6,712 lines of liquor advertising during the month of May, 1919, against 4,226 lines in May, 1918, a gain of 2,486 lines; 53,750 lines of non-intoxicating beverage advertising in May, 1919, against 10,980 lines in 1918, a gain of 42,770 lines; 63,884 lines of candy and gum advertising in May, 1919, against 20,607 in 1918, a gain of 43,277 lines.

Sunday editions listed carried 1,632 lines of liquor advertising in May, 1919, against 65 lines in May, 1918, a gain of 1,567 lines; 3,336 lines of advertising of non-intoxicating beverages in May, 1919, against 665 lines in 1918, a gain of 2,671 lines; 1,398 lines of candy and gum advertising in May, 1919, against 565 in May, 1918, a gain of 833 lines.

Restaurants Buy Space

A notable thing, in view of the contention of hotel keepers and the proprietors of large restaurants that prohibition would have disastrous effects on their business, the figures of the Post show a small net gain in this line of advertising in May this year.

Hotel and restaurant advertisements in morning papers during May, 1919, totalled 50,016 lines against 5,124 in 1918, a loss of 1,108 lines; in Sunday papers, 24,396 lines in May, 1919, against 26,567 lines in May, 1918, a loss of 2,171 lines; in evening papers, 92,730 lines in May, 1919, against 87,865 lines in May, 1918, a gain of 4,865 lines, and net gain in all of 1,586 lines.

AIR ROUTE FOR FIGHT NEWS

U. S. Postal Planes Will Rush Reports of Toledo Combat

The Post Office Department is arranging a special air-mail service between Toledo and New York City for pictures and news stories of the Willard-Dempsey fight on July 4, in time for the New York morning papers of Saturday, according to postal officials at the Newark terminus of the aerial-mail service.

The department, it is said, has obtained a special landing field near the fight arena and will have two or three planes ready to "hop off" with photographic plates and stories as soon as they are ready. It is planned to make the flight to New York in less than five hours, only one stop for gasoline and oil at Bellefonte, Pa.

May Raise N. Y. Subscription Prices

The Publishers' Association of New York may hold a meeting today to discuss the advisability of increasing the prices of New York City newspapers outside the city because of the increase in postal rates which went into effect in the different postal zones, July 1.

U. P. Sending Full Reports to South American Clients—Quick Service

During the visit of Hon. Epitacio Pessoa, president-elect of Brazil, the United Press has had a staff correspondent with him constantly, covering his movements and his public addresses for the South American newspapers in as much detail as the movements of President Wilson are covered for American newspapers. The U. P. is sending a service of several thousand words a day, by cable, to its South American clients, including with the news of the United States, that of Europe, Asia and Africa. The association is proud of its record in transmitting the news of the signing of the treaty to South America in advance of other organizations.

1. P. Company Gives 10% Increase

The International Paper Company and the labor units employed in the manufacture of paper, including the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers and the Brotherhood of Pulp and Sulphate Makers, have come to an agreement providing for a general wage increase averaging ten per cent. This marks the close of the company's labor troubles which began May 12 with a strike at five of the plants.

OHIO FIRST

Ohio is FIRST in pottery products, FIRST in the production of cigar leaf tobacco, FIRST in aviation, and FIRST in the East North Central Division of States in its number of municipalities (52), all reached by railways that make distribution easy.

The evolution and success of every business enterprise is dependent on publicity, but that publicity to be economically effective must first cover a territory showing a high average purchasing capacity and, second, be carried by a medium which has a LOCAL appeal and local confidence.

"Ohio First" answers the first as to territory and the daily newspapers listed below answer the second requirement.

In Ohio everybody can safely be classed in the buying class. Pauperism is frowned upon. A penalty of $50.00 is imposed for bringing a pauper into the State.

From Ohio's manufacturing establishments alone, salaried persons and wage-earners receive annually about $350,000,000.

To participate in this propitious territory, to reap the reward in proportion to the enormous possibilities, the shrewd National Advertiser insists that his business invitations must be kept continuously in the following list of Ohio newspapers.

PATTERSON TESTIFIES IN FORD SUIT

Co-Editor of Chicago Tribune Denies That His Paper Was "Pro-German," But Adds That It Was Not Pro-British

The first principal in the Ford-Chicago Tribune million dollar libel suit to take the stand appeared this week in the person of Captain Joseph Medill Patterson, co-editor of The Tribune, who, with his cousin, Colonel R. R. McCormick, is a defendant. This is the eighth week of the trial.

Captain Patterson stated that the Tribune and President Wilson had always differed on the Mexican problem and still differ. In 1911, at the climax of the Madero revolution, he testified, his paper believed that the Mexicans could solve their own problems. By 1914, however, this opinion underwent a change by reason of the continued disorder and disorganization south of the Rio Grande.

The Tribune editors then became convinced that only armed intervention, such as that employed in Cuba, could bring order out of chaos. The editors believed that such action would be to the interest of the United States and Mexico alike.

Were Not "Pro-British"

"And you thought it would please Germany to have the United States occupied with Mexico?" asked William Lucking, attorney for Henry Ford.

"Yes; I think so."

Captain Patterson would not admit pro-Germanism, though frequently pressed by his inquisitor.

"Well, you were not pro-Ally?" insisted Mr. Lucking.

"It might be said that we were not pro-British," replied Captain Patterson.

He said that he did not see the editorial headed "Ford Is An Anarchist," on which the suit is based, before it went into the paper. He was a National Guardsman and had gone to Springfield following the mobilization of the guard for service on the border.

Didn't "Capitalize" Suit

"We weren't thinking much about newspapers at that time," he said.

Clifford Raymond, who wrote the editorial that branded Ford as an anarchist, was on the stand the day preceding. He told of finding on his desk a telegram from the Tribune's Detroit correspondent which said that the Ford Motor Company would not reinstate their men who did border duty or assist their families in any way.

He denied that the Tribune had set out to capitalize the libel suit or that he had said to a group of club friends that the short editorial would be worth $2,000,000 in advertising.

He was asked to explain an editorial attacking Theodore Roosevelt for utterances a week after the Lusitania was sunk.

"We deplored Mr. Roosevelt's utterances at that particular time when the Government was deciding whether or not it was to enter the great struggle against Germany," he said.

Watson Joins Star-Telegram

HOW A MILLION MEN GOT ACQUAINTED WITH THE SOUTH

By W. A. Elliott,

Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union

During the war a million or more men from the North and the West who had never visited the South, many of whom had erroneous ideas about our climate, about our negro situation and about our industrial life, were stationed in Southern camps for weeks and some for months at a time. Many of them visited more than one camp and they became well acquainted with Southern people, and I believe that at least in most cases the prejudice that may have enlisted against the South was wiped away. This in my opinion will mean that many men from other parts of the country will look to the South for their future homes and that we will gain many substantial citizens who will do much toward further developing the industries of the Southern States and in establishing new ones.

FOR INTERCHANGE OF STAFF MEMBERS

British Committee of Publishers Formed to Consider Editor Blumenfeld's Plan for Better Understanding Between English and U. S. Press

Ralph D. Blumenfeld, editor of the London Daily Express, whose plan for an interchange of staff men for short periods between leading British and American newspapers was presented in the recent Victory Number of Editor and Publisher, has already started the movement in England looking to the attainment of that purpose.

In a cablegram to his New York representative he states that a committee of leading publishers of the British Isles has been formed, for the purpose of considering the proposition and of conferring with a committee of American publishers on the details. It is anticipated that this American committee will shortly be formed, through the initiative of Hon. Frank P. Glass, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, who has expressed his cordial approval of Mr. Blumenfeld's idea.

Old Postage Standards Return

The two-cent postage stamp came into its own again to carry first class mail and the three-cent stamp went out of service on July 1. The one-cent post card also came back. Since the three-cent stamp was issued an extra $15,000,000 has been collected on first class mail. The 1912 revenue act extending the franking privilege to the A. E. F. will continue. Three-cent stamps which have not been used may be changed for twos and ones.

Will Distribute Peace News

The Government's Committee on Public Information will retain its American headquarters in the Whitehall building in New York City during the next five or six weeks, in charge of Perry Arnold, acting director, in order to supply newspapers of this country with news received by cable from the Official Peace Mission Bureau in Paris.

Two thousand one hundred and forty-four Southern towns and cities have newspapers.

DIFFERENT SEEDS DEMAND DIFFERENT SOIL

INDIANA Newspapers, like Indiana farms, are productive and profitable producers of wealth for Advertisers who cultivate them consistently and intelligently.

NATIONAL Advertisers desiring to reach Indiana's 1,131,375 thrifty inhabitants can get quickest recognition by appealing to the people through their home papers.

DURING the war Indiana's 215,485 crop-producing and stock-raising farms did their "bit" and earned rich reward, as is testified by the savings banks.

INDIVIDUALLY and collectively, Indiana people have money to spend for home improvements and for everything that contributes to home comfort and individual content.

A SPRING try-out campaign in the following list of Newspapers will prove that Indiana is responsive to any reasonable appeal, and quickly responsive.

NO HOME in Indiana is beyond the reach of these closely read Newspapers, and by using them the Advertisers can overthrow and outclimb a competitor who does not.

AND this is but natural. Indiana people are guided mainly in their purchases by their own papers, because in their home papers they place implicit confidence.

LEE SYNDICATE BUYS STATE JOURNAL

Daily Paper at Wisconsin's Capital Added to Strong List—I. U. Sears Is Business Manager—R. L. Jones to Enter Larger Field

MADISON, Wis., July 1.—The Wisconsin State Journal today was sold by Richard Lloyd Jones to the Lee Syndicate. Mr. Jones announces that he intends entering a larger newspaper field and will be accompanied by T. F. Me-

I. U. SEARS
Business Manager Wisconsin State Journal.

Pherson, business manager of the State Journal. The sale was effected by Harwell & Cannon, newspaper brokers, of New York.

E. P. Adler, president of the Lee Newspaper Syndicate and publisher of the Davenport (Ia.) Daily Times, will be president of the Wisconsin State Journal Company; James F. Powell, secretary of the Lee Newspaper Syndicate and publisher of the Ottumwa (Ia.) Courier, will be vice-president; A. M. Brayton, publisher and editor of the La Crosse, (Wis.) Tribune and Leader-Press, will be publisher and editor of the State Journal, dividing his time between the two cities.

I. U. Sears, business manager of the Davenport Daily Times, will be business manager of the State Journal, while Frank H. Burgess, business manager of the La Crosse Tribune and Leader-Press, will be a director and stockholder.

Mr. Brayton has been continuously engaged in newspaper publication for twenty years. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, class of '97, and has spent most of his life in Wisconsin journalism.

Lee Syndicate History

Mr. Sears began his newspaper career in the circulation department of the Chicago Daily News, and the Chicago Record. Seventeen years ago he became circulation manager of the Davenport Daily Times, of which newspaper he was subsequently made business manager, a post which he leaves after a successful administration to become business manager of the Wisconsin State Journal. Mr. Sears is a figure of note among the circulation men of the country, having served in 1918 as president of the International Circulation Managers' Association.

The Lee Newspaper syndicate was founded in 1899 by A. W. Lee, and was originally composed of a group of Iowa evening newspapers, comprising the Davenport Times, Ottumwa Courier and Muscatine Journal. The success which these papers attained encouraged Mr. Lee and his associates to further extend their activities, and in 1907 they purchased the La Crosse Tribune, La Crosse, Wis., and the Hannibal (Mo.) Courier-Post. In 1917 the La Crosse Tribune purchased the Leader-Press and were combined as the Tribune and Leader-Press. Following the death of Mr. Lee in 1907, Mr. Adler, then vice-president, became president of the Lee Syndicate, and James F. Powell became vice-president and secretary, and both have been continued in office to date.

Built Up by Mr. Jones

Eight years ago Richard Lloyd Jones purchased the Wisconsin State Journal, going to Madison from Collier's Weekly, of which he was associate editor for nine years. Prior to his Collier's connection, Mr. Jones was editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

The Wisconsin State Journal played a large part in the patriotic education of a state which numbered among its population a large percentage of hyphenated citizens. Mr. Jones organized the Wisconsin Patriotic Press Association, which joined all the patriotic English newspapers of the state into a powerful force for Americanization.

It is understood that the Wisconsin State Journal, under Mr. Jones's administration, developed commercially to the extent that Mr. Jones transferred his stock to the Lee Syndicate on terms that were better than two to one of the par value of the capital stock of the company.

In this development Mr. Jones was ably assisted by T. F. McPherson, his business manager.

Texas leads the South with daily newspapers, having 108. Mississippi is lowest on the list with a total of 15.

ANTICIPATES NORTHCLIFFE'S SPEEDY RECOVERY

Joseph T. Gleason, American representative of the Amalgamated Press, Limited, the corporation which publishes the great list of periodicals known as the Northcliffe group, sailed yesterday for England. He will remain abroad for about two months. In the prewar period Mr. Gleason spent someime each summer with Lord Northcliffe, and with Mr. Sutton, executive head of the organization, planning the details of the work here in connection with the various publications.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER requested Mr. Gleason, on the eve of his departure, to make some statement in regard to rumors current here as to the serious nature of Lord Northcliffe's illness, and the many conjectures as to the nature of the recent operation for a throat affection. Mr. Gleason said:

"I have a letter from Lord Northcliffe, written shortly before he returned from France. It is optimistic to a degree. He did not consider the impending operation as at all serious. He has recently purchased a new home and is greatly interested in planning contemplated improvements in connection with it. As always, he is in close touch with all of his great business interests. I have reason to hope for his early restoration to his usual good health."

Booming Business in New Jersey

In every branch of retail trade, reports come of flood-tide trade. Records are being made in volume of sales despite high prices. The cry is for high grade goods—and still higher grade.

Factories, stores, houses are bringing higher prices and bigger rentals than were ever before known.

People are flocking to New Jersey to place themselves with one of the many prosperous, great industries. The demand for homes is unprecedented.

All of which, good friend Advertiser, we put in evidence to prove that money is flowing freely in this wonderful little state, and if you want a share of it you should

THE SOUTH'S NEW DAY

THE South is not "newly rich." She is merely utilizing and developing the assets which have always been hers. And this accounts for the magnificent prosperity her people are now enjoying and which is but the harbinger of what is to come.

It is fortunate for the nation that the South is now coming into her own in a material way—fortunate that her long dormant resources are now being conceived into national wealth.

For Southern prosperity cannot be fenced in. It overflows the old boundaries of states and sections, and enriches all who have the vision to understand and to participate in this great industrial development. The products of her soil, and of her forests, mines and factories, now made available for her own people and for the people of the world, bring to her, properly, a flood of gold. But they add as well to the sum of the nation's wealth, and become a part of the basic treasure of the Republic.

In this new day of the world, which witnesses the passing of the old order, a revivified Southland is playing a momentous part. The old lethargy is no more, the old barriers to a full and free commercial expansion have been destroyed. In the industrial transformation now going on the South loses nothing—she merely finds herself. She sacrifices no cherished tradition, abandons no high ideal. The grandsons of Pickett's men hold to their heritage of chivalry and courage. In the great war for world freedom they have added new lustre to a record which has always been spotless. Southern women are quite as beautiful and charming as were their grandmothers who ministered with unmatched devotion to the soldiers who fought under Lee. They are worshipped as of old. The day of chivalry has not passed in the South. But the day of commercial and industrial greatness has dawned.

The publishers of Southern newspapers who are to meet in convention at Asheville within a few days have ample reason for pride and satisfaction—pride in the mastery of unrivaled service to the section's cause in the war and satisfaction because of the turn of the wheel of life which brings the South into the enjoyment of its inheritance. Southern newspapers are growing rapidly into the full stature of dominant American publications. They are putting behind them the old, slow processes. They are marching with the procession, will up toward the front. They are reflecting Southern life and aspirations and interpreting the new order in the world's life with understanding and clarity. They have made great forward strides within a few years. They will attain to new and higher levels of accomplishment.

IT often stated that salaries of editors and news writers have remained, during the war period, practically at the old standards, in spite of the fact that a dollar is worth today only about half as much as in 1914. The reporter or copy desk man who earned $40 a week four years ago is, in many instances, earning little more today. The average of increase is very small. To be logical, this increase should be one hundred per cent. Such many working newspaper men are inclined to demand increases, however, which would match the advanced costs of living. This policy has been left to organized workers. Publishers are having their troubles meeting mounting costs, and should show a deep appreciation of the spirit of these men, who are content to labor for smaller pay than skilled men in the mechanical departments receive. This appreciation, obviously, should take the form of salary increases up to the limit of the ability of the publications to pay. Editorial and news men are, proverbially, heedless in money matters. But they are human. They have dependents, they have personal needs. They must earn a living wage.

LOCAL merchants are not alone responsible for the "heavy" and "light" advertising days in newspapers. National advertisers often specify publication of their copy on Thursday and Friday only—when their products are on sale every day of the week. General advertisers and agency men should realize the value of a better balance of advertising volume in the newspapers, and should co-operate to bring this about.

THE TEST AT VANCOUVER

WHAT should be thought of the matter if a committee of employers, whose men were on strike, should insist upon placing a censor in the newspaper offices to decide upon what news should be printed of that strike?

In the Vancouver strike the printers insisted that one of their number should censor all strike news before it could be published. The alternative for the publishers was "the cessation of work" by the union printers.

The Vancouver strike affected every line of industry in the city. All business men, all citizens, were parties in interest. Yet no demand was made by organized bodies of business men that the power of press censorship should be given to them.

It may be held that the comparison is not fair, in that the printers were acting as employees of the newspapers, and could not observe good faith to their union if they aided and abetted in the publication of garbled news of the strike.

Business men, the merchants, the advertisers, were all concerned quite as directly. The integrity of the newspapers is as vital to them, for business reasons, as to the employers of own employees. They represent the principal sources of the newspapers' revenues. In turn, the publication—without interruption or alien control—of the newspapers is essential to them if they are to continue in business. Yet these men made no effort to exercise a censorship over the papers. That unhappy adventure was left to the union printers.

The test at the head of the I. T. U. acted energetically to put an end to this impossible situation. The papers are now being issued—without the aid of a censor.

We hear much of capitalistic control of our newspapers. In almost all instances this talk is pure moonshine, without any substantial basis whatever. The newspaper which should submit to class control, either by capitalists or by laboring men, would quickly lose all importance as a newspaper, and would have no influence either for good or evil. The effort at Vancouver was to apply, openly, on behalf of the labor unions, a press gag which agitators have long contended that the capitalists secretly use.

The effort has failed—properly, logically, happily. The cause of unionism has, unfortunately, been injured because of this mad attempt to "socialize" the press—in the interests of a class. But the level-headed leaders of the labor union hosts will lose no opportunity to denounce as un-American and unthinkable this outburst of Sovietism. The test has been met, apparently. It is not expected that other publishers will be compelled to meet the ugly situation which faced the newspapers of Vancouver—for union printers, as a rule, are highly intelligent and balanced men, who hold contracts inviolate and who have no use for professional agitators.

ARE you advertising your advertising as effectively as your biggest merchant is advertising his store and his goods?

OVER THE TOP

SOMETIMES facts and figures are so eloquent that comment is in the nature of an anti-climax. One must feel that this is true when considering the gratifying gains in advertising lineage made by the New York newspapers during the month of May over the same period of a year ago.

The Times printed during May, in the week-day issues, a total of 1,669,932 lines of advertising, as compared with 1,210,616 in May, 1918. The Sunday issue carried 591,676 lines as against 464,535 of May last year. This shows a net gain of 586,457 lines.

The World, week-day morning issue, carried, in May, 1919, 1,601,328 lines of advertising as compared with 1,347,380 in same period last year. The evening World printed in May, 1919, 725,742 lines; in same period last year, 482,165. The Sunday World, in May, 1919, carried 535,946 lines; in same period last year, 458,828. Here we have a net gain of 604,643 lines.

The American printed in May, 1919, 905,192 lines; in May, 1918, 837,292. The Evening Journal, May, 1919, 868,787 lines; in May, 1918, 691,809. The Sunday American, May, 1919, 449,992 lines; in May, 1918, 372,863. Total net gain, 242,007 lines.

The Herald, morning, May, 1919, 788,450 lines; May, 1918, 596,721. Sunday, 362,054, as against 275,396. Evening Telegram, 907,412, compared with 758,892. Sunday afternoon issue, 119,912 as compared with 92,690 in May of last year. Total net gain, 449,130 lines.

The Sun, morning week-day issue, May, 1919, 583,340 lines; May, 1918, 319,324. Sunday issue, 192,390 as against 125,702. Evening Sun, 732,380, compared with 498,741 in May, 1918. Total net gain, 564,343 lines.

The Tribune, week-day morning, May, 1919, 730,402 lines; May, 1918, 377,906. Sunday issue, May, 1919, 228,638, as compared with 136,394. Total net gain, 444,740 lines.

The Globe, six-day Evening, May, 1919, 786,704 lines; May, 1918, 446,697. Total gain, 342,007 lines.

Evening Post, six-day evening May, 1918, 418,168; May, 1918, 379,568. Total net gain, 38,200 lines.

Brooklyn Standard Union, week-day evening, May, 1919, 623,750 lines; May, 1918, 460,003. Sunday issue, May, 1919, 139,580; May, 1918, 94,560. Total net gain, 188,767 lines.

Brooklyn Eagle, six-day evening, May, 1919, 1,048,962; May, 1918, 779,239. Sunday, May, 1919, 349,700; May, 1918, 276,672. Total net gain, 342,751 lines.

Thus six morning, eight evening and nine Sunday newspapers of New York and Brooklyn show a combined gain of 3,981,255 lines in May, 1919, a combined gain of 3,976,664 lines in May, 1919, to the Statistical Department of the New York Evening Post.

The figures constitute in themselves an impressive editorial presentation of "the state of business" just now with newspapers.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Washington correspondent notes much opposition to Senator Cummins' bill for the establishment of a Government Publicity Bureau—opposition based upon the confusion sure to result through linking departmental "publicity" with departmental advertising. It is believed that such a bill, creating an advertising bureau and policy for the Government, and divorcing advertising from publicity, would find general acceptance and have an excellent chance of passage. Senator Cummins may render a real service to the nation by so amending his bill that this distinction may be made definite.

GEN. PEYTON C. MARCH, chief of staff of our Army, has won the high regard of all Washington correspondents through his frankness with them and his confidence in their judgment as to the treatment of the news which he made available to them during the progress of the war. He has contributed, through this policy, to the establishment of right relations between the army staff and the press. No national interest was ever endangered through his personal contact here with the correspondents. National morale was strengthened. The confidence of the people in their sources of news was augmented.

PERSONALS

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Robert M. Collins, chief of the London Bureau of the Associated Press, has been awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by Middlebury College.

Lucien Hubbard, formerly night city editor of the New York Tribune, has become associate editor of the Vitagraph Film Company, New York.

Evyling Carpenter, reporter on the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has resigned and gone to California.

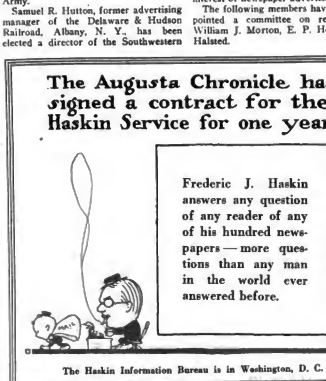
Mr. Bishop for five years was a member of the staff of the Ferry-Hanly Company in its Kansas City office.



Lieut. Philip Burbank has returned to Boston after spending eight months in the tank service in France, and has joined the selling staff of the Thomas Dreier Service. Mr. Burbank was with the Hearst organization in Boston, both in the editorial and the promotion end.

6-PT. LEAGUE AIDS NEW AGENTS

Nomes Committees to Deal with Them and Help Recognition

Because of the entrance of many new agencies into the field and the desire of its members to obtain quicker and more uniform action on the question of recognition than now prevails, the Six-Point League of New York has appointed a committee to investigate the credit and status of new agencies and not only recommend action to members but also help and facilitate securing recognition of these agents with other publishers' organizations, thereby furthering the interest of newspaper advertising.

The following members have been appointed a committee on recognition: William J. Morton, E. P. Hotz, H. G. Halsted.

FLOOD GATES OF GOLD OPENED TO SOUTH

the movement in all departments has been in the one direction—forward.

Building Through Faith

The new prosperity of the South is not the direct result of the war, as some persons have contended, but is the reward for more than ten years of education, hard work and advertising which was made possible solely by the South's traditional faith in the South.

Experts on the conditions deny that boom conditions exist or that the flood gates of prosperity have yet been opened wide. They claim that the dawn of their new day is just beginning and that it was merely hurried by the war and not created by it.

Large and small factories are springing up in every part of the South for the manufacture of finished articles of trade at the bases of supply of raw products. The launching of new enterprises that will help the South take her place in the markets of the world are chronicled daily, but the faith of the South and the heart of the South is still in the soil and climatic conditions.

A Golden Era

When the United States Government began to pour millions into the South in carrying on preparations for the coming of the Northern soldiers and mobilizations of the South's own heroes, resources and industries for their great share in the world conflict, that land had already entered its golden era.

The mills of Birmingham and other industrial centers were working overtime; New Orleans, Baltimore, Savannah, Norfolk, Jacksonville, Charleston, Galveston and other gulf and coast cities were already reaching into the trade centers of South America for the business that rightly should come to the United States; her coal mines had been brought to a state of high development; fortunes were flowing daily from the oil wells of half a dozen States; diversified farming had become an established fact; dairy and stock farms had sprung up throughout the land, and Memphis, Atlanta, Nashville, Richmond, Fort Worth, Dallas, Houston, Louisville, Lexington, Macon, Augusta and dozens of other cities had become busy marts, filled with plenty and in every way comparable to the half-century-prosperous cities of the North.

Towns Are Transformed

The South is today dotted with bustling towns of from 3,000 to 6,000 persons that ten years ago were struggling, ill-kept villages of a few hundred persons. In many cases, these new cities have no "war factories," received no "war contracts," and their development and prosperity were affected only indirectly by the great conflict, as they are the natural result of the introduction of diversified farming and the introduction of the most modern methods of agricultural expansion.

The boll weevil, the great enemy of the cotton grower, has played an important part in this new development of the land. Ten years ago the small cotton grower gave all of his attention to that crop. When his crop failed, or prices were down, he experienced a year of poverty. The introduction of the dairy cow for commercial purposes took place first, about eight years, in an effort to save the Southern farmer from poverty, following the ravages of the boll weevil.

The question of pasturing and feeding the dairy herds revolutionized methods, introduced diversified farming, brought about the beginning of the destruction of the soil, and placed the Southern farmer in the class that has money to spend all the year round—every year—and who demands the best of all things in life, including good schools, good roads, news of the world the day it happens, automobiles, electric lights, amusements, electric irons and safety razors.

Increase of Creameries

There is one State in the South which did not have a single creamery eight years ago that today has 23. It is only one example; there are many other States like it. This development is only starting, for, with its rapidly increasing fields of alfalfa, the South is still unable to supply even its own demands and is still buying mid-West butter, although it has the longest pasturing season of any section of the country.

Pure-bred cattle were rare in the South ten years ago, but during the last three months $300,000 worth of pure-breds were sold at auction sale at Memphis, and this was only one of many of a series of sales that have been conducted in every section.

When free range was cut off in the West, some cattle men were attracted to the South by climatic conditions that assure a long pasturing season and a large carrying capacity per acre.

More Cattle and Hogs

Cattle and hog-raising has developed rapidly in the ten-year period. The big meat packers have already established plants, and smaller independent plants are being erected in some communities. The cattle and hogs now bring highest market prices, and prices are not shaded as they were a few years ago.

One Southern State in which a buyer could not have found a single car of hogs fit for market seven years ago, shipped 65,000 head in the month of March. Hog-raising has made unusual strides in a short period, partly because of the climatic conditions that make possible two litters a year.

Billions from Crops

Cotton is and will continue the staple crop of the South, but it is no longer depending upon it, tobacco and sugar cane. The crops of corn, wheat, oats, soya beans, potatoes, cowpeas, alfalfa, clover, vetch, fruits, rice and lespedeza are increasing each season.

Thirty bushels of wheat has been harvested to the acre; there are lands where seven cuttings of alfalfa have been made in a year; one farmer is reported to have sowed wheat in the fall, planted corn in the stubblefield and gathered the second crop before the first frost.

A total valuation of $14,090,769,000 has been placed upon the 1918 crop of the entire United States by the Bureau of Crop Estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and a valuation of 55,063,-471,000 on the crop of the South alone, more than one-third of the wealth produced by the soil, and experts say that she has only started—that less than 35 per cent of her best land is under cultivation.

Millions for Roads

Throughout the South the one-teacher school, usually a shack, is giving way to modern community schools located at central points and housed in buildings of brick and concrete.

Improvement of schools is keeping pace with the development of a comprehensive system of good roads. The newspapers of the South tell the story of this movement daily as a part of the regular news and it has ceased to be unusual news.

Reading at random we find: From January 1 to June 1 this year, 65 Texas counties voted more than $60,000,000 for good roads; eight townships of Union county, South Carolina, have voted a total of $1,175,000 for road improvements this year; Gov. Davis of Virginia has called a special session of the legislature to take up the question of good roads; Glynn county, Georgia, in a general election, voted $1,850,000 for good roads, and not a dissenting vote was recorded; McDowell county, North Carolina, has completed plans to spend $300,000 in the construction of a central highway.

Many Markets Are Strong

The Birmingham iron market is feeling the effects of the new prosperity that is coming with reconstruction and reports a noticeable improvement, and many Northern buyers in the field. Many new coke ovens are under construction and the iron and steel industry of the South is already stepping forward to meet half-way the assured prosperity of peace.

Representatives of the great lumber industry of the South are already in Europe, and their mills at home are already starting to supply their share and more of the materials necessary to rebuild the sections devastated by the war. Probably the most significant happening in recent months was the action of the Cotton Convention, recently held in New Orleans, in organizing an Export Corporation with an authorized capitalization of $100,000,000.

To Seek World's Trade

Stock ownership is restricted to Southerners, and the purpose of the organization is to be the expanding of the cotton markets of the world. This is to be done in various ways: first, by lending money to aid in rehabilitating the spinning industry, particularly in the Old World.

Right now practically the entire South is giving its attention to the housing and homebuilding problems which are among the most serious with which the country must deal. Every commercial body of the South has had the matter before them in some way, and in many cases associations have been organized to finance homebuilding operations.

The immediate return to the South from the millions spent by the Government during the war is in no way comparable to the lasting good that is already resulting from the first-hand knowledge of the lands, opportunities and its people gained by the thousands of men sent there from the North and the West for military training during the war. The South opened its doors to them and many of them, looking for fortune and happiness in attainment, are today turning their eyes southward.

People Demand the Best

During the war period the railroads of the South were brought to a high point of efficiency to meet the demands of troops, munitions and farm products that insure a transportation system that will keep step with the prosperity of the land it serves. Ships are now plying from the land's port cities on the gulf and Atlantic coast to South America and Europe. The South is entering the new era to win

Bank deposits have trebled in many sections of the South during the last few years. Her people have money to spend and they are able to demand the very best. A few days ago a popular-priced eatinplace in Louisville, that was established just about a year ago, discarded its gas ranges and equipment and installed all electrical appliances.

DECIDES STATUS OF NEWSBOYS IN LAW

Commissioner Roper Says Youngsters Under 16 May Be Employed in Early Hours Away from Office of Publication

Through the efforts of members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association an opinion has been secured from the U. S. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Hon. Daniel C. Roper, as to the application of the Child Labor Law to the employment of newsboys and carriers.

In response to an inquiry addressed to him by Congressman I. C. Copley, Mr. Roper says:

"My Dear Mr. Copley: In response to your personal inquiry concerning tax on the employment of child labor and its relation to newspaper carriers, I have the honor to advise you that under the provisions of Section 1200, Title XII, Revenue Act of 1918, the tax is imposed on every person operating a mine or quarry in which children under sixteen years of age are employed or permitted to work, and on every person operating a mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment in which children under 14 are employed or in which children between 14 and 16 are permitted to work more than eight hours in any day, or more than six days in any week, or before 6 a. m. or after 7 p. m.

"A newspaper publishing company is a manufacturing establishment within the meaning of the law, and the employment of children in newspapers with the manufacturing process contrary to the standards laid down would subject the person operating the establishment to the tax imposed.

"It is held, however, that the employment of children in the distribution of papers outside and away from the manufacturing establishment does not come within the taxation intent of the law."

This ruling clarifies Section 1,200 of the Revenue Act of 1918. Its effect will be to establish the status of newsboys and carriers under the law. Carriers under 16 cannot be employed before 6 a.m. in the mailing rooms as helpers in stuffing or similar work, but may deliver their papers as usual.

As white waste is generally used for wrappers it is estimated that the pink wrapper plan would involve an additional expense for most newspapers which would be considerable.

No special railroad rates have been granted to delegates this year. The matter of hotel accommodations has been brought to the attention of members, with the admonition to reserve rooms in advance at the Grove Park Inn, as it is expected that convention week will test its capacity.

PUBLIC ACCEPTS 5-CENT SUNDAY "P. M." PRICE

New York Evening Telegram Satisfied with Month's Experiment, Which May Mean Starting of Other Sunday Afternoon Editions

Can a Sunday afternoon metropolitan newspaper be sold successfully for five cents in a city that is used to paying no more than two cents for its evening newspapers?

The New York Evening Telegram, which has been trying the experiment since June 8, has answered the question, affirmatively, to its own satisfaction—a piece of news which should prove interesting to the proprietors of numerous six-day newspapers in other cities who are known to be contemplating similar ventures.

The prevailing belief among these publishers, and they include men who own six-day newspapers in St. Louis, New Orleans, Buffalo, Chicago, and Detroit, is that, owing to the present high cost of paper and wages, it is not worth while to enter the Sunday afternoon field unless they can sell their papers for five cents a copy.

Inquiries for New Service

A number of them have been sufficiently interested in the Evening Telegram's experiment to ask for quotations on Sunday afternoon telegraph news services and to make other tentative plans for issuing Sunday afternoon papers, if the Telegram won out.

"We are very well satisfied with results since we raised the price of the Sunday Evening Telegram from three to five cents," S. H. Summers, managing editor, tells EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "There has been some falling off in circulation, naturally, at the start, but it does not affect our belief that the venture has proved practical. We are confident we will pick up rapidly from now on the circulation we have lost, and it is not large."

When the Telegram raised the price of its Sunday afternoon edition to five cents, it printed an editorial, giving the reasons why. The editorial read, in part:

"High cost of production. Nothing else.

"Newsprint paper, formerly $42 a ton, now costs $96 a ton.

"Wages have been raised in the various departments. Substantial increases have been awarded linotype operators, stereotypers, photo engravers and the lower grades in the press room, mailing and circulation departments.

"Work on Sunday commands double pay.

"The Evening Telegram also realizes that newsboys and newsdealers are as much affected by the high cost of living as any others and that they are entitled to a fair allowance for their day's labor. More favorable rates have been arranged and new and important adjuncts are coming, so at best but a moiety of the increased price will go to relieve the burden of production.

"With this frank statement of affairs, we ask the consideration of the reading public and confidently await its verdict."

The Origin of Edition

The Evening Telegram began printing a Sunday afternoon edition, July 16, 1911, after the owner, James Gordon Bennett, had become convinced that there was a profitable field for it. Says the Evening Telegram editorial previously quoted:

"He put the case in substance thus: The daily papers go to press about three o'clock in the morning. There are no afternoon or evening papers on Sunday. Therefore from three o'clock Sunday morning until three o'clock Monday morning, twenty-four hours, no matter what happens, the public can know nothing of it until the papers are circulated Monday morning.

"The idea that Sunday is a day of rest when nothing happens has been dissipated."

Other metropolitan newspapers which now print Sunday afternoon editions are the Washington Times, the Baltimore News, the Boston Record, and the Westerly (R. I.) Times. The Westerly Times, however, does not print an edition on Saturday, its owner, former Governor George V. Utter, being a Seventh Day Adventist.

The Augusta Chronicle is the only Georgia paper in the second century of its existence. It was established in 1785.

HUMORISTS IN ANNUAL GAY "CONVENTION"

Hold to Unwritten Law of Accomplishing Nothing Except Elect Officers and Select Next Year's Meeting Place—Alexander Chosen Head

PHILADELPHIA, June 28, 1919.—The thirteenth annual convention of the American Press Humorists' Association ended in this city today with an unblemished record.

"Grif" Alexander

The members accomplished absolutely nothing in their five days of meeting. Oh, yes—they elected Grif Alexander, of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, president, and named Indianapolis as the next meeting place. That ends the news feature of the story.

The town loosened up in its greeting to the delegates. At least four good-sized clubs held meetings in their honor and the local "government" assigned the City Statistician to stick close to the visitors. Incidentally, the visitors admitted that the statistician—Dr. F. J Cattell—was some funmaker himself.

Plenty of Entertainment

The Kiwanis Club held a meeting that overflowed into the Bellevue-Stratford hall on Tuesday at noon, the Rotary Club repeated the greeting on Wednesday at noon, the Poor Richard Club did the honors on Thursday at noon and the Pen and Pencil Club had a special program on Thursday night starting at 11 o'clock.

But the best party of all was the association's banquet last night. Everybody said something, everybody laughed, and Tom Daly and Grif Alexander cried.

The tear stuff was the only depressing incident of the convention and served to emphasize the full hearts of the humorists. H. U. Higginbotham of Detroit announced that two trifling gifts had been chosen by the convention for Tom Daly and Grif Alexander. He forthwith handed to Daly a five-pound box of sweet things for Tom's growing family of seven and to Alexander a comfortable looking pipe. Daly and Alexander acknowledged the gifts in proper terms of gratitude.

Delegates Show Gratitude

Higginbotham, however, was not through with the presentation, and he would not let the formal addresses of gratitude halt the presentation ceremony. He proceeded to present to Daly an order on a big local department store for $50 as further expression of the delegate's gratitude for Daly's work in preparing for the convention, and he did similarly for Alexander.

Daly couldn't stand it. He withdrew from the table to a window nearby. His frame shook as the tears welled up from fast-swelling eyes. His handkerchief was inadequate, so he commandeered his sleeve. Alexander glanced at his fellow-beneficiary and hopped over to his side. They conferred.

Should they make another speech of gratitude on account of the second gifts or should they not? They decided on a course that would probably get over all right and they returned to the table. Daly wiping the tears from Alexander's eyes.

"Gentlemen," they began, "we are dumb gratefel."

"Looks as if the dam's busted," retorted Higginbotham, and the banquet proceeded.

Chestnut Tree Plan "Busted"

The association's annual ceremony of planting a chestnut tree did not come off this time according to program. Christopher Morley, of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, preceded the funmen to Penn Treaty Park, which had been chosen for the planting. Nobody was there but Dr. Cattell, who was named to accept the tree for the city.

They waited and waited, the little tree all ready to be returned to its nature. Finally Morley and Cattell, fearful lest the ceremony might have to be postponed for lack of participants, took the matter in their own hands and planted the tree

J. U. Higginbotham of Detroit was elected vice president; Kin Hubbard, of Indianapolis, secretary; Don Herold, of New York, chairman of the Executive Board, and A. J. Taylor, Los Angeles; R. L. Pemberton, of St. Mary's O., Charles Leedy, Youngstown, O., and J. A. Waldron, New York, members of the executive board.

GEN. DU PONT HOST TO N. Y. AD MEN

Work of American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers Discussed at Luncheon at Bankers' Club—Miss Kellor Reports Progress

Gen. Coleman Du Pont was host at a luncheon for advertising men of New York on Monday. The luncheon was at the Bankers' Club on the 39th floor of Gen. Du Pont's Equitable Building. Its purpose was to bring about a better understanding of the plans and objects of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers.

After a short talk by Gen. DuPont, in which he assured the fifty or more advertising men present of his full faith in the mission of Americanization of our foreign-born peoples, Miss Frances A. Kellor, president of the association, delivered a most interesting address. She told of the effort that was being made to place the foreign language publications on a business basis which would enable them to prosper in the American way and to develop among their readers a demand for American products in preference to exclusively old-world commodities.

She related some of the difficulties faced in doing business with newspapers, many of them accustomed to making rates in a haphazard way and to keeping circulation facts under cover. Great progress toward sounder business methods has already been made, according to Miss Kellor. Publications able to afford the expense were being urged to join the A. B. C., while others were asked to submit sworn statements subject to verification by the auditors of the association.

A general discussion followed, in which suggestions were made for the development of the work on progressive lines. James O'Shaughnessey, executive secretary of the A. A. A. A., gave a brief talk in which he assured Miss Kellor of all possible co-operation from the agencies in the matters of standardizing rate cards and contracts.

READY FOR WATER POWER BILLS

Congress Believed About to Give Attention to Needy Legislation

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Western and Southern Senators and Representatives, pressing for water-power legislation to unlock the resources of their states, expect to win their fight in Congress during the next few weeks, after years of effort. The support of Western and Southern members seems to be rentering around the Esch and Jones bills with the expectation that they will be consolidated.

Out of the consolidation the supporters of water-power legislation expect to get a measure which, being the same as was approved by Congress at the last session, will still be indorsed by Secretaries Lane, Houston and Baker, who compose the Interdepartmental Water-power Committee.

T. HART GIVEN DEAD AT 66 YEARS

Chief Proprietor of Post and Sun Rose from Errand Boy to Place in Front Rank of American Financiers and Industrial Leaders

PITTSBURGH, June 28.—Thomas Hartley Given, owner of the Pittsburgh Post and Sun, died suddenly tonight. He began his career as errand boy in the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, later becoming its president. He was 66 years old.

Mr. Given was prominently identified with the business and industrial interests of Pittsburgh, and for years had been a financial leader and pioneer in the development of the city along many lines.

Mr. Given, among his other numerous activities, was president of the Farmers' National Bank; president of the American Window Glass Company, the Post Publishing Company, the Sun Publishing Company, the Allegheny Plate Glass Company, the Suburban Rapid Transit Street Railway Company; vice-president of the Reliance Life Insurance Company, a member of the Pittsburg Clearing House Committee, and a director of the Crucible Steel Company of America, Gulf Oil Corporation, Pressed Steel Car Company and Baragua Sugar Company.

Mr. Given became chief owner of the Post and Sun on November 25, 1911, and since then had given a large part of his time to the newspapers, in addition to his many other interests, although the active management has been vested in A. E. Braun, vice-president and general manager.

Under Mr. Given's ownership, no money nor pains have been spared in the improvement of the Post and Sun. New news services were added and machinery installed and special attention given to promoting the interests of the community in educational and civic ways, as well as industrially. Politically the Post and Sun have waged vigorous warfare against factionalism, and it has kept watch on the public service of the community with a readiness to aid in constructive suggestions as well as to condemn what it has believed to have been wrong.

W. M. CLEMENS JOINS ATLANTA GEORGIAN

Prominent Southern Newspaperman Becomes Managing Editor of Mr. Hearst's Dixie Daily—Has Held Many Important Posts

W. M. CLEMENS has been appointed managing editor of the Atlanta Georgian and American. He entered upon his new duties July 1. Mr. Clemens has been, for the past three years, general secretary of the Mobile Chamber of Commerce, the organization to which the citizens of Mobile accord the chief credit for the recent tremendous growth of that city. Mobile has, within two years, added twenty-five per cent. to its population and trebled its payrolls.

W. M. CLEMENS.

W. M. Clemens entered the newspaper field in Louisville in 1895. A little later he joined the Cincinnati Post, becoming city editor. He was called to Indianapolis subsequently, where he served as managing editor of the Sentinel until that paper was absorbed by the News. He then went South, becoming general manager and managing editor of the Memphis News Scimitar, moving from that position to the managing editorship of the Birmingham News, a post which he held for several years.

Before entering commercial work as general secretary of the Chamber of Commerce he had served as editor of the Mobile Item and had become an enthusiast on the subject of Mobile's commercial possibilities. Upon returning to newspaper work Mr. Clemens carries with him a deep interest in civic work and in the great opportunities for industrial and commercial development open to commerce organizations. He believes that these civic bodies should have the fullest co-operation from the newspapers and is glad to be in a position to further their work as an executive of the Hearst organization.

BALL WINS SUIT FROM STAR LEAGUE

Court Enjoins Publishing Company from Asserting Stock Has Been Redeemed and Orders Payment on Dividends for 1916-18 and Future

(BY TELEGRAPH)

INDIANAPOLIS, June 26.—A ruling enjoining the Star Publishing Company, publishers of the Indianapolis Star, Muncie Star and Terre Haute Star from attempting to assert that preferred stock in the company held by Frank C. Ball of Muncie has been redeemed or is subject to redemption, without the consent of Ball, and asserting that any steps taken in redeeming the stock are void was made by Justice Hays in Superior Court yesterday in deciding Ball's suit against the publishing company for an injunction and for dividends.

Not only is the publishing company restrained from redeeming the preferred stock held by Mr. Ball without his consent, but the company is ordered to pay him a sum between $35,000 and $40,000 as dividends on his stock for the years 1916, 1917, 1918, the court ruled.

And in the future, as long as he shall hold his shares of preferred stock, Mr. Ball shall receive dividends on this stock at the rate of 5 per cent. annually and larger dividends in the event larger dividends are paid on the company's common stock, held principally by John C. Shaffer of Chicago, president of the publishing company. Mr. Ball shall retain all rights as a stockholder in the company, the court ruled.

Exceptions Will Be Taken

Judge Hays' ruling was made on issues presented in the trial of the case in February. James W. Noel, attorney for the publishing company, said exceptions to the court's ruling will be filed and a motion for a new trial of the case will be presented. Mr. Noel asserted that the court should not have ordered the payment for dividends for 1916 on the ground that $145,000 was taken from the company's earnings for that year for the retirement of preferred stock, as it has not been shown as evidence that the $145,000 had been taken from the earnings of 1916.

Judge Hays in reply said the money came from earnings during the period from January 1, 1916, to April 4, 1917.

The suit was filed by Mr. Ball on July 28, 1917, asking that the action of the company in April and May of that year, in declaring his stock redeemed, to be declared void and asking for an accounting to demonstrate the net earnings of the company during the preceding years since 1908.

SUPPLIES & EQUIPMENT

For Newspaper Making

WANTED AND FOR SALE

AD VOLUME AFFECTS PAPER MARKET

Demand for Extra Newsprint Tonnage Depletes Reserves — Many Papers Operating on Day-by-Day Supplies—June a Big Month

Reports coming to EDITOR & PUBLISHER indicate that the consumption of newsprint for the month of June has been the largest in the history of newspaper making for that month.

At the time the armistice was signed the publishers had on hand a reasonable reserve, but the great volume of advertising and the increase in the size of newspapers resulting from this flood of business have served to wipe out these reserves.

The mills are shipping well up to maximum production, yet find themselves unable to meet the full demand. It had been expected that the light months, June, July and August, would enable the mills to pile up a surplus for the fall needs, but there has been no slackening in demand during June.

A man well informed as to conditions, particularly as to the newspapers of New York state, tells EDITOR & PUBLISHER that a Rochester daily only the other day was compelled to have a carload of newsprint shipped by express in order to meet urgent requirements. A New Jersey daily was forced to have the day's supply shipped from New York by automobile trucks. It is the opinion of this man that a majority of the state's dailies have practically no reserve, depending upon shipments arriving on time for their daily supply. He predicts that, if the volume of business continues big through the summer, newspapers will find it very difficult to secure adequate supplies in the fall. Prices are still holding, he says, as much of the output is sold under contract, at rates conforming generally to the standards fixed by the Federal Trade Commission. However, in his opinion, a four cent minimum, at the mill, is not unlikely for next year's contracts.

The chief present difficulty, it would seem, does not so much concern the price of newsprint as the limited supply. Papers working under contract allotments are requiring large additional tonnage to meet the immediate needs, and this extra paper is hard to secure. Instances have been mentioned where manufacturers have sought out and purchased quantities of newsprint in the hands of jobbers in order to resell to contract customers.

Printers Need Education

MINNEAPOLIS, June 27.—Results of the recent Minneapolis survey of the printing business were reviewed by 150 printers and supply men at a mass meeting of the Minneapolis Typothetae yesterday. An intensive educational scheme known as the "three year plan" was decided upon by unanimous vote. Don V. Gerking, special organizer of the United Typothetae of America, declared the printing business of Minneapolis was suffering from lack of knowledge of costs, lack of proper estimating knowledge, lack of proper accounting methods and lack of proper selling methods.

To the Publishers and Business Managers of Daily Newspapers in the United States and Canada:

Never in the history of daily papers has the outlook for business men been as bright as it is at present.

Newspapers are today carrying more advertising than they have carried for years and all signs point to a steady increase in business.

So that you will be in a position to secure your share of this advertising, it will be necessary to have your share of the circulation in your field.

To get this circulation, you must have a good circulation manager. If you haven't one, the General Welfare Committee of the I. C. M. A. can put you in touch with the man you want.

Some of our members have been returned service; others are seeking a change, while some have been out of employment due to the suspension or consolidation of newspapers.

All dealings in strictest confidence. H. A. Wedge, Chairman, General Welfare Committee, International Circulation Managers' Association, care of The Post-Star, Glen Falls, N. Y.

ILLINOISANS START 1920 POLITICAL WORK

New Republican and Democratic Organizations Started by State Press Association—Wheat Gov. Lowden and Champ Clark to Run

CHICAGO, June 29.—The Illinois Press Association, at its convention here yesterday, attended by 318 state editors, adopted resolutions asking Gov. Lowden to become a candidate on the Republican ticket for the presidency of the United States. The members also organized the Republican Editorial Association of Illinois and the Democratic Editorial Association of Illinois, the organizations being effected in two secret meetings during the evening session.

Officers selected by the Republican body are A. T. Spivey, of East St. Louis, president, and Michael Walsh of Harvard, secretary.

Endorse League of Nations

The newly-organized Democratic Editorial Association of Illinois elected E. E. Campbell of Alton, president; J. M. Sheets, secretary, and S. P. Prescott, treasurer. The only official action taken during their meeting was the passage of a following resolution endorsing the administration of President Wilson and heartily approving of the League of Nations.

Although no really official action was taken by the Democratic editors present, in a 1920 presidential candidate, a formal request to Champ Clark that he enter the race was circulated by Mr. Campbell, who was Clark's campaign manager in Illinois during the 1912 campaign.

Declares Press "Most Potent Factor"

The convention closed with a banquet, at which the principal speakers were Senator Harold Kessinger, former Speaker F. D. Shurtleff, J. H. Harrison, Congressman William B. McKinley, and others.

$5,000 or less cash for investment in a small southern, southwestern or Pacific Coast daily. Proposition S. W.

ROTOGRAVURE IN HOUSTON

Both the Chronicle and the Post Introduce It to Readers

HOUSTON, Tex., July 2.—Weekly rotogravure sections have been added as Sunday features to the Post and the Chronicle, and it may be somewhat of an innovation in Texas much interest is being manifested in them.

The Chronicle's section, which is printed in New York City, consists of eight pages. George R. Cottingham handles the local copy. Three or more pages are devoted to news and feature pictures of Houston.

The Post has a four-page section, of which one page is devoted to local news pictures. Bert Blessington, cartoonist, handles the local end. The section is printed in St. Louis.

ILLUSTRATED NEWS TO IMPROVE

Management of New York Pictorial Reports Satisfactory Circulation

The Illustrated Daily News, the six-day pictorial which the Chicago Tribune began issuing in New York City last Thursday, is having at least a circulation as was hoped for at the start, the management reports, and when the press work has been improved, a much larger circulation is expected.

"The Illustrated Daily News, as we told you the other day, has been the worst printed paper in New York," reads an editorial in Tuesday's issue. "And as we say this it is soon going to be the best printed paper in New York.

You have already seen the improvement in the printing and it is going to continue to improve. Also every other feature of the paper is going to improve."

Herald-Examiner Opens N. Y. Office

The Chicago Herald & Examiner will establish July 7, an independent Eastern office in the Astor Trust Building, New York, with W. P. Trefny in charge and V. S. Anderson as assistant. M. D. Hunton will continue to represent the Boston Advertiser, Boston Sunday Advertiser-American, San Francisco Examiner and Los Angeles Examiner. W. W. Chew will remain with Mr. Hunton.

PRESS OPERATORS GET BIG WAGE INCREASE

News Services' Scale Highest Ever Paid Telegraphers — Affects Associated Press, United Press, International News and Universal

Telegraphers employed by the Associated Press, the United Press Associations, the International News Service, and the Universal Service, have just obtained the biggest increase in wages ever granted press association telegraphers at any time, anywhere—not on their own terms but as the result of schedules prepared or being prepared by their respective employers. All have come to an agreement with their men. The total increase in wages is more than a million dollars for the ensuing year.

While the United Press Associations, the International News Service and the Universal Service and their union telegraphers were deadlocked in efforts to avert a strike by agreeing on a new wage scale for the coming year, the executive committee of the Associated Press held a meeting and authorized an increase in the compensation of every operator in its service, to be effective this week. It will affect 700 operators. These men are not organized and have no contract with the Associated Press.

A. P. Raise Voluntary

The new A. P. wage schedule will, like those of the United Press, the International and the Universal, provide for a graduated increase in wages, based on town population and consequent variance in the cost of living. It will equal that of the three other organizations mentioned.

The controversy between the United Press and its 200 or more union telegraphers throughout the country over the demands of the men for a flat increase in wages during one year from July 1 of approximately 9? per cent., resulted in a victory for the U. P., although a costly one. It means that the United Press will pay its telegraphers during the coming year about $100,000 more in wages than it did during the year preceding. This increase was offered the employees by the United Press in lieu of their own larger demands.

Strike Vote Taken

A vote on the question whether to strike or not to strike was taken by the operators by telegraph last Friday, when negotiations between a committee representing the union and the heads of the United Press had reached a deadlock.

Before the controversy went to a strike vote, the representatives of the United Press made one concession. They had previously offered to increase the minimum wage schedule in small towns from $30 to $31 a week and they offered to make a further increase to $32.50.

Late last Friday afternoon, the representatives of the United Press and the union received the complete returns on the strike vote by wire in the U. P. offices. The vote was so close that the union committee practically were obliged to use their own discretion whether to accept the U. P.'s terms or call a strike. After a brief conference, they decided to take what was offered them.

The original demands of the union men were that the minimum salary of any Morse day operator should be $45 a week instead of $30, that the salary of all receiving operators and automatic machine attendants employed in cities having a population of 100,000 or more should be $46.50 a week, that the salary of bureau operators and automatic machine attendants should be $50 a week, and that operators acting as chief operators with jurisdiction over one circuit should receive $55 a week, and those with jurisdiction over more than one circuit should receive $60 a week.

U. P. Stood "Pat"

The United Press submitted a counter-proposal, on which it stood pat, which provided for a graduated increase in salaries, based on town population and consequent variance in the cost of living, which ranged from 8 to 26.66 per cent. It is estimated that this schedule, which the union accepted and which is now in force, calls for salary increases $115,000 less, annually, than that which the union sought to have accepted.

The basic scale of the new agreement is from $32.50 to $40 for the smallest city points, but differentials in the scale are big factors in bringing up the total. For instance, it is possible for bureau operators and relay operators in the larger cities to average as much as $65 weekly, counting in their usual overtime.

The position taken by the International News Service and the Universal Service, day and night Hearst service, respectively, in their negotiations with their union telegraphers, was that they would duplicate the most favorable schedule of wages that union telegraphers were able to obtain from any rival organization.

Other Services Agree Also

When it became known that the United Press and its union telegraphers had come to terms, representatives of the International News Service and the Universal Service arranged a meeting with representatives of their respective union employees for last Monday. At that time, contracts, covering a period of one year from July 1, and fixing the same schedule of wages for day work granted its employees by the U. P., and one with proportionate increases for night work were signed. Thus the new International schedule is identical with that of the United Press schedule.

As for the Universal's new schedule, it provides for an increase in the minimum wages paid for leased wire night work in towns under 100,000 population, from $35.50 to $39.50 weekly, and in towns over 100,000, from $40.50 to $46, excepting Morse operators of leased wires in New York and Chicago, who will receive an increase from $48.50 to $52.50. Literally, the operators in these cities have been receiving only $43.50 previously, but the Universal has been paying them a weekly bonus of $5.

A. P. Continues Pension Plan

Associated Press operators, besides receiving the same increase in wages as the operators of the other press associations, will continue to enjoy the benefits of a pension fund, insurance and disability benefits established by the organization for its employees. A report just issued by the A. P. shows that during the year ending July 1, 1919, there was paid out in pensions $9,048.48; in disability benefits, $17,330.32, and in insurance, $41,107.44.

DEMAND PAY FOR ALL POLITICAL MATTER

N. Y. State Press Association Urged to Raise Price of Dailies to 3 Cents and to Stop Printing Free Plate Matter

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., June 28.—Editors and publishers of the state who attended the 65th annual convention of the New York Press Association went on record as favoring charging for all political matter as straight advertising. A resolution to this effect was presented by Walter B. Sanders of Nunda, Charles H. Betts of Lyons and Daniel B. Frisbie of Schoharie,, and unanimously adopted.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Gardner Kline, Amsterdam; vice-presidents, Walter B. Sanders, Nunda; Wallace Odell, Tarrytown, and P. A. Blossom, Brockport; secretary and treasurer, Elias Vair, Waterloo.

Urges 3-Cent Price

The most important paper of the meeting was read by Frank E. Gannett of Rochester, whose topic was "The Future of the Newspaper." Mr. Gannett said that an advance in subscription and advertising rates would be a necessity and he urged the publishers to advance the price of the papers to 3 cents a copy, as a matter of self-preservation. Touching on the labor question the speaker said that wages would undoubtedly higher. He referred to the scarcity printers and said this was due to a l of apprentices. He urged that me young men be made interested in t printer's trade. Mr. Gannett touched the print paper situation, which he sa did not show any signs of improvemc

He declared that the session laws a a menace to the publisher and ought be abolished. He characterized it "political pap" and said it usually ke two papers alive where there ought be only one.

A paper on "Free Plate" written C. H. Skelton of Canastota, who w unable to be present, was read. He sa that free plate ought to be abolished. 12,000 publishers were annually givit away $8,000,000 worth of advertising.

Have You "Discovered" Canada in a Market Way?

Out of her Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, Canada could create TWENTY-THREE STATES each equal in area to the state of New York!

These Provinces of themselves constitute a domain whose treasuries of natural wealth have hardly been touched, but whose 4,500,000 people are fully awake to the unexampled opportunities for industrial and commercial development now opening to them.

The after-war flood of capital is already pouring into this Land of Promise, and the tide will not turn back again until it has accomplished that whereunto it was sent—the full development of the almost unappraisable riches of a great empire.

Canada has returned to the tasks of peace with the same devotion she gave to the tasks of war. She is building her house to conform to the new standards of expansion.

Her people live and think as we do. They are one with us in their ideals of life. They buy our goods and sell us theirs. The boundry lines between Canada and the United States are political and geographical. There is no more hostility between Canada and the United States than between New York and Pennsylvania.

The products which may be sold in New York or New England may be sold just as readily, and through the same sort of selling campaigns, in Canada. These millions across the border—all of them Americans, all of them responsive to the appeal of good advertising—constitute a potential LIST OF CUSTOMERS for any and every desirable product. The newspapers listed below cover this great domain effectually, affording to advertisers a channel of communication with the people of every part of it.

THE NEW YORK GLOBE

Has been built up to its present point of efficiency by rigid adherence to basic principles recognized as fair and equitable by readers and advertisers.

Newspaper Principles

1—A complete, accurate, dependable newspaper.

2—A fearless and independent newspaper.

3—An interesting newspaper.

4—An uncontrolled newspaper.

5—A newspaper ever seeking improvement.

6—A newspaper made primarily for those who buy it.

7—A newspaper with intelligence and with a soul and a heart.

8—A progressive newspaper.

9—An optimistic newspaper.

10—A successful and prosperous newspaper beyond temptation.

Advertising Principles

1—Definite proved circulation.

2—Same rate for like service to all.

3—Effective co-operation to make advertising most productive.

4—Protection to agents against direct commission to advertisers.

5—Increased commission to agents to meet rising costs.

6—A willingness to pioneer the road to greater efficiency.

These are big basic principles too often ignored by many newspapers unable to see that in progress success is achieved.

Government reports show that the value of plow lands is steadily increasing, that the greatest increase during the past year occurred in the SOUTH Atlantic states.

Great is Cotton, but the South has outgrown dependence on Cotton or any other one crop.

The SOUTH Atlantic states, for 1918, by Government estimates had $2,293,975 value in crops, compared with the yearly average from 1910-1914 of $859,780. Of this great aggregate cotton represented 27% in the year just passed.

The South is gaining in agricultural stability while converting much of her basic resources into manufactures.

Probably no territory or division of states shows more promise and assurance against great changes or reactions than the ten states in the circle.

National advertisers seeking safe investment for their appropriations can be SURE that the GOOD WILL advertising will build up for them in the South is grounded upon STABILITY.

These are the Pick of the Southern Daily papers, at your Service in a territory of over 20,000,000 people!

Philadelphia

is the third largest city and the second greatest port in the United States

George S. Webster, Director of the Department of Wharves, Docks and Ferries of the City of Philadelphia, reports that Philadelphia is the second port of the United States.

Twenty-one regular steamship lines now operate out of Philadelphia for European, South-American, Asiatic and African destinations.

During the first four months of 1919 the value of exports and imports at the port of Philadelphia was $204,907,041, while during the same period of last year they were $176,856,919.

Philadelphia's people are at work, its ship-yards, locomotive and other big mechanical plants are all busy, and "nearly everybody" is buying the things they want for house, home and self.

CONVENTION OF SOUTHERN PUBLISHERS MOST NOTABLE IN ORGANIZATION'S HISTORY

Attendance Sets New Record and Discussions of Problems of Immediate Import Carried on with Earnestness and Candor—Better Pay for News and Editorial Men Urged

(STAFF CORRESPONDENCE, BY TELEGRAPH.)

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 9.—Mid scenes of homelike splendor, in the shifting shadows of Sunset Mountain, newspaper publishers, editors, managers and agency leaders gathered here—in Col. Fred L. Seely's famous hostelry, Grove Park Inn—this week for the most largely attended meeting of its kind in the history of the South and discussed problems of the dawning golden era.

Laughter of children intermingled with the sighing of soft southern breezes through the pines of the Carolina mountains, and gayly dressed women of the South added color to the ever changing scenes from the windows of the great basement convention hall where the leaders to the better day gathered July 7, 8 and 9—for Southern publishers have not forgotten the traditional Southern way of mixing joy of living with daily labor.

Prosperity of Whole Nation the Keynote

Not only were news service—service to the public—circulation and advertising discussed at the gatherings of members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, Southern division of the Associated Press, the Executive Board of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, and the Southern Council of the A. A. A. A., as one great meeting, nor relationship to the South as a section, for the United States and its prosperity was the keynote of every movement advocated.

Good fellowship—truly Southern and of another day—prevailed. Evening, in the twilight that hid Mount Pisgah in a hazy mist, golfers, tennis players and wanderers along the by-ways of this fairyland park of E. W. Grove's, found their ways to big blazing log fires to the strains of Beethoven's "Andante con Moto" that drifted to the night and was drowned by the tunes of "Old Zip Coon," "The Mocking Bird" and "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground," until Texas reached the hand of Tennessee and all—the representatives of the whole South—caught up the rhythm of the steps of today.

J. H. ALLISON.
NEW PRESIDENT OF THE S. N. P. A.

The Opening Session

Daytime is worktime, but all work is better if mixed into playtime, and the newspapermen of the South, with wives, sons and daughters, keeping the best of the old and taking the real of the new, made the conventions just closed the most helpful and most instructive in the history of Southern journalism and advertising.

A ringing note of confidence in President Wilson and the League of Nations, reports of unbounded prosperity in all corners of the field—despite increasing costs of publishing and iniquitous postal laws and unpromising conditions in the

NAVY PLANS TO SPEND $200,000 IN PAPERS

Preliminaries of Recruiting Campaign to Be Discussed This Week in Conference Between Secretary Daniels, Agencies and A. N. P. A.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

WASHINGTON, July 8—Impressed by results achieved by the War Department in obtaining recruits through newspaper advertising, the Navy Department has determined to spend approximately $200,000 in a similar campaign of its own and has enlisted the co-operation of the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. Preliminaries of the campaign will be discussed at a conference here between Secretary Daniels and representatives of these organizations on Friday.

Will Reduce Other Expenses

After the Secretary of the Navy decided about three weeks ago to include paid advertising in the Navy's recruiting program, as exclusively announced in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, suggestions were made to him through Commander Emory Winship, chief of the recruiting division, Bureau of Navigation, that the leading experts of the country should be consulted before a definite program was outlined.

Commander Winship informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER today that the $200,000 to be spent in the Navy's initial campaign will come out of the general navy appropriation for "recruiting and transportation," the sum made available this year by Congress being the same as in previous years. Accordingly, the Navy, in order to find the $200,000, will have to reduce some other expenditures.

The story is told that when Secretary Daniels appeared recently before a committee of Congress to advocate certain appropriations for his department, he discussed the question of the number of men the Navy needed and told of his difficulties in getting the desired quota.

Why Not Advertise!

Much to his astonishment, it is said, the Congressional committee asked him almost unanimously and in quite a matter-of-fact way:

"Why don't you advertise for them?"

The Secretary's astonishment was attributed to the obvious change in sentiment in Congress regarding the practicability of government advertising—a change of sentiment due, presumably, to results attained in Liberty Loan campaigns, in resort advertising on behalf of the Railroad Administration and in the Army recruiting campaign.

BOSTON NEWS WRITERS' STRIKE IS AVERTED

Long Existent Union Suddenly Comes Back to Life, Demanding Higher Pay and Shorter Hours—Agreement Appears Probable

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

BOSTON, Mass., July 8.—As a result of a conference between the Boston Publishers' Association, representing nearly every Boston daily, and the Wage Conference Committee of Newswriters' Union No. 1, the threatened strike of the news gathering organization, which was believed to be imminent by both sides, has probably been averted on the Boston newspapers.

It is understood that both sides, with the adjournment of the conference held this afternoon, realize the gravity of the situation and are nearer to a settlement than at any time for the past three months.

The following announcement, issued by the Wage Conference Committee of the Union, following the meeting with the publishers today, was placed on the bulletin boards in the various newspaper editorial rooms tonight:

Proposal by Union

To members of Newspaper Writers' Union No. 1:

At a conference held today between the conference committee and Boston newspaper publishers, the following clause was presented by the Committee:

"It is expressly understood and agreed that the news and editorial policies of the newspapers, parties to this agreement, shall at all times be exclusively and completely determined by the publishers or their authorized representatives, and such policies shall not be subjects for discussion or action by the union.

"Members accepting employment shall be available for any service necessary for maintenance of the established standards and policies of the newspaper employing them, and failure to loyally and intelligently perform such service shall be sufficient reason for discipline or discharge."

The publishers present agreed to submit the clause to Gen. Charles H. Taylor of the Globe, E. A. Grozier of the Post and William B. Hearst of the American for consideration.

The committee agreed to send for President Scott of the International Typographical Union to give an official ruling on the application of the I. T. U. law as applying to news writers.

Your committee reports today's conference the most satisfactory yet held.

A meeting of the union, called for 11:30 o'clock this morning, was called off upon request of the publishers made late last night. Business scheduled to come up at this meeting was postponed pending the result of today's conference.

It was declared by members of the union tonight that but for the calling off of the meeting today, hardly a late afternoon paper would have gone to press. At the present time the organization claims a membership of

SCENE OF SOUTHERN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION MEETING

DIXIELAND NEWSPAPER AND ADVERTISING MEN ON THE GOLF LINKS AT GROVE PARK INN, ASHEVILLE, N. C.

CONVENTION OF S. N. P. A. MOST NOTABLE

news print situation—marked the opening sessions of the convention of Southern Publishers at Grove Park Inn on Monday and Tuesday.

There were 100 members present out of a total membership of 157.

The high lights of these sessions were vigorous denunciations of the Burleson and Kitchin attitudes and policies in regard to newspaper legislation, eloquent addresses by Llewellyn Pratt, of the A. A. C. W.; Thomas H. Moore, associate director of the Bureau of Advertising, A. N. P. A.; Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, and Marcellus E. Foster, editor of the Houston Chronicle.

There was a free and frank discussion of intimate problems of publishing, and it was developed that many publishers favor a general policy of higher salaries for editorial and news writers as a recognition of not only present day economic conditions but of the loyalty and high capacity of these members of the craft.

Marcellus E. Foster declared for a minimum wage of $5 per day for men and women of like capacity in all departments.

The sentiments of members toward President Wilson and his achievements was unanimously expressed in the following telegram, sent at noon on Tuesday:

"To the President of the United States:

"The Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, comprising all of the daily newspapers of all the Southern States, extends its heartiest congratulations to the President of the United States upon his safe return, and upon the success of the mission which took him to Europe and which, we believe, will bring enduring peace and prosperity to all the world.

"(Signed) F. G. Bell, President."

President Frank G. Bell, editor of the Savannah Morning News, in his annual address, declared that there is money everywhere in the South. "It is fairly oozing out at all points," he declared. "We are witnessing the beginning of an era of prosperity which will have no end. The South is, indeed, coming into its own. Newspaper men did not win the war, but they have done their duty to their government during the crucial days of warfare, and it is pleasant for me to report that this association is better off than it has ever been before, due to a number of causes, but to none more than the splendid work of Secretary Walter C. Johnson. Only a man who loves his work and this association could aid as he has done."

Mr. Bell expressed his opinion very frankly concerning government treatment of men who are publishing newspapers. Denying any desire for preferential treatment, he nevertheless demanded a fair deal of the government which, he said, is giving publishers most unfair treatment. He urged his hearers to continue to bring such pressure to bear on their Congressmen as will result in revision of present iniquitous postal rates. He emphasized the importance of careful consideration of increasing costs, and stressed the urgent necessity for fair wages to editorial men and other unorganized employees who contribute so largely to the success of daily newspapers. He also urged aggressive editorial support for all good road movements.

Growth in Membership

Secretary Walter C. Johnson, of the Chattanooga News, reported that the membership of the organization has increased from 68 three years ago to 157 at present. He stated that the membership embraces 95 evening newspapers and 62 morning papers, with total combined circulation of 2,546,348. He said that North Carolina and Texas have the largest representation, each having 21 members, Georgia next with 19, while Tennessee is 100 per cent., every daily in the State being a member. Receipts for the year amounted to $3,200; disbursements, $2,100; cash on hand, over $2,000.

Walter G. Bryan, publisher of the Atlanta Georgian, and chairman of the advertising committee, reported the South greatly benefited by the advertising campaign in which eighty-five newspapers co-operated this year, as compared with sixty last year. Copy was confined to Southern newspapers, and Printers' Ink, Editor & Publisher and Associated Advertising. Besides these advertisements circulars were sent out and a handsome booklet was prepared by the Massengale Advertising Agency and sent to all advertising agents and newspaper publishers.

The committee reported that the campaign represented an investment of $7,000, and expressed belief that the campaign for next year would very likely exceed $10,000, as newspapers throughout the territory have prospered to an unusual degree. Gains in advertising in Southern newspapers, especially in foreign advertising, have been unprecedented.

Charles I. Stewart, of the Lexington Herald, chairman of the committee on newsprint conservation, urged the maintenance of a legitimate price for newspaper circulation, and the use of 6-point type with standard margins.

How Profits Count

Mr. Stewart's declaration that the average member of this association, publishing a seven-day paper, will consume about 100 pounds of news print per subscriber, occasioned an interesting discussion.

"Not many of us are having print paper put into our press rooms for less than four cents per pound, when we add freight, cartage and waste to time lost. We are now paying 1½ cents a pound for postage, and this means that the average seven-day paper costs in white paper and postage $5.50 per subscriber. Newspaper profits are measured in dollars and cents. Measured in commodities they have to be very much larger now than in an era of low prices. Newspapers that made a profit of $15,000 in 1914 or 1915 is doing no more this year than then if it makes $25,000."

Exorciates Postmaster-General

W. T. Anderson, of the Macon Telegraph, emphasized the wisdom of Mr. Stewart's recommendations that publishers charge what their commodity is worth, without regard to what the "other fellow" is doing, and paid his respects to "Mr. Burleson, the inefficient Postmaster-General," in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Anderson quoted the Postmaster-General's indictment of all publishers as grafters, and characterized him as "the most nonsensical nincompoop who has ever occupied a governmental position."

"In return for the support we gave the Government during days when an enemy was at the throat of the nation, support which we gave gladly and without stint, support for which we claim no credit because we are American citizens, who would have been unworthy of the name had our action been otherwise, we are held up by this incompetent from Texas as a lot of grafters. And the government which we have upheld now prepares to upset the arrangements of all publishers in America. It is another case of the public paying. My paper, the Macon Telegraph, will not lose one cent as a result of Burleson's policy of financial rumination. We will pass the cost along to the subscriber, have done so already in fact. But it is so grossly unfair that the public will soon realize who is the victim of the revision of postal rates on newspapers—upward revisions when all other postal rates are being decreased."

Marcellus Foster, of the Houston Chronicle, rose to remark that, whereas Burleson is a Texan, he is in office by appointment, and that he could not be elected to any office within the gift of the people of that commonwealth.

Commends Editor & Publisher

On the subject of a fair rate per line per thousand of circulation, there was an entertaining and enlightening discussion, participated in by Messrs. F. C. Withers, Columbia State; W. A. Elliott, Jacksonville Times-Union; Victor H. Hanson, Birmingham News; Arthur G. Newmyer, New Orleans Item; George E. Katz, New York special representative; W. G. Bryan, Atlanta Georgian; H. C. Adler, Chattanooga Times; W. H. Bagley, Fort Worth Record, and Major J. S. Cohen, Atlanta Journal. The consensus of opinion was that scientific cost finding should ascertain the cost per line, which might differ with every member of the association, and to which should be added 10 to 15 per cent. to cover profits.

Editor & Publisher's constructive work in ascertaining cost per agate line, per class, state, and nationally was very generously commended.

PAID ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN CUTS COST OF SECURING ARMY RECRUITS ONE-HALF

War Department's Campaign a Triumph for Sound Policy---More Than 200 Newspapers in 56 Cities Carried Copy---In Future Lists May Include Papers in Smaller Cities, Covering All Branch Recruiting Stations---Capt. Keeler Optimistic.

RETURNS on the Government-paid advertising campaign in newspapers during the last two weeks in June for army recruits are still incomplete, but the results attained have been sufficiently analyzed for EDITOR & PUBLISHER to announce, exclusively, on the authority of Captain Floyd Keeler, the War Department official advertising, that in charge of this department and in fact as least cut in half the previous cost of obtaining recruits.

"A much better showing is expected when the reports on the campaign are complete," said Captain Keeler.

"For instance, we have no reports on enlistments received on the last day of the campaign.

Full Reports Lacking Yet

"Furthermore, we have no reports on enlistments received either at the recruiting stations or at army headquarters the week following the campaign, when undoubtedly there was a considerable increase over the normal number of enlistments, due to momentum previously acquired through our advertising.

"Then, there also remains to be taken into consideration the vast number of applications for enlistment we received during the campaign, many of which will be turned into enlistments during many weeks hereafter."

While Captain Keeler could not speak authoritatively as to what further use would be made by the War Department of newspaper advertising to obtain recruits for the army, since no official action has been taken regarding this as yet, it is his opinion that such advertising will be continued indefinitely.

In other words, if newspaper advertising will reduce the cost of obtaining recruits for the army by at least one-half, there is small likelihood of going back to less effective and more expensive methods.

Should Aid Cummings Bill

Another inference to be drawn from results attained through newspaper advertising in the army recruiting campaign is that considerably less opposition will be encountered in Congress henceforth to the proposal of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, in its issue of April 21, 1917, that the Government establish a Department of Advertising. A bill recently introduced in the Senate by Senator Atlee S. Cummings of Iowa, providing for the establishment of such a department, is now in committee.

This bill supersedes one introduced by Senator Cummings in August, 1917, to establish in the Department of Commerce a "Bureau of Publicity," to administer the advertising of the Government, which received scant consideration at the hands of a war-time Congress

Public Must Not Be Solicited for Funds to Pay for Government Advertising, War Department Warns Recruiting Officers

HEREAFTER nobody must presume to put Uncle Sam in the false position of panhandling for newspaper advertising. The old gentleman appreciates all the financial aid that was given him gladly by his nephews in advertising his earlier Liberty Loans, before he adopted the more sensible and dignified plan of personally-paid advertising, but the big success he attained through this latter plan in the recent campaign for army recruits has convinced him that nobody should be asked to pay his way into print for him hereafter.

Such is the conclusion to be drawn from a bulletin just issued by order of Secretary of War Baker from the office of Adjutant General R. J. Herman, signed by the latter, and addressed "To all officers in charge of recruiting districts. The subject of this bulletin is "Discontinuance of solicitation of funds for advertising.'" The first paragraph reads:

"The solicitation, by anyone on recruiting duty, of funds for advertising or other purposes, is prohibited. That this can only react to the detriment of the service is illustrated by the following quotations from letters received in reply to one sent out by a sergeant without authority from this office in a laudable but ill-advised effort to secure the maximum number of recruits for his local station."

The sergeant, it appears, wrote business men in the city where his recruiting station was located, as follows:

"In an effort to stimulate recruiting for the Army in this city, it is desired to start an advertising campaign, funds for which are to be raised by voluntary contribution. We respectfully request that your firm contribute as much as convenient and thereby assist us to secure the necessary number of recruits.

"If possible, we desire to have a full-page advertisement in the two local papers, giving due credit to the contributors as sponsors for the advertisement. For this, it is necessary to secure about $175 and if this is not forthcoming, we will have to content ourselves with smaller advertisements"

The reaction that the enterprising sergeant got from this letter indicates that the public no longer associates patriotism with paying for Uncle Sam's advertising. Two letters, received by the sergeant in reply to his appeal are included in the Adjutant General's bulletin. One reads as follows:

"The enclosed copy of a letter this day received seems to indicate the Government appropriation for this purpose is insufficient."

[NOTE.—As a matter of fact, the War Department spent only $174,000 of the $184,000 that was authorized for the recruiting campaign.]

"It seems to me that if more advertising should be done, the Government should pay for it. If the Government does not wish to pay for more advertising, no more should be done than is now being done."

The second letter quoted in the Adjutant General's bulletin reads:

"Enclosed herewith you will find an original letter (which you need not return), and as the letter indicates, authorized by the War Department.

"The manufacturers of this community, and of the state, generally, have during the period of war activity, generously responded to calls for contributions of almost every sort. They waived any disposition to criticise calls which were in reality relieving the Government of responsibility and expense.

"Most of us were glad to do this, because these calls were made, not directly by the Government, but by volunteer agencies doing their mightiest to help at a time of great stress.

"This is different.

"It proceeds from a Government department, asking individual manufacturers to assume a part of its function—a not altogether consistent feature, when as one peruses the fine law, it is discovered that such contributions are not deductable as a part of ordinary business expense.

"Even of that, however, we manufacturers are not complaining, because as 'you remarked on the platform at Rochester,' 'I do not propose to discuss consistency—there is no telling where it might lead.'

"But as an American who wants to be proud of his country, and his Government, I do complain of mendicancy. And as it proper to inquire how long it might take for such calls issued in the form of requests to evolve into demands.

"The letter referred to is sent you in the hope that it may be the means of bringing the matter to the attention of the proper department, to the end that, seeing how the act is viewed (and I speak not solely for this company) a different policy may be pursued."

The Adjutant General's bulletin concludes with the following comment:

"The above extracts are quoted to illustrate clearly the damage which may be done to the service by such ill-advised actions.

While the new bill retains the title and provisions of the first one, there is a strong sentiment generally that in its final form it should differentiate between "publicity" and "advertising."

In the army recruiting campaign during the last two weeks in June, four pieces of copy were used, two full pages and two pieces of 1,310 lines each, these being placed exclusively by Frank Seaman, Inc., in all English newspapers in cities where recruiting stations were located. More than 200 newspapers in 56 cities printed such advertising.

Plan of Copy Explained

If the newspaper advertising for army recruits is continued, it is probable that the media used will be newspapers in towns where branch recruiting stations are located.

Some of the main recruiting stations have as many as fifteen or more substations in nearby towns, but none of the newspapers in these towns were included in the initial campaign, for lack of enough recruiting officers to follow up the inquiries or "prospects" that such advertising would have developed.

"In order to get the best results, we were obliged to concentrate our efforts to obtain recruits at the main stations," Captain Keeler explained.

"The plan was not a perfect one, but having established the general rule to advertise only in cities where there was a main recruiting station, we were obliged to adhere to it.

"For instance, there is a main recruiting station in Minneapolis but none in its twin city, St. Paul. So we used the Minneapolis papers, but none in St. Paul. Likewise, we used San Francisco papers but none in Oakland, although the latter has a branch recruiting station and is a manufacturing town where prospects were plentiful.

Why Some Papers Received No Copy

"Naturally, this led to much misunderstanding on the part of newspapers which thought they were being slighted, and we were kept busy throughout the campaign explaining in detail why we were not putting advertising in these papers. Our explanations, I may say, were received in good spirit, invariably.

"The fiscal year of the War Department ended June 30, and if there is another appropriation for the ensuing year for a recruiting campaign through advertising we may conduct a newspaper campaign, lasting three weeks, in each of the towns where a sub-station is located. If this were done we would send most of the recruiting officers from the main recruiting stations to the substations to aid in obtaining recruits while the advertising campaigns were on there."

Begin Star-Telegram Building

FORT WORTH, TEX., July 5.—Ground has been broken for the new building of the Star-Telegram, at the corner of Seventh and Lamar streets. It will be four stories high, with a basement, and is expected to be ready for occupancy by March 1, 1920.

CONVENTION OF S. N. P. A. MOST NOTABLE

The feature of the Monday afternoon session was the appearance of four noble old Romans, who explained the postal and paper situation to the convention. These were Major E. Stahlman, chairman of the Nashville Banner, chairman of the Postal Committee of the S. N. P. A., and member of the A. N. P. A. committee; Col. Lonis J. Wortham, of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram; Urey Woodson, of the Owensboro Messenger, and A. F. Sanford, of the Knoxville Journal and Tribune.

Why Postal Fight Failed

Major Stahlman, who is young and vigorous, with a voice like a bell at the age of 75, said that the committee had failed because of lack of interest of Eastern newspapers, and opposition and propaganda by the magazines. The Southern papers and the Inland Daily papers stood strongly in favor of zone system, he said. On two occasions the A. N. P. A. had gone on record as favoring zone system in principle.

He asserted that the fight would have been won if the committee had rested its case on facts brought out by the Southern papers. He pointed out that express companies will carry 100 pounds of expensive silks 100 miles, insure, call for and deliver, at a rate of $1. With the newspapers the Government does not handle papers being delivered to mail car, and agents call for them, the Government assuming no responsibility.

Major Stahlman pointed out the increases now effective and scheduled under the Burleson taxation measure, and said such treatment isn't honest or fair.

An interesting discussion ensued between the chairman, Major Stahlman, and Col. L. J. Wortham, C. I. Stewart and Urey Woodson. The committee finally left to the Legislative Committee to confer and report back to the convention. Indications are that former postal or legislative committees will be continued at the expense of the membership and urged to pursue the matter aggressively.

In the matter of news print federal agreement and hearings, Major Stahlman said a grave injustice had been done American newspaper publishers by Government agencies declining to follow the matter up for lack of funds. It was suggested that Congress should be asked to appropriate funds to carry on the investigation.

Mr. Rogers' Address

The address of T. H. Moore, associate director Bureau of Advertising, was well received. He told of Government advertising and how it is making good. He outlined prospects for an advertising campaign on the Navy and other Government departments. He said the bureau stands in opposition to free publicity and urged a larger measure of support for extension of bureau efforts to Chicago and San Francisco.

Jason Rogers held the interest of the crowd for nearly an hour. He told of his standard cost accounting system, how that he had requested forms of fifty papers, then turned expert accountants loose on them, and how they had received this standard system, duplicate copies of which he is sending all daily newspapers within the next few weeks. He showed a vest pocket memo. book containing all Globe earnings and cost figures for a period of seven years.

Mr. Rogers made a plea for one rate and liberal treatment of advertising agents, saying that in the final analysis the advertiser pays the commissions. He told of his belief that there is a volume of business totaling hundreds of millions of dollars awaiting newspapers that clean up and encourage the advertiser to use the newspaper both locally or nationally. He outlined a plan, in co-operation with Enton & Publisher, for printed maps of dailies by States showing circulation rates, etc.

Labor was the chief theme for discussion Tuesday morning. Col. W. C. Dowd, of the Charlotte News, told of his experience. He said the News had experienced a complete walk-out ten years ago. The morning and evening newspapers got together and fought it out, and never missed an issue. W. L. Elliott told of conditions in the largest open shop in the South. He explained that most of the linotype operators and stereotypers worked right up to the Times-Union plant. Mr. Elliott made an earnest plea for higher salaries for advertising solicitors, reporters, editorial people, and the forces making it possible to pay such high wages to union help.

Problem of Linotype Operators

W. T. Anderson proposed a school for apprentices, under the assistance of members, pointing out that under existing union rules only one boy is allowed to five journeymen, and in some cities only one boy to seven. The only apprentices in the field now are in country offices.

On invitation of President Ball, Walter H. Savory, general sales manager of the Mergenthaler Linotype Machine Company, told of school maintained by that company in New York, Toronto, Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco. He also told of training at technical schools, including Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh. He explained that graduates of these schools were slow operators, say, 2,800 ems per hour. Mrs. Noyes, of the Linotype Company, spoke about sending two of her boys off to a Chicago linotype school for the five or seven weeks' course.

Urey Woodson, of the Owensboro Messenger, asserted that the lure of the big cities attracted the youths sent to Chicago or New York schools, and on graduation they found that they could get jobs at excellent wages without any difficulty, hence they did not desire to return to their old field. He thought Mr. Anderson's suggestion was the right lines. Col. Wortham urged that the propulsive force of public opinion be used in the education of legislators, assuring the addition of linotype instruction in all vocational and technical schools, and said this would solve this vast economic problem.

Reasonable Zone Rate Favored

The following resolution was adopted, regarding postal matters:

"Be it resolved, that the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, in annual convention assembled, at Asheville, N. C., declares its adherence to the zone system on postal rates on second-class matter as the only system whereby rates may be adjusted in such manner as to keep the government rate of postage in keeping with the service rendered and the cost of said service to the government.

"Resolved, further, that this association opposes the return to the flat rate system of postage because of its unfairness to newspaper publishers and to the government.

"Be it further resolved, that in keeping with this belief, this association reaffirms its former declaration in favor of the principles embodied in what is known as the McKellar amendment, and urges the provisions of this amendment as the proper ones to remove oppressive provisions of the act of 1918, insofar as said act applies to newspapers.

"Be it further resolved, that the President of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association be requested at once to fill the vacancy on the Postal Committee of the association caused by the resignation of George McAneny of the New York Times and expresses the hope and belief that this vacancy should be filled by the appointment of Major E. B. Stahlman, one of the most active and loyal members of this association, who will give intelligent direction to the work required to be done to have the law of October, 1918, amended so as to give relief to the newspapers of the country from oppressive and unjust provisions of said act, and thus carry out the wishes of this association and the American Newspaper Publishers' Association as expressed in the resolution unanimously adopted at the annual meetings of the associations in 1918 and 1919."

CO-OPERATION, THEME OF JOINT MEETING

Southern Newspaper Publishers, Executive Committee and Council of A. A. A. and Southern Paper Owners Discuss Common Problems

(By telegraph.)

Asheville, N. C., July 8.—Co-operation between agencies and publishers was the theme of a joint meeting of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association Executive Committee of the A. A. A. and Southern Council and of the A. A. A. A., the newly organized association of Southern Farm Paper Publishers at Grovepark Inn, Tuesday evening.

About one hundred prominent publishers agents, and farm paper men were present when President Ball introduced Jefferson Thomas of Jacksonville as Chairman of the Joint Meeting.

Paul E. Faust, a member of the firm of Faust, Mitchell and Faust, of Chicago, very ably presented a paper written by William H. Johns, of the George Batten Co., of New York City, the President of the American Association of Advertising Agents, who was detained in New York by jury service.

"The public at large is wholesome and wants wholesome things," wrote President Johns, former chairman of the Government's Division of Advertising.

Fair Play for Agencies

"The spirit of world-fraternity is now in the air. Don't listen to pessimists. I am an optimist. The newspaper is destined to become more an important medium than ever before."

Mr. Johns' plea was for compensation and protection for agencies that have proved themselves worthy, with refusal of agency commissions to agents not properly accredited.

Members of the A. A. A. A. placing over $125,000,000 yearly in advertising, want just recognition and co-operation," he wrote. "Ninety-eight and one-half per cent of the magazines co-operating on such a basis have found the plan profitable.

"We want two things. First, complete support with no commission to advertisers direct, even to the refusal of business; second, a universal commission of 15 per cent. on gross rates to agencies, which are investing more and more in service and taking away all the risk and gamble in advertising. Southern publishers show the biggest improvement."

Victor H. Hanson moved and the joint meeting carried unanimously a motion to send the address to all members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association.

H. H. Charles made a notable address on farm papers as profitable mediums. He explained the work of standardizing the sizes of pages of farm papers in the South, where practically all are of standard size. He had found 13 different column sizes in 46 farm weeklies, whereas the pages of all but one of the 105 poultry journals were standard. He advocated a standard rate card and a standard order blank.

Seeks Standardization

Secretary James O'Shaughnessy of the A. A. A. A. made a powerful appeal for sympathetic interest and wholehearted co-operation in standardization. He said:

"The A. A. A. A.'s plan is to gather together all agencies of standing and character.

"The association now represents 95 per cent. of the total national advertising, and 99 per cent. of ethical appreciation.

"The association does not put up the bars to any agency. It is as democratic as the best interest of the advertiser and publishers can make it. We have not refused recognition to a single agency. Of every dollar we produce, 85 cents goes to you. Ten cents for service is essential, leaving but a net five cents smaller than that enjoyed by any other business, and the fiscal responsibilities are entirely upon our members. All we have is on the table for your protection.

"Our members have no other calling, and our minds no other interests."

Mr. O'Shaughnessy described the publishers by declaring that agents want

DISCUSS AGENCY RECOGNITION

Executive Committee of S. A. A. Says That Publishers Should Decide

(By telegraph.)

Asheville, N. C., July 8.—The Executive Committee of the Southeastern Advertising Agencies consisting of Dillard Jacobs, of Atlanta, chairman, Rufus S. Freeman, of Richmond, vice-chairman, and William Adler, of Atlanta, secretary-treasurer, held a meeting at Grove Park Inn, Monday, and resolved that the policy of deciding whether an advertising agency should be recognized as such, rests with the publishers themselves, irrespective of the opinion of any organization of agencies.

The Southeastern Agencies will present this principle to Southern publishers for action.

Best South Carolina Meeting

(By telegraph.)

Edgefield, S. C., July 9.—The Forty-Fifth Annual Session of the South Carolina Press Association, held in Greenville, June 30 and July 1 and 2, was the largest and in many respects the best meeting held within the past decade. The business sessions were well attended and were full of interest and real profit. The following officers were elected: A. B. Jordan, of Dillon, President; H. G. Osteen, of Sumter, First Vice-President; Rion McKissick, of Greenville, Second Vice-President; Mason Brunson of Florence, Secretary and August Kohn of Columbia, Treasurer.

STRENGTHEN FRIENDSHIP BONDS

U. S. Correspondents Dine British Co-Workers at Paris Conference

(BY RADIO)

PARIS, July 1.—American newspaper correspondents in Paris attending the peace conference last night entertained the British correspondents at dinner. Nearly 100 prominent journalists were present at the function. Departing from the conventional the banquet was more like the famous "gridiron" dinners in Washington. There was diversion of stunts of a theatrical character that made the dinner unique even in Paris.

The committee that arranged the dinner was made up of Lincoln Eyre, New York World; Charles S. Smith, Associated Press; Elliot Shepard, New York Evening Mail; Florence O'Neil, Pittsburgh Dispatch, and Henry E. Wales, Chicago Tribune.

Herbert Swope, New York World, acted as toastmaster, and the leading speech for the American hosts was made by Richard V. Oulahan, of New York Times. George Adamson, London Times; Sidney Dark, London Daily Express; George Sait, British Government Press Bureau, and George Knox, London Morning Post, made delightful addresses for the guests.

Agency Changes Name

CHICAGO, July 8.—The advertising service agency of Gray & Benjamin, Transportation building, has changed its title to the Charles J. Benjamin Agency, named after its principal owner.

Warns Against "Legion" Swindlers

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 8.—Major Harrison Fuller, editor of the Legion Outpatch, and chairman of the American Legion in Minnesota, has issued a warning against swindlers who are soliciting and selling subscriptions for a so-called soldiers' magazine. Major Fuller explains that no advertising is being solicited for the American Legion Weekly, official organ, which began publication in New York June 28, and no attempt made to circulate it among persons who were not in the military or naval service.

CENTRALIZATION OF CIRCULATION ACCOUNTING IS EMPHASIZED

Expert Presents System That Will Fulfill All Requirements and Give Check on Print Paper Used—All Are Separated—Saving Can Be Effected.

By F. R. White.

SOME newspaper publishers do not appear to realize the value of a system of circulation accounting that will provide a complete record of the distribution of all perfect printed copies and account in full for circulation earnings and cash receipts.

A system that will fulfill these requirements, as well as furnish a check on print paper used, is not necessarily complicated, and can be devised to suit the needs of a newspaper of any size. The question of cost is not prohibitive, even for a small paper, as frequently only a little additional clerical work is necessary to make the records complete, and every publisher should know exactly where he stands on circulation and the earnings therefrom and be able to substantiate his claims as to paid circulation.

Controlling Accounts of Vital Importance

The general books should provide an arrangement of accounts conforming with the various divisions of paid circulation. These accounts in the general ledger are called controlling accounts and contain the final figures covering charges for earnings, and credits for cash receipts, returns and allowances, as well as the number of copies represented, which figures are taken, through monthly entries, from subsidiary circulation records representing the respective classes of paid circulation.

As it devolves upon the circulation department to account for all perfect printed copies, a check of print paper used and the production of printed copies therefrom may be considered in connection with circulation records.

Monthly Check on Paper Rolls

A receiving book, in bound or loose leaf form, should be kept, which will show car number, date received, mill roll number, size and mill weight (and if facilities are available, the publisher's weight) of all rolls received. This record may be used as a book inventory by showing the date each roll is taken out of stock or put on the presses, and a check on the accuracy of the record used for this purpose can be obtained by a comparison of the roll numbers not used with an actual count or listing of rolls on hand once a month. The book inventory and actual count will also serve as a check against the print paper valuation figures shown by the monthly ledger balance. A receiving record is also invaluable in furnishing support for vouchers issued in payment of paper invoices, and may be used by the bookkeeping department in working out a proof of paper production.

Some newspapers maintain a check on the stock weight of print paper used by making frequent tests of the weight of an 8-page sheet on finely balanced scales. The average newspaper, however, may obtain a good check for each month or individual car load by computing the weight of paper required to print the 8-page equivalent as shown by the press room report (see illustration) by using a formula based upon the stock weight of paper purchased. Thirty-two pound stock weight paper means 500 sheets 24"x36" should weigh 32 pounds, and to ascertain the weight of 1,000 8-page papers the following formula is used:—(assuming a 4-page sheet measures 23½"x36") 23½x36x2x2x32÷864 (24x36) or 125.33 pounds to 1,000 8-page papers.

After deducting the weight of white waste, cores and wrappers from the gross weight of paper used, divide the weight remaining by the weight of 1,000 8-page papers and the result should approximately equal the 8-page equivalent of gross press run. If the test is correctly made, and the theoretical outturn is greater than the actual number of copies produced by the presses, the discrepancy probably indicates that the paper is running heavier than 32 pounds, and consequently the printing surface of the paper purchased is correspondingly reduced.

Daily Circulation Report Important

This test can be made in the reverse order by multiplying the 8-page equivalent by the same formula and the result should equal the weight of paper used on the presses, less the weight of white waste, cores and wrappers. In either calculation paper sold or used on job work must be considered.

A daily circulation report (see illustration) should be prepared by the circulation department as the initial step in keeping a comprehensive record of circulation. This report should be made up within a day following the date of issue, while the day's developments are fresh in mind, as it sometimes happens that extra supplies of papers are sent out without a proper record being taken. Information for the report is obtained from delivery room slips, carriers' wagon deliveries, or the daily totals from dealers' and carriers' draw books, and from suburban and country dealers' blotters, mailing room reports, daily report from mail subscription department, etc. Figures showing the circulation by editions under the various captions furnish invaluable information in accomplishing the desired distribution of each issue.

The Record Book

The Circulation Record Book is provided with column headings corresponding to the daily circulation report, and the total circulation of each issue, as shown by the daily report, is copied into the record on a separate line for each day. A page should be allotted to each calendar month and Morning, Evening and Sunday issues kept separate and the totals brought down and proved promptly each month. Additional columns may be provided for city, suburban and country returns and allowances, which are deducted from gross paid circulation.

This record corresponds in importance to a general ledger; and as far as the divisions of circulation go, forms the basis of circulation accounting, the dealers' and carriers' ledgers, circulation cash books, draw books, etc., being segregated in conformity with the divisions of paid circulation as shown by this book. The value of this idea in facilitating a verification of circulation and earnings is obvious.

Where city circulation is handled on the metropolitan plan, and publishers have no knowledge of the proportion of paid circulation distributed through carriers, dealers or newsboys, the most successful system employed appears to be the driver agency plan, whereby all city circulation is charged to individual drivers who are responsible for the distribution of papers and the collections therefor. The individual accounts with the dealers and carrier boys are kept by the driver, some times with the assistance of office clerks, who write up route books, or other records necessary for the drivers' use. If it is not practicable to handle dealer circulation in outlying city territory in this manner, draw sheets and a ledger account with each dealer are used.

City driver circulation is represented on the general ledger by a controlling account to which is charged the total draw at the driver's rate, and which is credited with cash paid, returns, allowances, etc., each month; the balance due, as shown by this account, equalling the total drivers' balances outstanding, as shown by the individual ledger accounts.

If city carrier service is maintained and separate circulation figures are desired, draw books and ledger accounts are necessary where the carriers do their own collecting and keep the profits for their services, and where carriers work on salary and office men make collections, substribers' card accounts take the place of ledger accounts. Carriers' ledger accounts are handled practically the same as dealers' accounts, which are

EXTENDS POWER OVER PAPER MAKERS

Bill Introduced in Canadian Parliament Is Given First Reading After Spirited Debate Between Champions of Newspapers and Manufacturers

(BY TELEGRAPH)

OTTAWA, Ont., July 7.—A bill providing for the extension of powers and jurisdiction of the Commissioner and Controller of Paper after peace is declared, as well as for an extension of the authority of the Paper Control Tribunal was given its first reading in Parliament today, after spirited debate between speakers who favored the newspapers, and others who took the side of the paper manufacturers.

Sir Thomas White said the object of the resolution was to enable the commissioner and the Paper Control Tribunal to complete all matters undertaken and to determine all questions which had arisen prior to the declaration of peace. There was no intention of continuing the powers of the commissioner or the tribunal after this work had been cleaned up, he said.

He explained that the commissioner had been appointed under the war ministry act and that the tribunal was constituted under the same bill. Therefore, unless Parliament made provision, their powers would collapse with the declaration of peace.

Protection for Publishers

In reply to a question as to why the commissioner was appointed and at whose request, Sir Thomas replied that he had been appointed by the government to insure a supply of news print to papers at a fair profit during the war. The appointment had been made on the representation of certain Canadian newspapers that they would have to suspend publication if the high prices of news print continued.

During the war, he said, the press performed a most important function. Not only did it disseminate news, but it rendered high service in encouraging the people and in maintaining the spirit so necessary to successful prosecution of the war. Therefore, it was essential that the press should be assisted in getting news print at a fair rate. No one had been hurt by the government's action.

A. R. McMaster protested against the government's action in assisting the papers. He thought a manufacturer should be allowed to charge their own prices, and if they made excessive profits the government could take it out of them by taxes.

Newspapers Had Suffered

H. C. Hocken declared that if any industries had suffered during the war, it was the newspapers. Several papers in Ontario had been forced out of business. If the government was going to start limiting profits, news print manufacturers were good people to start on, he said.

Mr. Richardson said action had been taken by the Federal Trade Commission of the United States against a combine of news print manufacturers, and that some of the members of the combine were fined $2,500. As a result of the combine, the prices of news print had been enormously increased. Manufacturers had made large dividends, of which a large portion had been paid on pure "water."

Francis McCrae, himself a paper manufacturer, charged that practically without any hearing being given the manufacturers, the Minister of Finance had fixed the price of news print at $50 a ton. The manufacturers had asked for an investigation, and Mr. Pringle found that the average cost of production was $50 to $70, but the manufacturers were forced to sell at $50.

Manufacturers, he said, had asked that the profits of publishers likewise be investigated. Many publishers were able to pay a good deal larger dividend than before the war, but nothing was heard about them, he said. He declared that the president of the Privy Council had written to Commissioner Pringle, telling him not to investigate the publishers. This statement was afterward denied by Hon. N. W. Rowell.

Sir Thomas White challenged the statement that the price of $50 was fixed without giving the manufacturers opportunity to state their case.

Manufacturers Were Obdurate

Sir Thomas declared that when he was notified that a number of newspapers might have to go out of business, he called manufacturers and publishers together and for five weeks tried to bring them to an agreement. The manufacturers refused to meet the situation.

Sir Thomas referred to a statement of the financial standing of the Laurentide Paper Company. This statement showed that conditions in this company were most satisfactory. But in the next column of the same page appeared a complaint of one of the officials of the company that the government was treating news print manufacturers unfairly.

Mr. McCrea charged that the Canadian manufacturers of paper had been forced to supply paper to publishers at less than cost, and that the press of Canada had been bought and paid for with the money of Canadian news print manufacturers.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among non-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines af advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in new business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial in many ways—it has made new advertisers and helped circulation—it has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for twenty weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

"A TALE of Two Cities" And a Third A-HEAD

In recent issues of trade journals there appeared the following advertisement in full page space:

"A Tale of Two Cities and of Two Newspapers"

"THE NEW YORK TIMES, first newspaper in America's first city, in a page advertisement in Editor & Publisher for June 5 announced a gain of 1,535,457 lines of advertising for the first five months of this year and declared this 'represents by far the greatest growth of any New York newspaper.'

THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS, in a double page advertisement in Editor & Publisher for June 12, announced a gain of 1,740,886 lines of advertising for the first five months of this year, 205,429 lines more than the New York Times gained in the same period.

and now for the third—THE FORT WORTH STAR-TELEGRAM, the fastest growing newspaper in the Southwest, announces a gain of 1,951,942 lines of advertising for the first five months of this year—416,485 lines more than the New York Times gained in the same period, and 211,056 lines more than the Birmingham News gained.

FORT WORTH STAR-TELEGRAM gained 2,432,660 lines for the first SIX months of 1919 over the same peroid of 1918.

EARLY RELEASE FOR LUDENDORFF STORY

Inside History of War from German Side to Be Ready for American Newspapers Early in August—Manuscript Now on Way

P. C. Eastment, vice-president of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, informs Editor & Publisher that the Ludendorff story of the war will be ready for release to newspapers early in August.

It is expected, according to Mr. Eastment, that the manuscript will reach here within a few days. A good deal of interest has been aroused by the announcement of this story of the German side of the war by the man in whose brain originated the plans of campaigns and into whose hands was placed the virtual control of military operations of the late Central Empires.

Shortly before the signing of the armistice, when he recognized that the struggle was over, Ludendorff went to Stockholm, taking with him a great mass of records. Upon this task he has concentrated his whole time for the intervening months, and his story is expected to be a close-up history of the German effort to dominate the world.

"There will be about one hundred daily installments of approximately 2,500 words each," said Mr. Eastment. "The serial publication in the newspapers will be in advance of the publication of the manuscript in book form. This will be done in October.

"Lord Northcliffe has purchased the serial rights for the British empire, except Canada. The biggest cash advance ever made in the history of the publishing business has been made to the Swedish publishers who represents Ludendorff in the matter. The story will carry a large number of illustrations."

It is said that the story has been written with the approval of the present German government.

Charged with Sedition

SCRANTON, Pa., July 7.—Nickolai Howwich, editor of the Novy Mir, a New York publication, is held under bail on charges of seditious utterances. He was arrested following a radical speech at a mass meeting in which he advocated the use of force. He claims he is a personal friend of Lenine and a former co-worker of Trotzky, although a naturalized American citizen.

BRAUN ELECTED BANK PRESIDENT

Will of T. H. Given Gives no Details of Estate Value

PITTSBURGH, July 9.—The will of T. H. Given, president of the Pittsburgh Post and Sun Publishing Company, just filed for probate, makes no estimate of the value of the estate. The executors are A. E. Braun and George C. Moore. It is understood that Mrs. Anna Given Kerr, surviving sister of Mr. Given, has a life interest in the estate, and that the executors have authority to dispose of the varied interests of the decedent as may be deemed best by them.

A. E. BRAUN

Owing to Mr. Given's death, a reorganization of the Farmers' Deposit National Bank of Pittsburgh was affected, and Arthur E. Braun, vice-president and general manager of the Pittsburgh Post and Sun, was elected president. Mr. Braun, while a young man, has been associated with Mr. Given and his banking and commercial interests for 25 years.

Plan New Copyright Law

OTTAWA, Ont., July 7.—"A complete study of relations of the governments of Canada and the United States on the subject of copyright" will be undertaken this summer by a special committee of Parliament, and it is expected that a bill, embodying its recommendations will be passed in the fall. The majority of influential Canadian newspapers are supporting the Authors' and Composers' Association in its fight for a revision of the present law.

EIGHT FULL PAGE ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES BY THESE WRITERS

(By arrangement with the Metropolitan Magazine)

Release Dates Begin SUNDAY, AUGUST 3rd, 1919

Editors may divide the articles as they see fit, using each in its entirety on a given Sunday or through the week.

WHAT THE SERIES COVERS

The scope of the articles is explained in the following introduction to the first article of the Series, which is by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle:

Since the Great War, the peoples of the world have turned with a quickened interest and an almost insatiable curiosity to the eternal and unsolved problem of ages—after Death, what?

You—all of us—have a deep-rooted and instinctive human longing for light on the subject. Call it an intensification of Spiritualism, Occultism, Mysticism, Psychic Phenomena, what not, the fact remains that man today as never before is reaching out, groping as it were, in an endeavor to break down the barrier separating this, the finite world, and what we have come to call the World Beyond.

Only a few years ago the persons chiefly concerned with such a subject, or in any event those conspicuously identified with it in general public knowledge, were professional mediums, fortune tellers, clairvoyants, tricksters, stage performers. But that order has changed. Today, some of the world's best intellects are giving serious and scientific consideration to the matter.

Some of them believe they have found the answer; they are convinced not only that proof of life after death has been scientifically adduced, but of the ability of the departed to communicate with the living. Others remain skeptical, yet wavering towards conversion. Still others are scoffers, obdurate and unconvinced.

In view of the widespread interest in the subject The..... begins today the publication of an unusual group of articles. All deal with some phase of what, for lack of a better term, has come to be called Spiritualism. Roughly, they range themselves in three groups—For, Against, Neutral. Thus the series—there will be eight articles in all, appearing consecutively—will be in effect a debate. * * * *

LETTERS FROM YOUR READERS

No subject has a wider human appeal than this. It will bring hundreds of letters from interested readers. Nearly everybody has at sometime or other had an experience that he regards as supernatural. Some editors may care to offer prizes for the best communications received. This is of course a matter of individual taste and preference.

The Release Date of the First Article, SUNDAY, AUGUST 3rd, is near.

You may have this striking group of articles in the form of copy and photographs, copy and mats of cuts, copy and electros of cuts, full page mats of copy and cuts.

TELLS HOW LIBERTY LOANS "SOLD" NEWSPAPERS TO ADVERTISERS

Remarkable Success of Campaigns Convinced Business Men that They Should Use Same Media For Themselves, T. H. Moore Declares at Southern Publishers' Convention.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 9.

THE remarkable results achieved through newspaper advertising in Liberty Loan campaigns have made newspaper advertising one of the commodities that is today most easily sold to the big business men of America, Thomas H. Moore, associate director of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, declared in an address at the convention of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association here Tuesday.

Mr. Moore also announced in his address that the new plan of the Bureau of Advertising for determining membership fees on a basis of line rates of newspapers for advertising rather than on city population, had proven an unqualified success. It is confidently expected that the increase in dues will enable the Bureau to open the needed branch offices in Chicago and San Francisco.

Opposition in Congress Proved Helpful

"Times certainly have changed," he said, in discussing the efficiency of newspaper advertising in the Liberty Loan campaigns. "The mention of advertising in Washington two years ago was like waving a red flag at a bull. If you gentlemen have read some of the debates in Congress on the subject of advertising, you doubtless have gotten a few good laughs, even if you did wonder how it were possible for human heads to contain such a lack of information.

"We don't wish to criticise Congress, however. We ought to give them a vote of thanks, because the past attitude of Washington in regard to advertising is one of the things that is enabling you gentlemen to show 100 per cent. increases in your advertising totals at the present time.

A Profitable Object Lesson

"When Congress did not provide money for advertising Liberty Loans, that money had to be raised elsewhere. Accordingly, as you know, great patriotic movements were set afoot and contributions were gathered in from business men, from bankers and from corporations.

"Business men, having contributed the money to pay for advertising, were naturally interested in the results, and, having seen the wonderful sales due to Liberty Loan advertising, they were quickly convinced that advertising would be a good thing for their own businesses.

"And today newspaper advertising is one of the easiest commodities to sell to big business men.

"Big business and little business were ready to advertise the day the armistice was signed, and the volume has today assumed such proportions that the newspapers will in 1919 carry $120,000,000 worth of national advertising.

"Less than five years ago they carried about $45,000,000 worth of national advertising and thought they were having big years.

Is Solving Reconstruction

"So far as this country is concerned, advertising has pretty nearly solved the immediate problems of reconstruction without waiting for the statesmen to find out just what was the right thing to do.

"Business is good in the United States at the present time, and some of the great retail centres like New York and Chicago are having enormous business. Many New York states at this moment are selling 50 per cent. more goods than they did one year ago.

"There is no problem of unemployment that I know of—certainly none indicated by the pages of help wanted ads, the newspapers are carrying. There is considerable hand-to-mouth buying, yet the demand in every line of commodity is in advance of supply.

"I am told that many of your newspapers are running as much as 100 per cent. ahead in foreign advertising. This is remarkable, but at the same time it merely reflects the pace shown everywhere. The immediate outlook for fall advertising is very bright. There are enormous plans under way in every part of the country. So far as you publishers are concerned, you are in for a boom year.

A Few Pessimists

"There are some pessimists, however. There are some men who believe the present situation is too good to be true. At a dinner of big business men the other night, Charles M. Schwab said he predicted good times for the immediate future. At the same time, however, he added that he would give a liberal discount for advance payment on his prediction.

"It is up to you men to help make the advertising pay if you want it to continue. It is up to you men to close the door on the quack and the fraud and the faker. It is up to you to stop knocking. It is up to you men to surround your advertising with the element of confidence.

"It is up to you men to see that your local dealers are alive to the advantage of having manufacturers advertise their goods in your columns. It is up to you men to close the doors on the free publicity seeker and keep them closed for all time.

Newspapers Should Wake Up

"And, more important, it is also up to you men to catch the spirit of the times and to advertise. The poorest advertisers today are the publishers of dail newspapers.

"The magazines are at this tim spending millions of dollars advertisin in the daily newspapers. This figure not an exaggeration. I have befo me statistics from various cities ind cating that the amount of money spe by the magazines in newspaper adver ing during the five months just pass ranges from $100,000 to several hundr thousand dollars per city.

"Out of all the newspapers publishe in this country I can think of just or that pursues a definite policy of new paper advertising. That particul newspaper will spend perhaps $100,0 this year advertising in other new papers, and advertising according to fixed and definite plan. As a result will show some very marvelous increas and something like $2,000,000 worth new business.

Indications of Progress

"The average newspaper, when it do advertise, usually contents itself by say ing that it is carrying so many millio more lines than its contemporary acro the street, or it assures the advertis that he need only use one newspaper t cover a city.

"Meetings such as this are a step fo ward, and the Southern Newspape Publishers' Association is to be co gratulated on the progress it has mad

NEWSPAPERS MADE BIG AD GAINS OVER FIRST SIX MONTHS OF 1918

Figures Compiled by EDITOR & PUBLISHER Show Increases of Millions of Lines and Testify to Unexampled Activity In All Branches of American Commerce.

THE newspapers of the country have made, generally speaking, such notable gains in advertising volume in the first six months of 1919 over the same period of last year that it is safe to say that all previous records have been shattered.

The figures showing comparative volume of advertising, in agate lines, for representative newspapers, as published herewith, are compiled from reports from publishers and advertising managers sent to EDITOR & PUBLISHER within the past week. They tell a heartening story of growth all along the line. They indicate that optimistic forecasts of the business in prospect for the newspapers in the present year, made in these columns after the signing of the armistice, were well founded.

Gains running into millions of lines for a six months' period are eloquent testimony as to the unexampled business activity in all commercial lines and of the growing trend toward the newspaper as the primary medium for all advertising.

1919 is to be the banner year for newspaper advertising, truly. Yet the story is but half told. That the remaining months of the year will show a still greater volume of gain over the ame period of 1918 is assured.

AIR SERVICE BECOMES NEWSPAPER MAKERS PROBLEM OF FUTURE

Airplanes Used in Race for "Beats" With First Pictures of Dempsey-Willard Fight—Bundles of Extras Dropped from the Clouds for Ohio Fans.

WHILE the part that air transportation will play in the newspaper publishing business in the near future is very problematical, it has reached a point where it is a publisher and editor's question. It is bouttd to grow more important each day and demands study on the part of the man who wishes to keep with the eaders.

Three efforts to use air transportation as a means of quick dispatch of news pictures during the past week were, in part, at least, failures. The dirigible R-34 brought pictures of the signing of the peace treaty but on the trip did not equal the time of the faster of the ocean grey-hounds.

Dirigibles Impractical as News Bearers

Viewed from every angle, the dirigible does not enter into newspaper making for the present. They are too expensive to float, twice as expensive to anchor and almost impossible to hold.

A large dirigible that was being used by newspaper photographers making pictures of the Willard-Dempsey fight at Toledo on July 4 broke from her anchorage and finally landed in Lake Maumee. Dirigibles, to date, have a habit of running away, and even when securely fastened on the ground need a guard of several hundred men.

Airplanes Aid Distribution

The seaplane and airplane, however, have already reached a point of development where they have been of real service in registering newspaper enterprise, and to many persons who have made study of the subject, it is only a question of months until the heavier-than-air machines will prove of real value, in quick newspaper distribution at least.

Within the last two years airplanes have been used pretty freely in all parts of the country for the distribution of newspapers merely for advertising purposes. In each case the purpose at least was accomplished.

When the Willard-Dempsey fight ended at Toledo on July 4, two airplanes, one flying for the New York American and the other the New York Herald, were waiting in a nearby field to carry pictures for the following morning's editions.

The flight of the American was to be a straightaway from Toledo to New York. The pictures for the Herald were to be carried in three relays. The New York American airplane, driven by Lieutenant Kenneth M. Murray, formerly of the United States air service, made a clean getaway, but the machine carrying pictures for the Herald was wrecked on the takeoff. This race with pictures was sport, and, to many, more thrilling than the fight itself.

Forced to Descend

Lieutenant Murray's motor started to behave badly shortly after he got under way with the photographers' plates for the American. At Clearfield, Penn., he was compelled to make a landing. His machine was badly damaged, and after placing it under guard he began a wild automobile ride to Tyrone, where he made train connections for New York, arriving shortly after 6 o'clock Saturday morning.

The plates he carried were rushed to the office of the American and turned over to the Journal, William Randolph Hearst's evening newspaper. The Journal scored a distinct scoop by the publication of the pictures, the first to reach New York, in all editions that followed.

Following the wrecking of the first machine, carrying pictures for the New York Herald, a special messenger was placed aboard the Twentieth Century Limited of the New York Central Railroad. He carried the plates to the first relay point, Erie, Pa., and then turned them over to the waiting aviators, who again took up the race. The Herald pictures reached New York hours before their delivery would have been possible by the all-rail route, and were used in all Sunday editions of that paper.

Cleveland Press Scores

On a shorter run, 120 miles from Toledo to Cleveland, the Cleveland Press scored a notable beat by the use of airplanes in carrying pictures. In one hour and twelve minutes after Dempsey was declared winner an airplane carrying Clarence Stieglitz, Press staff photographer, landed in Cleveland with pictures of the three rounds; fifteen minutes later the pictures were in the Press office and in record time an extra was on the streets that contained six pages of pictures and a complete story of the fight.

The Press had used an earlier plane to carry pictures of the preliminaries and they were used in earlier editions. Ben E. Ling, of the Press editorial staff, was in charge of the first pictures. The success of the Press demonstrated that airplanes are practical where speed is the first consideration for short distances. The success of airplane mail service, which has become so regular and uneventful that it no longer attracts attention, has demonstrated that the day of distribution by airplane is possible, and if put into practice will by its speed widen the circulation field of all big city dailies.

Toledo News Bee's Extra

One of the most notable uses made of the airplane for the purpose of quick distribution of newspapers was made in connection with the same event. Immediately after Willard tossed his towel in the ring, the Toledo News Bee presses began to grind out fight extras, containing pictures and the story. Waiting airplanes on non-stop flights, augmented by motor trucks and motorcycles, in record time, made a complete distribution in all territory within a radius of 70 miles.

W. G. Chandler, business manager of the News Bee, says the venture by airplanes was in every way a success. The bundles of papers were dropped through a shute while the machines were traveling at high speed. Each bundle was attached to parachutes, which brought them gently to the ground.

The dirigible R-34 brought a great many news stories for the news associations and newspapers. Many of their stories were put on the wire with the by-line "By Transocean Airship" and "By R-34 Air Route." The International News Service issued to their clients a mail extra that contained only news received by the air route.

BINGHAMTON REPUBLICAN SOLD

New Owners are G. F. Johnson and Representative W. H. Hill

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., July 9.—The Republican, the only morning newspaper in the city, has been bought by George F. Johnson, millionaire shoe manufacturer, and Congressman William H. Hill. The sale came as Messrs. Johnson and Hill were about to start plans for establishing a new morning paper.

The money involved was not announced, but an estimate by persons here set the price at $150,000.

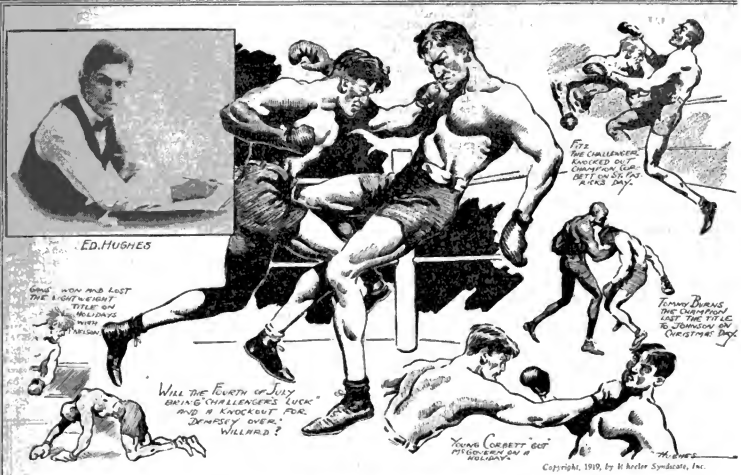
Representative Hill obtained control of the Republican organization in this vicinity last fall.

There is only one other newspaper in Binghamton, the Press, an evening paper, owned by Willis Sharpe Kilmer. The Press is independent in politics. For many years Representative Hill has published the Johnson City Record. Before America entered the war steps were taken to turn this newspaper into a daily, with a Binghamton edition, or to purchase the Republican and convert the two into a strong two-city newspaper.

Australians Seek Plant Ideas

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 9.—A. G. Wise, general manager, and Robert Nicholson, works manager of the Herald and Weekly Times, Ltd., Melbourne, Australia, were among the recent visitors at the plant of the Kansas City Star and Times. The two men are on their way to London and stopped off at Kansas City en route from San Francisco to Chicago. They will visit Detroit, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Washington and New York, before sailing for home. Messrs. Wise and Nicholson are gathering data for the erection of a new plant.

Seattle Celebrates Peace



SEATTLE, July 7.—Deafening bombs were hurled high into the air from the roof of the Seattle Times Building at intervals for nearly two hours while the Times' powerful whistle blew almost continuously during this time when news of Germany's formal acceptance of the peace treaty was received over the wires. The Times also staged a gigantic July 4th pyrotechnic display and a public street dance in Times Square.

We are not getting "swelled up" about it, but there's nothing in Brooklyn growing faster than the Standard Union.

A New Tri-Weekly Sports Feature Which Has Met With Instantaneous Success

Many leading newspapers throughout the country wired in their orders as soon as they saw samples of this new service.

It consists of three five-column cartoons a week, for release on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and on Saturday or Sunday at the option of the newspaper.

The Tuesday and Thursday releases are each accompanied by a 500-word story dealing with the same subject matter as the cartoon.

The week-end cartoon is accompanied by a 1,000-word article.

All are up to the minute, and deal with events of outstanding interest in baseball, football, boxing, tennis, golf and other sports.

Mr. Hughes for years has been known to readers of newspapers as one of the best sports cartoonists in the country. He recently has returned from service in the army and his new work is even better than that which he did before the war. He himself is an athlete and sportsman and has a wide and thorough knowledge of the subjects on which he draws and writes.

This feature cannot help but give that pulling power to your sports page which all editors seek.

One of the features of this series will be Mr. Hughes' cartoons on "The Dauntless Division—Fistiania's Own", drawings of great champions of the ring, showing how they won and lost their titles. Other drawings, besides those of spot news interest, will include sketches of great baseball players, tennis champions, and others.

URGES CENTRALIZATION OF ACCOUNTING

explained in a subsequent paragraph. The card accounts are filed by routes and the number of subscribers on each route should be periodically compared with the carriers' draw and route list and all differences corrected in order to assure correct carrier circulation figures and protect the publishers against loss due to the carrier boys drawing more papers than the cash collections cover.

With the office collection carrier system a controlling account is particularly valuable in order to learn the total amount of uncollected subscribers' accounts outstanding each month. The controlling account can be charged with the total monthly carrier circulation at the subscription rate or wholesale rate paid by the boys, and credited with all collections and allowances. The balance in this account should be periodically compared with a list of the total balances shown on carriers' ledger accounts or subscribers' card accounts, as the case may be, and any differences located and adjusted.

Sales Should Not Be Divided

Street sales are usually handled on a cash basis, being paid for on delivery or on the following day. In some instances all street sales in the city, or in certain sections of the city, are handled by one dealer, or agent, and in such cases settlement may be made once or twice a week and ledger accounts are required. The figures shown in the daily circulation report may represent the net sales, after deducting unsold copies; or the gross draw with returns shown in the returns column of circulation record book. The controlling account in the general ledger may show the value of net sales charged and cash credits, or value of gross sales and credits for cash, returns, etc.

Counter sales are negligible, as a rule, and can be combined with street sales, consideration being given to the fact that counter sales are made at the retail price, whereas street sales are made at wholesale rates.

Bulk sales, or special sales of five or more copies of one issue, usually at the retail price, are shown separately on the daily circulation report, but may be combined with counter sales for accounting purposes. A complete record should be kept of the date, price, amount and purchaser of such sales.

City, Suburban and Country Dealers should be segregated in accordance with the divisions shown in the circulation record book, with a separate controlling account in the general ledger for each division; unless on account of the comparatively small number it is desired to combine Suburban and Country Dealers. Where the number of accounts is not large, one binder with proper divisions may be used.

Listing Dealer Charges

In ruling the ledger accounts provision should be made for showing the copies and value charged, and the cash, returns and allowances credited, with a column for the monthly balance. The charges are posted from the draw books or blotters and the total copies charged in all accounts for one month should agree with the circulation record book and form the basis of the controlling account entry. If more than one wholesale rate is charged the bookkeeper's working sheets should furnish proof of the accuracy of the monthly charges by listing each dealer's total draw under the proper rate, the total amount of monthly charges thus arrived at equalling the charges to dealer's accounts.

Allowances for returns, short in bundles and delayed or missed copies should be covered by allowance vouchers, consecutively numbered, showing the date, name of account, copies, amount, etc., and properly O.K.'d by someone in authority. All vouchers should be listed in consecutive order in an allowance journal provided with the necessary columns, with separate sets of columns showing copies and amount of allowances for each division of circulation represented by controlling accounts. From this journal postings are made to the dealers' accounts and the monthly totals are credited to the various carriers' or dealers' controlling accounts, and earnings account (which was originally credited with the gross draw) is charged. The total number of copies represented being deducted from the dealers' gross draw, as shown by the circulation record book, to arrive at the net paid circulation.

Mail Subscriptions

The number of mail subscribers is ascertained from a count of the list or galley, and changes in the list are added to or deducted from the count from day to day to obtain the figure for the daily circulation report. The list should be recounted once a month and any necessary adjustments made in the circulation figures; and a complete galley should be carefully bound together and preserved each month for future reference.

For a proper accounting of all mail subscriptions a subscription register, or circulation cash book, it recommended. This book contains a record of all mail subscriptions received, showing the name, address, term of subscription, amount of money received commission allowed, subscription price and any other information desired, in separate columns. Each day's cash total is carried to the general cash book, and to this extent the register becomes a subsidiary cash book. The entries are numbered consecutively, and this number is used on the stencil or slug which prints the address label or wrapper. The same number is stamped, or written, on the subscription order and the orders are filed consecutively. If an order covers more than one subscription the same number can be given to each subscription on the list.

A card system may be maintained showing subscriber's name and other particulars, filed in accordance with expiration dates. But the cards may be dispensed with where the subscription number and expiration date are clearly shown on the galley; and the expirations can be pulled by going over the lists once a week, or oftener, and marking the expired subscriptions.

The method of numbering mail subscriptions, as outlined above, is practically the equivalent of a ledger or card account with each subscriber, as the subscription number found on the galley or address label is the key to the various records covering transactions with subscribers. On account of the ease and facility with which subscriptions can be traced and complaints adjusted under this system, it has been found by experience to be the best adapted for this purpose. The subscription register can be installed at any time, and in the course of the average period covered by subscriptions, most of the list will have been given numbers, and maintenance thereafter will be an easy matter.

The Annual Inventory

Several methods are employed to arrive at the accrued monthly earnings from mail subscriptions, but this question is complicated by the various rates in use and terms of subscription. An accrual register, similar to an insurance

NEW YORK STATE

An International Market

New York is an entertaining state—perhaps the most entertaining state in the Union

More people visit New York either in the cities or in the country every year than go to any other state.

These people come from everywhere—not only throughout America but Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and South America.

Merchandise introduced and popularized in New York has its fame automatically spread in every direction.

Try your selling campaign in a given territory. Let New York be that territory. Concentrate your selling efforts. Use these daily newspapers. Tell the visitors just where in New York they can find your goods to take back home. You will be surprised at results.

KANSAS SAGE TURNS TO LYRIC STUNTS

William Allen White, Yielding to Lure of Summer in London, Writes Ode to His New Straw Hat—Lofty Inspiration

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

PARIS, June 30.—At last the Peace Mill at Paris turns out a thriller. The newspaper men have long insisted that one of their number would be responsible for a break in the succession of events that were being decided behind closed doors with no real announcements following.

It took one of their number to break the silence of what started as the Big Thirteen, then the Big Ten, later the Big Five, still latter the Big Four, and at last writing, the Big Three, and come out in the open. William Allen White, of the Emporia Gazette, creator of the "Court of Boyville," "Stratagems and Spoils," "In Our Town," "A Certain Rich Man," "The Old Order Changeth," and "God's Puppets," has broken into verse.

While he hied himself away modestly to woo the Muse in London town, it was here in Paris this poetic child of his brain was first set before the eyes of his fellow craftsmen. This was fitting, for here in Paris it was that the talented Kansan, covering the Peace Conference for a syndicate of American newspapers, undoubtedly got the inspiration for the epic that now reaches a public overfed on the self-determination of peoples and open covenants openly arrived at, and on decidedly slim poetic rations these many moons.

The reader will be quick to detect in Mr. White's poem the lofty inspiration that could only have come from such historic surroundings, the elbowing of the world's roster of statesmen, the impress of an epoch-making event.

Anyway all will admit its timeliness. Here it is:

An Intermezzo for the Fourth Act

If my peculiar putchritude in Paris seems to please,
Upon the Champs-Elysees 'neath the blooming chestnut trees,
Or if about the Ritzell in a bell's melange of dress,
Which bobbled in the war-bow you observe me now and then,
Or, if the picture rising of my pale pekoy form,
A-doffin' deep the Boulevards should make your heart grow warm,
O Phidias, wipe that plaster from your memory cold and flat,
You should see me in my new straw hat.

For I'm in London now, my dear, in my London old and grey,
And seeing is feeling in the past and summers under way.
But London by a decent town, polite, and snug and cozy,
It breaks my heart to friend and foe break hat like to this,
And she rocks and how she frets and yet she is nice as she was awed,
So I'm here in London town to give the poor a treat,
And if I'm middle aged and bald, slow and rather fat,
You should see me in my new straw hat.

Perhaps we are not immortal, lass, but oh, I wish we were,
Though not to save some pretty saint or pale philosopher,
I want to find those lads whom life's sweet polgnant beauty wrenched,
Who had to duck and leave the show before the second act,
Say Shubert, Keats or Phidias, those olden, golden boys,
And tell them something of the play and how it never stops,
For I have seen three acts and now I'm fifty—but at that,
You should see me in my new straw hat.

Prizes for Best Ads, A. A. C. Week

NEW ORLEANS, July 7.—The Item is offering cash prizes of $500 to the writer of the best advertisement to be printed in the columns during the period of the Associated Advertising convention—September 21 to 25. Two hundred and fifty dollars will go to the writer of the best local advertisement, and a like amount to the writer of the best piece of foreign copy. The judges will be William C. D'Arcy, chairman; O. C. Harn and Stewart O. Landry.

BOSTON NEWS WRITERS' STRIKE IS AVERTED

close to 90 per cent in the Boston field.

The agreement which the publishers are asked to sign, calls for present working conditions, which are considered fair, there being a six-day week and a virtual eight-hour day already in operation, and approximately a 25 per cent increase over the wages paid when the contract was submitted three months ago.

Since that time, however, according to the union officials, substantial increases in wages have been obtained on all papers, except in the Hearst organization, and on The Record. This 25 per cent increase will be equivalent to $38 for reporters and $45 for copy desk and re-write men.

One incident in connection with the controversy was the action of the Allied Printing Trades Council recently, in voting to instruct the secretary, Daniel J. McDonald, to revoke the Allied Printing Trades Label carried by the oston American and the Boston Record, for violation of contract.

Although the News Writers' Union of Boston has been in existence for 23 years, it is the first time in its history that veteran copy desk, re-write and star staff men have shown any enthusiastic interest in the organization.

The Wage Conference Committee, handling the interests of the union in its dealings with the publishers, consists of William S. O'Connor, president; M. J. Flynn, secretary and business agent; Edward J. Kenny, Walter L. Fogg, Florence Cowles and George E. Richards.

Joseph Dallas, New England representative of the International Typographical Union; M. J. O'Donnell, president of the Boston Central Labor Union, and P. Harry Jennings, business agent of the latter body, have also assisted the newswriters' committee.

The Boston Central Labor Union has taken action on the controversy by adopting resolutions condemning the publishers for failing to recognize the union. Moral and financial support was pledged the writers, and a committee was named to confer with the publishers in an attempt to bring about recognition.

This committee is composed of a representative of the teamsters, wagon drivers, electricians, engineers and firemen, and the business agent of the Central Labor Union.

In the event of no progress being made and the publishers remaining opposed to the News Writers' Union, the Central Labor Union, in its resolutions adopted today, promised "unreserved support" to the newsmen.

Brunson and Gardiner Buy Paper

FLORENCE, S. C., July 7.—Mason C. Brunson and Charles S. Gardiner have purchased the Daily Times. They have both been with the Times for several years. Mr. Brunson, who was formerly business manager of the Charleston News and Courier, will be editor, while Mr. Gardiner will be business manager. The latter is just out of the army.

tripled its production of Canister in 1918!

Do you know what that means?

Perhaps you are NOT very well posted on West Virginia, do not realize to the full what it means to be the richest area of its size in the world, in natural resources!

West Virginia is a territory by itself and in itself, American white, well-balanced in industries, agriculture, manufactures, mines, railroads, schools, and trade distribution. It will take whatever sells generally (nationally) if advertised in the newspapers and carried by the stores.

A little money placed in these papers makes a BIG advertiser in West Virginia. A column every week for a year in all the English language dailies would cost only about a cent per inhabitant.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER Q & A

Service Department

NOTICE: Questions concerning newspaper technical trade matters and newspaper advertising should be addressed to Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER, 1117 World Building, New York. These communications and answers will be published, unless the correspondent requests private reply; then self-addressed stamped envelope should be furnished. Correspondents desiring anonymity should indicate initials to be published.

Q.—What is a "Heeler," in newspaper parlance? H. T. M.

A.—The cub reporters for college dailies are known as "heelers." In some offices cubs are called "legs." This because of the nature of the assignments generally given to beginners—running about verifying addresses, securing photos, etc. The college journalists evidently consider "heeler" as a more expressive term.

Q.—What is meant by "spot news?" Adams.

A.—The first news of an event of real interest is usually called "spot news." A report of a scheduled event is not, generally speaking, to be classed as spot news. The term applies to first stories of happenings, such as disasters, murders, elopements, accidents, deaths, etc.

Q.—Who owns a newspaper advertisement? What should be the ethics in the following situation:

A certain firm takes an ad. in a newspaper. The editor of the newspaper, on the request of the firm, drafts an ad. suitable to the particular firm, which is very pleasing to that firm. Along comes a man who gets up a booklet of the town, paying for the same by ads. When the booklet appeared the ad. made by the editor and running in his paper appeared in all its features in the booklet. Neither the firm nor the booklet maker have ever said "scat" to the editor. Who owns a newspaper advertisement?

Thanking you for your interpretation of this situation, I am, G. F. A.

A.—When special copy is prepared in a newspaper office, either at the request of the advertiser or for submission to him on approval, it is the custom to regard such copy—after its publication in the newspaper for which it was prepared—as the property of the advertiser, to be used wherever he may elect. In most instances the preparation of special copy for advertisers by a newspaper's service department is in line with its policy of developing the account on right lines. Unless, therefore, a special understanding exists, the advertiser owns the advertisement.

Q.—The Eagle, a county seat daily, can guarantee to its advertisers a net, paid, delivered circulation exceeding 9,000 copies. Please tell us the generally accepted net, local, advertising rate for such a paper.

B. L. W.

A.—Circulation is not the only determining factor in fixing advertising rates. Quality is a distinct value. In the Pennsylvania Territorial advertisements, note the variety of rates.

Fix an advertising rate by the same means that a manufacturer fixes the sales price of any manufactured product by determining the overhead expense, adding a reasonable profit on investment. From this basis work out an advertising rate that assures profit.

Circulation revenue should at least cover paper cost, press room salaries and circulation department overhead.

EDITOR BEFORE PARLIAMENT

J. R. Robinson Defies Attempt to Make Him Explain Editorial

OTTAWA, Ont., July 8.—A spirited time such as is seldom experienced by a commission of Parliament resulted when the Cost of Living Commission, consisting of members of the House, summoned John Ross Robinson, editor of the Toronto Telegram, to give evidence. Marquis of Queensbury rules threatened to prevail when the militant editor was asked to "explain" a recent editorial in which he declared that the manager of a pork-packing concern had "outbrained" the committee, withholding certain facts which he should have furnished the committee.

Mr. Robinson took the ground that if he had said anything libelous, he was responsible to the courts and he did not propose to be placed on trial by the committee.

New Orleans Item Buys Land

NEW ORLEANS, La., July 7.—The Item has completed the purchase of property running from Union to Perdido street, between St. Charles and Carondelet streets, and intends to publish there as soon as possible. The ground area is about 14,000 square feet. The Item also has leased the Joseph Schwartz building, on Baronne street. The plan is to build a fireproof building on the Perdido street end of its property, housing therein the mechanical departments and other departments. The two-story building facing Union street will be altered, the ground floor to be occupied by the advertising and business department, and the upper floor by the editorial department.

Big Men Welcome Legion Paper

Messages from Lord Northcliff and from Gen. John J. Pershing are features of the first number of the American Legion Weekly, official magazine of the national organization of veterans of the great war, which was issued in New York for the first time July 4. Other features for the new paper are William H. Taft and articles by Major Rupert Hughes, the novelist; Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, and Walter Camp.

Capper Men in Annual Conference

TOPEKA, Kan., July 8.—The annual conference of the advertising and editorial forces of the Capper Publications, just held, closed with a dinner given by Advertising Counselor Hugh McVey and Mrs. McVey at their home.

EDITORIAL

FOR AN INTERCHANGE OF STAFF MEN

THE idea proposed by Ralph D. Blumenfeld, editor of the London Daily Express, through the Victory Number of Editor & Publisher, for an interchange of staff members by leading British and American newspapers, is now being earnestly discussed on both sides of the ocean.

Upon his return to England Mr. Blumenfeld took up the proposition with leading British newspapermen and so favorably was the idea received that a committee of editors and publishers was formed to consider details.

Last week Mr. Leavis, of the British Newspaper Publishers' Association, cabled Hon. Frank P. Glass, President of the A. N. P. A., stating that plans had been about matured for an exchange of staff men with American newspapers. The details of these plans are to be made known shortly.

Mr. Glass informs Editor & Publisher that he is taking up the matter with the Board of Directors of the A. N. P. A., and expects to be authorized to appoint an American committee. He has not yet had an opportunity to test the sentiment of American publishers and editors fully, but personally is in entire sympathy with Mr. Blumenfeld's plan.

Readers of Editor & Publisher will recall that Mr. Blumenfeld urged that the plan be considered on a large scale, so that it would from the beginning operate effectually to establish better understanding and relations between the press of Great Britain and America. "The thing is in the nature of scholarships," he explained, "and it is certainly worthy of the attention of newspaper proprietors both from the point of view of betterment in journalism and betterment in international relations."

Mr. Blumenfeld has called attention to the fact that petty animosities often arise from trifling mistakes due to ignorance—that little items appearing in British newspapers often carry grotesque notions to readers about American affairs, and that the same thing applies to the treatment and interpretation of British news by American papers. It would be the business of visiting staff men to study the people, institutions, viewpoints, national policies, public men and movements of Great Britain and the United States. After a year's experience on an English newspaper an American newspaperman would have acquired such familiarity with British affairs that he would be considered a safe, sane, trustworthy as an authority on foreign news and would be able to largely eliminate from the columns of his paper, those foolish things which make only for prejudice and misunderstanding between the people of England and America. A year's experience on an American newspaper would accomplish the same thing for the British journalist.

The plan, in its conception, is big with promise. The development of its details will require vision and courage. For, like all innovations, it must win, if at all, through the enthusiastic support of those who believe in its usefulness.

Let us assume, for example, that the London Times and the Philadelphia Public Ledger should agree to exchange staff men, one or more from each newspaper, for the period of a year. Obviously, neither Lord Northcliffe nor Cyrus H. K. Curtis would consider such a plan unless they were assured, through contracts with the men selected, of their services to their newspapers for a reasonable period following this adventure in newspaper training. It would appear, however, that the matter of financing such interchanges should be simple. By agreement between the publishers the men could be paid salaries equivalent to their present earnings. By contracts with the men they could be assured of increased salaries upon their return to their home offices. The actual expense of the participating newspapers would be represented in transportation costs and perhaps incidental items.

The opportunity for a year of actual experience on a big newspaper abroad would appeal to the ambitious men of our calling very strongly. Particularly would it appeal to the younger men who aspire to real distinction in their profession. They would feel that, in a sense, they had been selected for an important, historic interchange mission—that it had been given to them to share in an adventure of far-reaching possibilities. It is certain that the right men may be found for this service on the staffs of every big newspaper. The thing of immediate importance is for the publishers and editors to lend their cordial co-operation.

REPRESENTATIVE MONDELL

EDITOR & PUBLISHER is not a partisan newspaper. In the past we have criticised Hon. Claude Kitchin, Democratic leader of the House, because of his reactionary views as to postal legislation—not because he is a Democrat.

It seems proper, therefore, to sound a note of appreciation just now of the new House leader, Hon. Frank Mondell—not because he is a Republican, but because he has progressive and broad ideas on postal matters.

Mr. Mondell has introduced a bill for the repeal of the zone postal rate law, and has stated, in an interview for Editor & Publisher, his purpose to fight for its passage. He does not see in the present law any virtue as a revenue enactment, for the reason that its zone provisions impose upon the Government great extra administrative expense and difficulties in making collections.

The defects of the law have been pointed out repeatedly in these columns and require no reiteration at this time. The repeal of the measure, which should be followed by an exhaustive investigation of postal costs by the division of second class mail, would be an act of simple justice to the publishers of newspapers. As the matter stands, the newspapers have been convicted, on ex-parte evidence, of subsidy-grabbing; and the zone law was conceived for the purpose of imposing a penalty for an alleged offense.

Mr. Kitchin, who championed the zone law, has not even claimed to know what it actually costs the Government to carry the newspapers through the mails. Mr. Burleson is equally in the dark. Yet these two men succeeded in having a law enacted carrying not only additional postal charges for newspapers but provisions for a wholly unsound and unjust zone tax on newspaper advertising. The argument was made—and prevailed—that the Government had long been the victim of newspaper publishers who were receiving an annual bounty amounting to more than seventy millions of dollars. This in spite of the fact that the postal establishment shows a profit, not a deficit; and in spite of the fact that all classifications of postal matter are interdependent.

The publishers of newspapers rightly contend that they should not be penalized for a system of accounting in the postal department which credits profits to one class of mail and losses to another without clear justification by the actual facts. And the facts are still to be ascertained. Pending their determination it is only just that the cumbersome and burdensome law should be repealed.

Mr. Kitchin has been deposed from House leadership, but still dominates the minority. True to his record and his convictions he will fight against the repeal of his favorite measure. Let us hope that the new House leader, Mr. Mondell, may prove to be just as tenacious and effective a fighter for progressive ideas as Mr. Kitchin has been for his own theories.

JOHN SULLIVAN POINTS THE WAY

JOHN SULLIVAN, secretary-treasurer of the Association of National Advertisers, whose weekly page of news and views in Printer's Ink Publisher is always alive with both inspirational and practicable ideas, has just revealed a secret.

In last week's issue he told how a newspaper may get business from national advertisers. His solution of this problem is simple and sensible. It is comprehensive and obviously sound. If the publishers of the country shall be wise enough to act upon his suggestion—to make it a working policy and a dominant one in their promotion—they will profit accordingly.

Those who have followed Mr. Sullivan's writings will have noted his insistence upon the fact that national advertisers are interested primarily in MARKETS—secondarily in advertising mediums through which these markets may be developed. He has pointed out that there is just as great a variance in markets and marketing conditions as in newspapers, and that national advertisers nowadays must be sold on market possibilities before they are ready to go into the matter of a selection of advertising mediums. He says:

"There is an infinite differentiation in national distribution and merchandising as in newspapers. And the way to get the national advertiser's business surely is to 'get up and git'—mentally—and sell the market. . . . It is necessary that newspapers not only sell their markets, but also the relation of the market and the publication to the advertiser's business."

Here we have the conclusion of the whole matter. Publishers, in their promotion advertising, should adhere to the policy thus outlined. They should give facts and figures which a national advertiser may accurately appraise a city or territory as to its market possibilities for his product—linking up with such surveys the facts and figures showing the relation of the newspaper to its field.

The national advertiser wants to know all about newspaper circulation, of course—quantity, nature of distribution, character of the paper's appeal to its readers, its commercial standing with other papers in the field as to distribution, volume of advertising carried and the facts as to its GROWTH in both circulation and advertising. But before he considers these factors as to any medium he must have been sold on the opportunities presented by that special market for the development of his business. Thus a publisher may, through his advertising to national advertisers, render a distinct service while presenting a sales argument.

MAYOR Hylan, of New York, denounces the newspapers for printing crime stories of a nature to encourage crooks in the belief that New York is defenseless against them. It may be said that the crook who would seriously consider such a suggestion, and act upon it, is entirely too simple-minded to thrive in his somewhat over-crowded vocation.

MANY newspapers are urging that Mr. Burleson should go. It is natural that the Postmaster-General should construe this demand as a partisan one, and that he should decline to accede to the wishes of his supposed political foes. There is, however, a thoroughly non-partisan sentiment that Mr. Burleson should GROW.

THE opportunities for American trade expansion in Mexico are greater now than at any recent period in the history of our Southern neighbor republic. They are interestingly told in a notable Mexican article in this number.

AN Omaha maker of awnings, having something to sell to every business man of his city, is advertising his business through the direct-indirect method of advertising the businesses of his prospective customers in large space in the World-Herald. And he is making it pay.

PERSONALS

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Major General Sir David Watson, who commanded the Fourth Canadian Division overseas, has just returned home. In pre-war days General Watson was editor and proprietor of the Quebec Chronicle. He went over as colonel and won promotion and decorations on the field.

George W. B. Britt, a former New Bedford (Mass.) newspaper man who has been overseas 23½ months, has returned. He will go to Washington as first assistant secretary to Senator Lodge.

Miss Lucile Saunders, for the past 14 months telegraph editor of the Salem (Ore.) Statesman, has joined the local staff of the Portland Oregonian.

Basil E. O'Mara has returned from war service abroad, and will rejoin the local staff of the Ottawa (Ont.) Citizen.

Capt. Ernest Cinq-Mars, just home from four years' war service abroad, has resigned as King's Printer for Quebec Province to resume work as representative in the House of Commons' press gallery for La Presse, Montreal.

John Knott, Dallas Morning News cartoonist, is instructing a class in commercial drawing at the Dallas Business Women's Club, a branch of the Dallas Advertising League.

William H. Engel, who held down the Troy (N. Y.) Record's city desk for 20 years, has been named telegraph editor of the afternoon edition. A. P. Warner, formerly of the Albany Knickerbocker Press, has been named assistant city editor of the afternoon. William Gilligan has joined the reporting staff.

Herbert Selby, Samuel Smith, "Doc" Cook and John Ball, just out of Uncle Sam's army uniform, have been appointed to the Des Moines Capital staff.

Miss Antoinette Donnelley, feature writer for the Chicago Tribune and handling the beauty department under the pseudonym of "Doris Blake," was married this week to Lieut. Hamilton of the British recruiting mission in Chicago.

Miss Ethel M. Colson, former book editor of the old Chicago Herald and lately doing Sunday feature work for the Chicago Tribune, was married this week to Frank Brazelton, of the copy desk of the Chicago Journal.

"Jimmy" O'Neill, prior to 1917 office boy for the old Chicago Examiner, returned to the Chicago Herald and Examiner offices this week a captain in Uncle Sam's overseas service uniform, wearing the shoulder cord citation of the 18th regiment.

J. P. McEvoy, rhyming colymist of the "Slams of Life" for the Chicago Tribune, is the author of two new humorous illustrated booklets called "The Sweet Dry and Dry" and "Smokes Next."

Nobe Taylor, a member of the Washington staff of the United Press, has been appointed its representative at Rio Janeiro, Brazil, and sailed for his new post on the battleship Idaho July 3. He formerly was employed on the Indianapolis Star and the Louisville Herald.

Brewster S. Beach, formerly assistant night city editor of the New York Sun, is now with the General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y., as general publicity representative with the advertising department. While on the Sun, Mr. Beach served as reporter and assistant dramatic editor before going to the city desk. During the war he was an ensign in the Naval Reserve.

Robert Mehaffey has transferred from the reportorial staff of the Chicago Herald & Examiner to that of the Evening Post.

Lieut. W. J. Betting, of St. Paul, first president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of Minnesota, has returned from France.

"REG'LAR FELLER MAKES 13 COMICS A WEEK

There are hundreds of city directories that are partly filled with the names of "reg'lar fellers," and there are thousands of others that have not yet reached the directory age.

GENE BYRNES

To the whole wide world the last are by far the most interesting, but in a measure it remained for 'Gene Byrnes, who once worked in the art department of a daily newspaper, but is now a newspaper artist, to discover their daily whims and laughs for other "reg'lar fellers" living in big towns and little towns from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Byrnes is pretty regular himself as newspaper artists go who have signed their lives away for a fortune a year and have nothing—absolutely nothing—to do but draw a couple of laughs from the public daily, and their pay.

He lives in the kind of an apartment that straggling young financiers dream about, answers his own doorbell, remembers the first names of all the fellows he knew when $60 a week was his ambition, revels with his collar off, eats regular food—and lots of it.

His daily inclination is to go fishing, and his present ambition is to own a many-guest-roomed bungalow near a fin family inhabited lake.

Thirteen is Gene's lucky number, and he likes it so well that he works every day on the collection that makes it—two comic strips each week day and a full page of "Wide Awake Willie" for Sundays. The other, "It's a Great Life If You Don't Weaken" goes well with "A Reg'lar Feller."

Keith Jones, who has been with the editorial departments of the Chicago Daily News, the City News Bureau, the old Chicago Herald and other newspapers, and more recently discharged from the United States aviation service in France, has joined the staff of the Gundlach Agency, Chicago.

Alfred Eddy, formerly with the Chicago Evening Post, and recently returned a lieutenant in the overseas balloon branch of the Signal Corps, has joined the staff of the Erwin & Wasey Advertising Agency, Chicago.

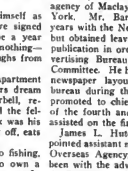
Charles McHardy, previously connected with the Otto J. Koch Agency, Milwaukee, has become connected with the copy and merchandising departments with the Charles L. Benjamin Agency, Chicago.

George Dorsey, formerly a member of the Chicago Tribune editorial department and recently discharged from the United States overseas aviation service with three Hun planes to his credit, has become connected with the advertising department of Marshall, Field & Co., Chicago.

C. M. Thomas is now advertising manager of the Essenkay Products Company, Chicago. He has been with Marshall Field & Co.

Amos H. Barnett has been appointed a vice-president of the advertising agency of Maclay & Mullally, Inc., New York. Mr. Barnett was for sixteen years with the New York Evening Post, but obtained leave of absence from that publication in order to work in the Advertising Bureau of the Liberty Loan Committee. He had entire charge of the newspaper layout department in that bureau during the third loan, and was promoted to chief of the copy division of the fourth and fifth loans. He also assisted on the first and second loans.

James L. Hutchinson has been appointed assistant manager of the Johnston Overseas Agency, New York. He has been with the advertising department of the British-American Tobacco Company.



J. E. Stevenson has been appointed director of advertising in Rochester, Buffalo and Pittsburgh for the Alling & Cory Company. He is succeeded as sales manager in Pittsburgh by A. H. Seyler.

S. N. Rosenstein has been appointed advertising manager of the Art Metal Works, Newark, N. J.

Capt. Warren Orday has resumed his duties as advertising manager of the Hanson Company, Boston.

Walter Painter has been appointed to the staff of the Erwin & Wasey Agency, Chicago.

The Des Moines Citizen has signed a contract for the Haskin Service for one year

It should not be a matter of surprise if one so familiar with governmental agencies as Frederic J. Haskin should be caught frolicking with the Washington Monument.

His daily letters and answers to questions come from Washington.

Obituary Notes

EDWIN SHERWOOD PEARL, 51 years old, manager of the advertising and farm machinery departments of Fairbanks, Morse & Co., St. Louis, died July 4 in that city of acute indigestion. Pearl was vice-chairman of the educational committee of the Advertising Club of St. Louis, of which club he was long a member. For several years he conducted a class in advertising at the Young Men's Christian Association, and had lectured frequently before various organizations on advertising topics. He is survived by his widow and three children.

WARREN CRANDALL, 81 years old, died in St. Louis July 1. He was a native of New York, and went to Brookfield, Mo., in 1867, when he established the Brookfield Gazette, the first Republican newspaper published in Linn County.

FRANK F. TOWN, coast editor of the Portland (Ore.) Telegram, died June 25, after a month's illness from heart disease.

JOSEPH D. MCARDLE, 56 years old, of the New York City News Association, died Sunday. He had been in failing health for several months. He was born in San Francisco, and his first newspaper work was done there. Subsequently he was with the Portland Oregonian, the old Chicago Chronicle, the Associated Press in Cleveland, the New York Morning Telegraph and motion picture productions of Thomas Dixon.

JAMES PIERRE HALL, aged 70 years, formerly on the editorial staff of the New York Tribune, died at a New York sanitarium last week.

HARRY J. RICHMOND, owner and editor of the Independence (Kan.) Free Press, died June 25 following an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Richmond was born in Salt Lake, Utah, in 1869. He was for years telegraph editor of the Topeka State Journal, later joining the Scripps-McRae staff. He covered the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company strike for that service. He later founded the Scripps-McRae paper in Dallas, Tex. Seven years ago he founded the Free Press. A widow, one son and a daughter survive.

JOHN M. RODDY, for 25 years superintendent of the press room of the Kansas City Journal, died June 25, following a six months' illness from a complication of diseases. He joined the staff of the Chicago Tribune in 1867 and later went with the National Playing Card Company at Cincinnati. In 1886 he became connected with the Goss Printing Press Company and superintended the installation of its first web press. He joined the Journal in 1894. Two daughters, one son and his widow survive. Mr. Roddy was 74 years old.

LEN GOHEEN, editor of the Dexter (Kan.) Observer, died June 28. A widow and two children survive.

WARREN D. CRANDALL, founder of the Brookfield (Mo.) Gazette, died in St. Louis July 1, aged 81 years.

SOLOMON MOORE, who founded the Hume (Mo.) Telephone in 1889, died recently. In 1907 he retired, transferring his paper to his son, Lewis Moore. Mr. Moore was 69 years old.

"I Want a Copy for Every Member of our Advertising Staff and Certain of our Editors!"

The Globe

77 June, 1919

Mr. J. W. Brown,
THE EDITOR & PUBLISHER,
World Building,
New York City.

My dear Brown,—

Please enter our order for 25 copies of The Editor & Publisher every week commencing July 1, 1919. I want a copy for every member of our advertising staff, and certain of our editors.

I am growing tired of their coming to my office to borrow my copy and troubling you for back dates to keep my file complete.

I already believe that every newspaper man is a better newspaper worker for reading The Editor & Publisher. It shows him the broader aspects of a most interesting business and should fill him with greater ambitions.

The same rule holds good for the workers in advertising agencies and advertising departments, and some day executives will see the light.

Yours truly,

The progressive publisher of the New York Globe voices, in the above letter, his estimate of the value of EDITOR & PUBLISHER to the men who are engaged in newspaper work and in advertising.

If Jason Rogers finds it advisable to enter his order for 25 subscriptions for members of his staff, you ran see that the same policy should apply to YOUR OFFICE.

EVERY MAN ON YOUR PAYROLL, upon whose knowledge of advertising and newspaper making problems you must rely, should be a subscriber to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Not a single one of your department heads, for example, can keep in touch with forward-moving events and trends in advertising and newspaper making WITHOUT READING EDITOR & PUBLISHER. No man would be worth much in your organization if he could not find anything of interest to him in this journal.

HOW MANY MEN AND WOMEN OF YOUR ORGANIZATION SHALL WE ENROLL AS SUBSCRIBERS?

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Come and See

Wisconsin!

THESE are the days when Wisconsin opens its door to the vacationist and tourist. And they come in thousands.

Every mile is a mile of beauty or a mile of riches and some of them are both.

Here in this beautiful rolling country, with hundreds of charming lakes and mineral waters, palatable and salubrious, picture the grazing herds that bless Wisconsin with 10,000,000,000 pounds of milk every year, and the fields of towering grain that make it a leading state in the value of its farm crops!

Remember that Wisconsin not only grows the crops and makes the cheeses famous the world over, it also manufactures much of the machinery to cultivate and harvest.

It ranks high among the states in manufacturing.

What are you doing in this prosperous territory to advertise and sell your goods?

If you are not active you are letting the other fellow beat you to it.

The quick way, the easy way, and the profitable way to sell your goods in Wisconsin is to advertise them in the Wisconsin daily newspapers.

The cost of a whole year's advertising—every week—is only about 2½ cents per habitant family for all the English language dailies.

And you can try it out first in these:

LIBERTY LOANS DID MUCH FOR NEWSPAPERS

in bringing you representative men together.

"The South as a section has been poorly advertised. Its agencies and its business will show a smaller percentage of advertising than any other section in the country. Part of this has been your fault. You are just waking up to the fact that dollars come in to the man who is prosperous rather than the man who is hard up.

Promoting Harmony

"The South is waking up and is letting the rest of the country know it is awake. It is a hopeful sign. I touch on the lack of harmony that has existed in the newspaper business, because I wanted to say a word about the work that I particularly represent, the Bureau of Advertising of American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

"For five years the Bureau of Advertising has been working in the national field to present newspapers to national advertisers as the greatest medium in the world. It is one of the solicitors for newspapers that has never founded a newspaper. It is an organization that has been able to go to national advertisers and agents and show them what a big thing the collective newspapers of this country were.

A Comparison of Values

"It has shown the advertiser that newspaper rates are so foolishly low today that a man can send two pages of advertising to twenty-eight million people for less money than he can send a postal card to each one of the same people.

"If newspaper rates were twice as high as they are today the newspaper would still be the most valuable and cheapest advertising medium in this country.

"There are meeting here with you in Asheville the heads of the American Association of Advertising Agencies. These gentlemen represent an organization that spends from $300,000,000 to $300,000,000 in advertising. They are the leaders in the advertising business. They are the men who know the problems of national advertising. They are the men with whom your Bureau of Advertising comes in contact.

"Instead of standing here and telling you incidents of what your Bureau is doing, I am going to ask you gentlemen to talk with some of these agents while they are here. Ask them what they think of your Bureau of Advertising. Ask them if it is doing good work.

Advantages of The Bureau

"Ask them whether your newspaper is losing anything by not being a member. If you do, I am reasonably sure that when this meeting adjourns 100 per cent. of the members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association will join the Bureau of Advertising.

"While the Bureau does not solicit for any individuals or group of newspapers, there is a distinct advantage to those newspapers who do belong, because they participate in the Bureau's trade surveys which get their market directly before advertisers. In other words, the Bureau's members are joining to advertise newspaper advertising and incidentally advertise themselves.

A Plea for Support

"The Bureau of Advertising is making a special plea for support at the present time. Demands have been made upon it by the Newspaper Representatives of Chicago, and by the publishers of the Pacific Coast that its facilities be doubled and that it establish offices in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast for the development of business. Plans toward this end are now under way, and are entirely depending upon the ability of the Bureau to raise the necessary funds.

"A new schedule of dues has been adopted which is equitable to every newspaper. The plan is based upon the advertising rate of each paper, and it means that the newspaper that receives the largest revenue pays the largest share of expenses. It means, on the other hand, that the paper whose rate is low and whose income is proportionately low, pays a smaller share. The plan is the most equitable one ever brought out, and should bring into the Bureau of Advertising 100 per cent. of the newspapers that are worth while.

Obtains Many New Members

"Aside from our own efforts the Newspaper Representatives of New York and Chicago are making a special drive for Bureau members. New members are coming in at the rate of 15 or 20 a week, and our old members are changing over to the new assessment plan with gratifying rapidity. The first papers to sign were papers whose dues had been increased the most. One of these papers voluntarily doubled even the increased assessment, because of its interest in getting this work started.

"These new plans will increase the Bureau's efficiency several hundred per cent. Even on the new basis the Bureau will not be as large as it should be. For a business with $100,000,000 in sight and many more millions waiting for it as soon as it wakes up sufficiently to go after it, an organization as large even as the enlarged Bureau is not commensurate with the situation.

"Some of you gentlemen are poker players. There is an adage among poker players that the proper time to play your cards is when luck is running with you.

"Gentlemen, luck is running with you at the present minute, and this is the time when you want to get behind every possible force there is that will develop advertising and keep it going at its present rate.

"It is the time of all times for you gentlemen who are not members of the Bureau of Advertising to come in, and it is the time for you members of the Bureau who have not taken advantage of the new assessment plan to get behind it with your support."

URGES CENTRALIZATION OF ACCOUNTING

premium accrual register, is sometimes used. The subscriptions are taken in groups according to the date received, or cash book page, and spread across the register, and the accrued earnings are provided automatically each month. Some newspapers take an inventory of unexpired, paid in advance subscriptions once a year and set up a liability therefor; the approximate earnings for the year are then determined by considering the inventories at both ends of the period and the subscription receipts during the year. The yearly inventory can be simplified considerably by grouping expirations by months and using the 15th of the month as the average expiration date.

Cash received from circulation should be segregated in separate books or separate columns, in accordance with the divisions observed in the other circulation records in order that separate cash totals may be obtained for credit to the respective controlling accounts, and for obvious advantages in circulation accounting.

Every Paper Must Be Checked

Without a more or less complete system of press room and circulation records no publisher is in a position to effect a saving of unnecessary waste in the press room or the waste of printed copies through inefficient circulation methods.

It is essential that the responsibility for keeping circulation records be centralized as much as possible, and the duties not divided in the hands of various departments to such an extent that thoroughness and accuracy will be impaired.

It may be stated in conclusion that all newspapers with proper accounting systems, particularly the larger ones, account for practically every copy printed, even to charging the free circulations to whatever department is benefited, and the circulation records and general books tie up with each other absolutely.

ADS WIN SHRINERS' MEETING

Up-to-Date Business Methods Victorious for Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 9.—Newspaper advertising played a big part in landing for Portland the next annual convention of the Shriners, one of the largest fraternal gatherings in the country. During the recent Indianapolis meeting the Portland Shriners used five full-page advertisements in three days. Every morning each representative at the convention found a newspaper, folded to the Portland advertisement, under the door of his hotel room.

The advertising stunt that won out for Portland was engineered by W. J. Hofmann, Imperial potentate of Al Kader Temple of Portland, who is also advertising manager of the Oregonian.

ARMY SCHOOLS TAUGHT MEN JOURNALISM

Many Men Active in Newspaper Work Before the War Enrolled in Government School in France—Captain Fogg Returns Home

One of the most interesting acts of the American Army behind the lines in France was the establishment of the American E. F. University. The fact that journalism was one of the twelve courses offered attracted a great deal of attention, especially among newspapermen everywhere, at the time it was announced.

CAPT. M. M. FOGG

Capt. M. M. Fogg, Army Educational Corps, director of the College of Journalism, has just returned from France and is enthusiastic over the demands that were made on the college at Beaune, Cote d'Or, by the soldier-student body.

Over 500 Students Enrolled

"We all very much regretted the order to close the college on June 7," said Capt. Fogg. "We had just completed our first term of twelve weeks, which was in every way a success, and we were preparing to enroll students for the second term.

"During our first term we had 523 students registered in the seven courses, and a surprising thing was that more than 50 of them had been engaged in newspaper work before the war started. Our faculty came from the A. E. F. and was composed of 17 practical newspaper men, three of whom were American college professors before they entered the army. We invited many of the newspaper men stationed at Paris to come down and address our student body, and among those to respond were William Allen White, Reginald Wright Kaufman and De Witt MacKenzie.

Decorated for Work

"Our courses of study were divided as follows: Newspaper writing; newspaper editing; agricultural journalism; the special article; the editorial; advertising copy, and the short story. The study body was in charge of all work in connection with the A. E. F. University News, a four-page paper without advertisements which numbered among its features a 1,000-word daily radio service from Paris that came to us through the United States Signal Corps. We were preparing to install our own printing plant when the college was ordered discontinued."

Capt. Fogg, who was given just three weeks to have his college ready to receive students, expects to be mustered out of service within a few weeks, and in the fall will return to his duties in the School of Journalism of the University of Nebraska. With the directors of the other eleven colleges of the American E. F. University, he was decorated by the French Republic with the Palmes Academique, making him an officer de l'Academie for the educational service he rendered. The decoration, consisting of a green, with purple ribbon, was bestowed by the French Minister of Public Instruction, L. Lafferre.

Capt. Fogg said that one of the most pleasant features of his period in France was his visits with General Pershing, who he knew as a friend in Lincoln, Nebraska, before the world war. The following is a list of the members of the faculty of the College of Journalism, American E. F. University:

The Faculty

Prof. M. M. Fogg (Brown, Harvard), director. Professor of Journalism and in charge of the Course in Journalism, University of Nebraska; state director, Committee on Public Information.

First Lieut. Benjamin A. Rosh, 125th Infantry (Washburn College of Law). Supply officer.

Private Waldo Arnold (University of Wisconsin, Course in Journalism), Company H, 4th Provisional Regiment, American Embarkation Service, Brest. Editor, author, the Milwaukee Journal.

Prof. Nathaniel W. Barrow (Columbia), assistant professor of Business Administration, University of Chicago School of Commerce and Administration.

First Lieut. Rex J. Ballard (University of Wisconsin, Course in Journalism; Kenyon College), Findlay (Ohio) Republican.

Prof. Fred W. Beckman (University of Iowa), director of agricultural journalism and editor of Experiment Station and Research Bulletins, Iowa State College.

Second Lieut. W. K. Charles (Kansas Agricultural College), Ait Service.

Private Herbert M. Davidson (Columbia School of Journalism), 4th Corps Artillery Park, Kansas City Star.

Private Stewart M. Emery (Williams College, '20), 304th M. P. Company. Copy-reader and editorial-page verse-writer, New York Herald.

Capt. Lauren Foreman (Emory College), Q. M. C., Motor Supply Train 414. City editor, the Atlanta Constitution; publicity agent, Southern Railway System.

Capt. Herbert D. Graham (University of Kentucky), Instructor in Journalism, University of Kentucky.

Private Herman J. Mankiewicz (Columbia University), Hdqr. Co., 5th Regiment, U. S. Marines. City and dramatic staff, New York Tribune.

Second Lieut. Louis Mann (Columbia School of Journalism), Co. A, 304st Machine Gun Battalion, Telegraph editor and editorial writer, the Manchester (Conn.) Evening Herald.

Corp. Joseph Pekar (University of Nebraska), Medical Unit, 350th Infantry. Managing editor, the Ord (Neb.) Journal.

Corp. Winthrop Williams (University of Pennsylvania), associate city editor, Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

Sergt. Major Guy D. Wilson, 6th Regiment Marine Corps. Telegraph editor and news editor, Fort Worth (Texas) Record.

CRITICISM NOT BASIS FOR PRESS LIBEL

Missouri Supreme Court Upsets Practice of Suing Newspaper Critics of Public Officials — Important Decision Rendered in Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 7.—Public officials can no longer base suits for libel on the grounds that newspapers attack their public record for political reasons, according to the State Supreme Court in the suit of D. C. McClung, former Warden of the State Penitentiary, against the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

In a decision handed down today the Court said:

"There can be no question at this time that the citizens of this State, through newspapers and otherwise, have the right to criticise the official acts of public officers of the State. The rules relating to defamation, where the party alleged to have been defamed is an individual in private life, do not apply where the individual alleged to have been libeled is a public official and where the alleged libelous matter is as to the conduct of the individual as a public official."

SAYS TRIBUNE DIDN'T "STIGMATIZE" FORD

"Characterized Him Unfavorably," Seeking to Induce Him to Change His Attitude on Government's War Policy, Says Writer

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich., July 9.—Tiffany Blake, chief editorial writer of the Chicago Tribune, who was on the witness stand two days this week in the $1,000,000 libel suit brought by Henry Ford against the newspaper, denied that the paper had decided to "stigmatize" Mr. Ford. Rather, it had "characterized him unfavorably," seeking to induce the manufacturer to change his attitude on the Government's war policy.

Editorials were read by Alfred Lucking, chief of counsel for Mr. Ford, to show that in the early days of the Mexican War the Tribune had advocated that the Mexicans be allowed to work out their own destiny.

"Then there was a considerable faction opposed to war as Mr. Ford opposed it?" questioned the attorney.

"There certainly was. Mr. Wilson ran for re-election on a platform that kept us out of war, and won a victory at the polls."

Concerning a series of articles written by a Tribune staff correspondent, excerpts from which formed the basis of an editorial, Mr. Blake said:

"Mr. Ford told Mr. Wheeler that he didn't believe in intervention. I was for it. We thought this was the mark of an ignorant man, and that it explained his ill-founded arguments. Mr. Ford was, by reason of his wealth, in a powerful position, and in dealing with him editorially we sought to weaken his influence."

Mr. Lucking asked where the witness had read that Mr. Ford said that the word "murderer" should be embroidered on the breasts of every soldier. Mr. Blake could not remember.

"And don't you know," asked the lawyer, "that the statement was made by Jane Addams, one of the greatest women in the United States, and was put in Mr. Ford's mouth by an interviewer?"

"I know Miss Addams well, and I don't believe she made such an outrageous statement," answered Mr. Blake.

The Tribune meant to characterize Mr. Ford as an anarchist, said Mr. Blake, "because his position opposing defense measures in a time of danger was notorious. He was for pulling down the flag. He said patriotism ought to be abolished. His attitude was notorious; everybody knew it. It was a background of his position so familiar to the public that it didn't need to be repeated."

"Mr. Ford's ideas on war and patriotism were as well known as the automobile manufactured by him. He couldn't make such utterances without its being known from one end of the country to the other. These core things which stamp the public's imagination."

The "dark dye stuff" editorial, Mr. Blake explained, was written because he though Mr. Ford was doing a great injury to the country, that he must be an ignorant man, and that the Tribune wanted to show they were not expressions of a wise man.

"Did you comment editorially on the 'Every soldier a murderer' remark attributed to Mr. Ford?" Mr. Lucking asked.

"No, I thought he was 'just talking,'" said the witness.

Press Rotarians Divide Into Two Sections

Newspaper and Trade Press Members Separate—M. J. Hutchinson and W. I. Ralph Prospective Chairmen

SALT LAKE CITY, July 4.—Thirty-six representative newspaper managers, editors and publishers represented their profession at the tenth annual convention of the International Association of Rotary Clubs at Salt Lake City June 17 to 20. These men came from all parts of the United States and a few from Canada.

M. J. Hutchinson, publisher of the Edmonston (Alta.) Bulletin, chairman of the section, presided at a luncheon given by A. N. McKay, general manager of The Tribune.

A division was made at the meeting between the representatives of newspapers and of trade publications. In making the change it was pointed out that the interests of the newspaper men and the trade publications representatives are in many ways identical, but that for all to secure the greatest possible benefits from the discussion of sectional meetings and correspondence the separation was necessary.

W. I. Ralph, of New York City, was unanimously chosen director of the new trade publication division. M. J. Hutchinson, of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, was re-elected chairman of the newspaper section, and F. S. Brandenburg, of the Madison (Wis.) Democrat, elected secretary.

GEORGIANS READY FOR MEETING

Monroe to Be Scene of Important Convention of Daily and Weekly Publishers Next Week—Advertisers Also to Take Part

MONROE, Ga., July 9.—Publishers of daily and weekly newspapers of Georgia will hold their annual meeting here next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Corresponding Secretary Hal M. Stanley, of Atlanta, reports assurance of the largest advance list of attendance in the association's history.

President Paul T. Harber of the Commerce Observer has prepared a program of genuine interest to publishers who take the newspaper business seriously. He has eliminated all propagandists, politicians and others who would exploit the association for selfish purposes. Only newspaper makers and advertising men have been placed on the program for speeches.

Wright A. Patterson of Chicago, editor of the Western Newspaper Union, is one of the principal out-of-state speakers for the convention. His subject will be "The Place of the Rural Press in American Civilization." Another specially national fame is James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, who will discuss "Enlarging the Power of Advertising and Increasing the Net Profit to Publishers"; Mrs. Edith O. Sussong, editor of the Greenville (Tenn.) Democrat, has been invited to discuss "How to Get Advertising from Home Business Enterprises." E. E. Dallis of the Johnson-Dallis Advertising Agency, Atlanta, will speak on "The Country Weekly from the Advertising Agent's Viewpoint."

More than a dozen of the leading publishers of weekly and small daily newspapers also will discuss live topics of vital interest to the newspaper profession.

An important discussion will be, "The Aims and Status of the Select Newspapers Association of Georgia." Weekly newspapers organized last February for the purpose of obtaining a full share of foreign advertising.

President Harber has extended an invitation to the Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Tennessee and South Carolina associations to send a delegate to the Georgia press meeting in order that a better understanding and mutual cooperation along constructive lines may be brought about by the newspaper men of the states mentioned.

Also, an invitation has been extended to the various advertising agents located in Georgia and to President Jefferson Thomas of Jacksonville, president of the Southern Council of Advertising Agencies, to be present.

Monroe, the entertaining city, is making great preparations for the approaching gathering. An informal alfresco party, a reception, a picnic dinner and a barbecue dinner are among the entertainment features planned. An eight-piece orchestra from Atlanta will render music during the entire gathering.

Agencies Must Use More Space Hereafter in Southern Newspapers, Paul E. Faust Declares Before the A. A. A. A. Executive Board

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 9.—Closer co-operation with publishers was brought about by the National Executive Board of the American Association of Advertising Agencies in its joint session with the executive committee of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association this afternoon. This was a sequence to the joint open session of the publishers and agency men the night before.

The standard rate card was formally endorsed and commended to all publishers by the S. N. P. A. This was done as the first step in standardization of methods in the relations of the publishers and the agencies.

Paul E. Faust, vice-president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, said that the purpose of the executive board of that organization in coming to Asheville was to study the southern newspaper situation at close range.

"We recognize the vital importance to advertising in having all the potentialities of the southern newspapers brought into fullest activity," said Mr. Faust.

"We must use more and more space in the southern newspapers in order to bring this market into its greater values. The great buying power of the South compels an appreciation of the southern newspapers.

"We are certainly delighted with the enterprising spirit of the southern publishers and happy in feeling that in them we have such fine co-operation."

BASHAM IS PRESIDENT SOUTHERN A.A.A.A.

Division Will Continue Advertising Advertising in Newspapers—Bad Practices Corrected—Loving Cup to Jefferson Thomas

(BY TELEGRAPH)

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 8.—The Southern Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies elected officers today as follows: President, Thomas E. Basham, Louisville, Ky.; vice-president, E. R. Dallis, Atlanta, Ga.; secretary and treasurer, S. O. Landry, New Orleans; Henry L. Staples, Richmond, Va., member executive committee. The attendance was the greatest in the history of the body and unbounded enthusiasm and much work marked the two-day sessions.

THOMAS E. BASHAM.

Through the influence of the council during the year under administration of Jefferson Thomas of Jacksonville, retiring president, many so-called "bad practices" that had crept into the Southern agencies have been corrected and closer relationship established between the publishers and the agents.

The council will continue to advertise

To the Publishers and Business Managers of Daily Newspapers in the United States and Canada:

Never in the history of daily papers has the outlook for increased business been as bright as it is at present.

Newspapers are today carrying more advertising than they have carried for years and all signs point to a further increase in business.

So that you will be in a position to secure your share of this advertising, it will be necessary to have your sheet with the circulation in your field.

To get this circulation, you must have a good circulation manager. If you haven't one, the General Welfare Committee of the I. C. M. A. can put you in touch with the man you want.

Some of our members have just returned from service; others are seeking a change, while some have been out of employment owing to the suspension of many publications of newspapers.

All these in strictest confidence. H. A. Wenige, Chairman, General Welfare Committee, International Circulation Managers' Association, care of The Post-Star, Glen Falls, N. Y.

R. F. D. ROUTES TO BE RESTORED SOON

Department Officials, at Hearing in Washington, Express Desire to Meet Wishes of Northern New York Farmers—Victory for Barnum

The farmers of northern New York have won a signal victory in their fight to have restored to them the rural routes which were merged and consolidated at the direction of the Post Office Department on May 1. This fight, in which officers of the farmers' organizations and newspapermen have led, was resumed before the sub-committee on Post Offices and Post Roads at Washington on Tuesday.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Blakeslee appeared before this committee, and Grange officials from various states, as well as a special delegation from Syracuse, led by Jerome D. Barnum, publisher of the Post-Standard, were present. Mr. Blakeslee took occasion to extend the thanks of the department to Mr. Barnum for the efforts he has made to secure better service for the farmers, and assured the committee that at the earliest possible time the abandoned routes would be restored and that the R. F. D. system would afford to every farmer regular daily house delivery of mail.

S. J. Lowell, master of the New York State Grange, told the committee of the vital need of rural people for prompt and reliable mail service, and made many suggestions for the betterment of the system. Grange officials from other states added their testimony to the same effect, and protested any curtailment of the service as a menace to farming communities.

Mr. Blakeslee admitted that before the changes were made there should have been a very full investigation of the merits of each change. He agreed with other speakers that routes should be laid out on the 20-mile a day schedule, except in rare instances in order to assure daily service. He invited Mr. Barnum and the Grange officials to co-operate with the department in securing a more extensive appropriation for the development of the R. F. D. system, and to come to Washington at a later date and testify before the appropriations committee.

Well Known Wilmington Daily Purchased from Bancroft Estate by Josiah Marvel—William F. Metten Continues in Management

(By TELEGRAPH.)

WILMINGTON, Del., July 9.—The estate of Samuel Bancroft, Jr., Inc., the owner of the majority interest in the Every Evening Printing Co., has disposed of its interest to Josiah Marvel, a prominent local attorney, and has no longer any connection with the company. Joseph Bancroft and John B. Bird, its representatives on the board of directors, have resigned and Josiah Marvel and Henry Ridgely have been elected to succeed them.

The Every Printing Co. has been reorganized. The present officers and directors are as follows: Josiah Marvel, President; Frederick Bradley, Vice President; Frederick K. Reynold, Secretary; William F. Metten, Treasurer. Directors: Josiah Marvel, Frederick Brady, Frederick K. Reynold, William F. Metten, and Henry Ridgely.

All of the stock of the corporation is now held by the directors of the company who assume full control and management of the paper, clearly recognizing their responsibilities.

They purpose and plan to maintain the present high standard of the paper in every respect.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Old and New Days of Illustrating

Orange, N. J., July 7, 1919.

Editor and Publisher:

The starting of the New York Illustrated Daily News brings to mind many happenings of the early days of newspaper illustrating.

The late James Gordon Bennett in the early 90s ordered all the number of the Herald in colors. William C. Reich was going to Paris and Gene Augustus Heaton remained in order in those days, called me into his room to say that it was his misfortune that I had knocked out my color work before Mr. Bennett because they wanted the job of printing the Herald Exeter edition in Paris and shipping it to New York.

Later I suggested using a half-tone in the daily Herald which caused Mr. Bennett's presence to say that he wrote the Vanderbilt that was such a blankety fool to think a half-tone could be put on a rotary press and that I was such an ass anyway. It was his sledge hammer that made the daily newspaper half tone of many years.

In 1897 I got the Hon. Whitelaw Reid interested and I tried it for him with the result that newspaper half tones are in use around the world.

I also used interesting experiences with Albert Pulitzer and John R. McLean, on the old New York Morning Journal. And I had the combined proposition to satisfy with illustrations. His Cincinnati Inquirer was an awesome proposition that he could not see the necessity for there in New York, with the result that I made the art department and myself one day and hire us all ever again the next.

Further than pen-and-inkers, I can explain why in Dr. Ochs's mind for those starting a daily illustrated newspaper to blind New York. For, be it remembered, the first daily illustrated newspaper in the world began in New York, in 1855, and lived to the eighteen months old. That daily brought printed its pictures Bitsograph-ically with a battery of five to eight presses. They began on the picture side at 8 A. M. and continued until the last edition ran off. Any type, or news side, was printed on a Hoe type-revolving press.

The Illustrated News is a good idea. There is an opportunity for a pictorial daily for New York and I expected they would adopt the plan used by the first daily illustrated newspaper, only using the wonderful rotogravure method instead of Bitsograph for the picture half sheet.

The rotogravure side could go in press at midnight. The ink dries at once, so the paper could be rolled up again and trucked over to the stereotype press to be printed at 1 AM or later with the news and other features in type. This idea would work admirably for an afternoon paper, which would be the better field for a pictorial daily.

For objection may be offered that rotogravure is a process too slow for an illustrated daily newspaper. To which I would reply that it is really a faster method than the half-tone system used and still be so proven later. The results to be guaranteed are the finest that likely will ever be attained in printing ink.

STEPHEN H. HOGAN.

No Censorship on Vancouver World

Vancouver, B. C., June 30, 1919.

The Editor & Publisher:

In your issue of June 28, under the heading, "Fighting for a free press in Canada," you give an account of the recent efforts to establish a press censorship in Vancouver. This unprecedented attempt to enlarge the scope of the militarist activities forms a newspaper story in its historical perspective, and well worth the space which you devote to it. It is important, however, that the record be accurate, and for this reason your attention is directed to two errors in the statement. These are:

1—To prevent a strike and to interfere with collective action the latter part of which the editors of The Sun permitted the "request" to sit in on two editions. This was also allowed by the editors of the Province and World."

And a subsequent paragraph which reads:

"The face remains undisputed that men from the mechanical forces of the three Vancouver papers did present themselves to the editors of the newspapers and demand, and for two days did obtain, the right to O. K. editorial matter before it was sent to the composing room."

So far as The World is concerned, there was no censorship permitted on two or any editions nor did men from the mechanical staff obtain the right to edit editorial matter, or any kind of matter. In justice to the chapel of The World it may be stated that, during the first day, notwithstanding notice by myself to the president of the union that no censorship would be tolerated, even if it involved the closing down of the paper, half a column of news was lifted from an early edition and marked "rejected by order." It was at once ordered restored and appeared in all editions. The chapel was also called together, when the right of the management to pass on all copy firmly maintained and the absurdity of the whole proposal outlined. At no time did they presume to censor editorial matter, and only once did they attempt to censor news, and then unsuccessfully.

During the following days several advertisements were offered, which were refused by the chapel, and at the publishers' invitation their views were heard which respectfully by all these advertisements were nevertheless ordered and were published, regarding which the management regarded as dangerous in its effect owing to the extreme condition of the public mind, and which the publishers accordingly rejected.

After the first attempt the World chapel recognized and accepted our attitude, and never again questioned our rights in the matter. As a result the World chapel ran a commercial advertisement, news item, or editorial, never left out nothing at the direction of a censor, and nevertheless never missed an issue.

Yours truly,

JOHN NELSON,
Publisher, The World.

"Should Be Preserved"

Editor & Publisher:

I have read many special editions, but there are few that can compare with your remarkable Victory Number.

It certainly is an achievement of pronounced ability and should be preserved as one of the most regulated newspaper's library for editorial reference and intelligent editor.

The Oakland Enquirer shines from the great success and prosperity which has come to the fearless way that you handle your publication.

Yours very truly,
W. W. CHAPIN, Publisher.

Appreciation of Victory Number

Editor & Publisher:

Kindly allow me to join in the chorus of congratulation so deservedly due to your splendid International Victory Edition. The publication of unstinted praise on the part of every member of our staff is my judgment the most valuable compliment of its kind has ever been tendered.

Yours very truly,
JOHN OTHLER, Advertising Manager.

ENDORSE STAR'S PLAN FOR CONFERENCE

Statesmen and Editors Heartily Approve Washington Paper's Proposal That Representatives of Industries Meet to Agree on Principles

The editorial proposal of the Washington (D. C.) Star, that a conference representative of all industrial interests should be held in Washington to agree upon fundamental principles of social and industrial justice has been endorsed heartily in letters to that newspaper by Vice-President Marshall, Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, Former President William H. Taft, Charles E. Hughes, and by many newspaper men.

The Star said:

"There has been in evidence a great national determination that out of the sufferings and sacrifices of war there should be created a better brotherhood among all Americans; that justice should be truer and the relationship of man to man more kindly and sympathetic; that the American ideal of equality of opportunity should be made a practical reality in the life of those people.

"The war stirred the depths in men as they seldom have been stirred before. Their minds were made more plastic and their impulses stronger to reach out for better things. There was and there remains a high resolve that one of the fruits of the great war shall be an America made better for those who toil and serve, whether with minds or hands. There is less of selfish seeking today than ever before, more of a real willingness to accord to the other man all that to which he is entitled.

"The Star believes the time now has come when such a conference should be called. It has asked leading men here in Washington and throughout the country for expressions of opinion as to the desirability and practicability of the plan. The replies, coming in by mail and telegraph, are favorable—without one dissenting voice.

"There may not be exact unanimity as to the best method of procedure or the results to be arrived at, but there is no dissent from the belief that this great opportunity should not be allowed to pass by without a sincere and patriotic effort to crystallize it into lasting good for the nation."

VERDICT AGAINST HOUSTON POST

Former Governor Ferguson Secures $10,000 Damages for Libel

HOUSTON, Tex., July 5.—Ex-Governor James E. Ferguson of Texas was awarded $10,000 damages by the jury in the district court here Wednesday in his suit for $100,000 against the Houston Post because of alleged libelous matter printed by the paper during the gubernatorial campaign. The suit was based on resolutions, which the paper printed as adopted by a political club at Columbus, Texas, in which the loyalty of Governor Ferguson was attacked.

The Post contended that the resolutions were "news," whether the allegations were true or not. Five suits are still pending against the Chronicle, totaling $500,000, and another $100,000 suit against the Post.

EDITORS SEEK HIGHER PAY

Appeal Is Made to Industrial Courts by Australian Writers

Editors and news writers on 125 weekly and monthly papers in New South Wales, Australia, have appealed to the State Industrial Courts to order an increase in their salaries.

The petitioners ask that hereafter the weekly pay of an editor be $60; of a sub-editor, $40; of a "senior journalist," $35; of a "general journalist," $25; and of a "junior journalist," $20. They also ask that the working week be limited to 44 hours, with one and a half days off each week, the half day to begin not later than 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

To the Newspaper Publishers of the United States

In anticipation of the future I have had a firm of accountants prepare a set of suggested standardized blanks for keeping track of newspaper office expenses and ascertaining basic cost figures for comparative use.

I have advocated such a plan in the A. N. P. A. since 1915 without result, so after securing office forms used by some fifty daily newspapers of various potentials I asked the accountants to produce a form that would include most of the desired details.

Proofs of the new forms are now being submitted by me to 1,000 publishers for suggestions.

If you have not received a set and are interested, please write for one at once.

Just as soon as I receive the come-backs I will put the forms finally adopted as standard into shape to send to all publishers and be able to produce figures of great use to the industry.

Let our newspapers make the most of the present sunshine and by reason of dependable, available knowledge and experience be able to rise beyond anything that may happen in the future.

What St. Louis Merchants Think of the Post-Dispatch

Significant is the fact that the Post-Dispatch Gain in Home-Merchants' Advertising for the six months ending June 30, 1919

EXCEEDED THE GAIN IN HOME-MERCHANTS' ADVERTISING OF ALL FOUR OTHER ST. LOUIS NEWSPAPERS COMBINED BY 171,300 LINES

The record made during this period increases the already overwhelming lead which the Post-Dispatch has had over all other newspapers in St. Louis and the Great Southwest, and justifies the common expression that

"St. Louis Is a 'One Newspaper Town'"

The gains made in all departments MEASURED IN AGATE LINES, NOT MISLEADING PERCENTAGES — convincingly show the tendency of both Home and National Advertisers more and more toward

Concentration in the ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

Semiannual statement of Home-Merchants' Advertising carried by the five St. Louis newspapers during the period ending June 30th, 1919, and the gain made over the same period in 1918, shows:

POST-DISPATCH Gained 1,394,400 Lines

Globe-Democrat, Star, Times and Republic. COMBINED GAIN	1,223,100 Lines
POST-DISPATCH EXCESS GAIN OVER ALL FOUR COMBINED	171,300 Lines

TOTAL PAID ADVERTISING

The Post-Dispatch carried 7,957,320 lines of Total Paid advertising during the six months' period ending June 30th, 1919—which EXCEEDED THE VOLUME CARRIED BY THREE OUT OF ALL FOUR OTHER ST. LOUIS NEWSPAPERS COMBINED BY ALMOST TWO MILLION LINES.

GAINS IN TOTAL PAID

The Post-Dispatch gain in Total Paid Advertising for this period was 2,434,800 lines—EXCEEDING THE GAIN OF ANY THREE OF THE FOUR OTHER ST. LOUIS NEWSPAPERS COMBINED.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROVES BIG PAID SPACE CAMPAIGN FOR RECRUITS THROUGH A.A.A.A.

Conference with Secretary Daniels in Washington Results in His Hearty Endorsement of Plan Whereby "World's Greatest Agency," Composed of 116 Units of the Association, Will Make Initial Expenditure of $300,000—Small Towns Will Share in Advertising

WASHINGTON, July 16.—The Navy Department's advertising campaign, for which Secretary Daniels has approved an expenditure of $300,000, is to be undertaken by the "world's greatest agency." It is to be handled by a composite agency composed of the 116 units comprising the membership of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

The campaign is to begin at once, but instead of being a spasmodic experiment covering a short period, Secretary Daniels, requiring no demonstration of the value of such advertising, has approved the plan to keep the navy advertising constant. It is expected, however, that the program will attain its top speed during the early fall, this being especially true of the magazine and periodical advertising.

Conference of Experts

These, briefly, are the results of the conference held here last Friday between representatives of the A. A. A. A., the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, the American Press Association, and several independent agencies, and Secretary Daniels and Lieut. Commander Emory Winship, U. S. N., retired, chief of the Navy Recruiting Service, Bureau of Navigation.

The result were regarded as eminently satisfactorily to all parties to the conference, but the most gratifying part of the entire affair was the aftermath. Editor & Publisher has been informed authoritatively that Secretary Daniels takes the position that if the $300,000 appropriation is not adequate he will be in a favorable mood to consider the necessity for a further expenditure, and he is said to believe that advertising will be recognized by direct appropriations hereafter.

"No 2-by-4 Campaign"

In other words, it means the Navy has gone in for advertising in exactly the same spirit which guided it to such a successful record during the war. The Navy is not going to do anything in a half-hearted manner or, as Commander Winship and Secretary Daniels expressed it, "We cannot afford to engage in any two-by-four campaign." It was because Commander Winship convinced the Secretary that the Navy should try to do its first campaign "up right" that the Secretary gave his immediate approval to the initial expenditure of $300,000, instead of $200,000 as intended originally.

The plan of dealing with a composite agency was suggested as the most practical way of saving time, trouble and money. It promised the best results, and the Navy chiefs are more than elated at the spirit shown by the advertising experts in agreeing to incorporate their association as an agency in order to conduct the Navy campaign. It will mean that Commander Winship will be dealing with one contractor, and he proposes to deal solely with and through that agency.

The Navy officials realize that the association is undertaking their campaign because of the widespread desire to afford a real demonstration of the value of newspaper advertising. Commander Winship was frank in admitting to Editor & Publisher the spirit which prompted the agency representative who came to Washington to tell him candidly that such was their purpose.

HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

"They did not come here as many persons have done, and say they wanted to do this just for the Navy without hoping to get anything out of it themselves," he said. "I was mighty glad they didn't, too. Whenever any one comes to us and says he wants to give us something for nothing, I turn him down good and cold. A man who insists he has no axe to grind, generally has a big one somewhere which he is trying to hide.

"Of course, I need no argument to convince me that this association is not going to undertake this campaign for the money which would be pro-rated among the various agencies. I doubt if many of them would undertake a contract to the amount of what would be the relative share of each in the three hundred thousand. They want to demonstrate a big principle, and they take this means of doing it. We want recruits. If we both get what we want, then there will be no cause for complaint."

Commander Winship declared that the bulk of the newspaper advertising is to be placed in the cities where the Navy has established recruiting stations. In this respect, his attention was directed to the complaint growing out of the War Department's adoption of that policy, many cities which had no recruiting station or simply a branch, protesting because copy was not placed with them.

National in Scope

He said that the Navy advertising would go wherever the Naval recruiting flag flies, and that every paper in those cities would receive copy. He pointed to a chart on his desk and indicated that in many instances small towns would share in the advertising.

"All during the war and even before the war," he said, "papers in those cities gave the Navy all sorts of space in their news columns and never received a cent. Now, that we have money to spend for advertising, why shouldn't we go right back there and spend it?"

Representations in behalf of the small town papers were made by the American Press Association, and Commander Winship by reference to the many small towns having Navy recruiting stations, showed that the smaller papers would share generously in the Navy copy.

Daniels Wants Country Boys

By way of comment on this feature of the campaign, Secretary Daniels remarked that the young men he wished particularly to obtain as recruits for the Navy were those between the ages of 17 and 22, living in the country towns of the middle west.

"It is my belief that the farmer boy makes a better sailor than the city boy," he added.

Paul Faust, vice-president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, represented that organization as spokesman in the conference with Secretary Daniels. He said:

"The organized agencies are exceedingly anxious to see the policy of paid advertising established for the Government, and also to remove any friction that might exist between rival agencies in handling such advertising.

SAYS NEWSPAPERS MUST PROTECT AGENCIES ON COMMISSIONS

President Johns of A. A. A. A. Tells Southern Newspaper Publishers at Asheville Convention that They Should Not Pay Fees to Advertiser or Unrecognized Agents.

SPEAKING for the American Association of Advertising Agencies before the convention of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, at Asheville, last week, William H. Johns, it president, asked that henceforth the newspapers of the United States refuse agency commissions to any but regularly accredited and approved agencies, that no commissions be paid to advertisers, no matter in what disguise their orders may be received, and that a universal commission of 15 per cent be paid to recognized agencies on gross rates.

"The financial success of the newspaper hinges on the advertising revenue," he said. "Your papers sell for less than they cost you. The public its daily or weekly contract with what is going on outside and inside their own communities at a price to them ridiculously low. If you do that job well you prosper in circulation. As you prosper in circulation—it becomes profitable for the advertiser to use your columns and you prosper in net profits over cost.

Influence of Newspapers Is Increasing

"This is simple and often told—the prophesy of my firm and of the other reliable and progressive advertising agencies is that the newspaper is destined to become relatively a more important advertising medium than it is today or ever has been.

"The improvement of the newspaper and its business methods is bringing this about; the understanding of newspaper values on our part and on the part of advertisers is bringing this about; the spirit of co-operation between you and ourselves is bringing this about.

"The newspaper has such a quick, direct appeal to the public that it is destined to be more and more recognized as the biggest, most essential and thoroughly recognized factor in national as well as local advertising, just as it cannot be denied that even the smallest local newspaper helps frame national opinion on matters of politics, morals, tastes and habits.

"So much for the prophecy and now for the request.

"The request is that you will give serious thought and consistent action to the question of complete co-operation with those advertising agencies which have proven themselves worthy.

Embarrassing Frankness

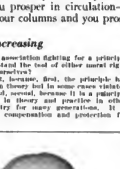
"Here we must speak with embarrassing frankness. Theoretically, you all agree that the intelligent advertising agency builds business for publishers; that with its wide experience and rare opportunities for knowing how, when and where to do this job it can eliminate the waste in your advertising practice and make accounts—larger and more stable than could be the case if each advertiser made his own experiments, felt his own way and failed to use the high talent professional skill available to him. So you say in theory at least.

"We believe that the accredited advertising agency furnishes something essential, something that neither you nor the advertiser can furnish so skillfully nor so well; therefore, in recognition of such value, a commission will be allowed advertising agencies.

"We believe also that this commission is amply earned both by what the agencies do in specific cases to make effective sales and by the real improvement of advertising practice for which their skilled work is so largely responsible and by the great growth in number and size of advertising accounts which is the result of intelligent systematization of practice and knowledge based on cumulative experience and less to do a job of skilled work most efficiently and economically.

Asks Inforsement of Agencies

"Gentlemen, it is a big claim, but a just one when I say that the good agency is entitled to mean just that to your business as publisher of a local newspaper.



"So we request that you give both serious thought and action to the question of making your indorsement of our work complete and confidential.

"Yes, I mean refusal of commission to any one not an approved and accredited advertising agency.

"So far we travel together. Here it may seem to you that I am trying to make a paid on your purse for I am aware that some of you at least allow the agency commission to people who are not approved and accredited advertising agents. I am aware also that some of these direct advertisers in the mind of you the commission spend in newspapers great sums of money.

"Are we no association fighting for a principle that will not stand the test of either moral right or proof by parallel?

"We are not, because, first, the principle has been granted in theory but in some cases violated in practice; and, second, because it is a principle accepted both in theory and practice in other lines of industry for many generations. It is the theory of compensation and payment for those who furnish something essential, prurient, and indispensable to the development of any line of industry.

"The advertising business needs and thereby really has the co-operative protection of the newspaper publisher in the shape of the refusal upon trust from the use of his space but from the agencies approved by the professional committee also solemnly agreed to be given only to accredited advertising agencies—and by some publishers given only to such agents—and by some other one respect and part I give the way one who will spend enough money with him to make the temptation to a practical violation of this agreement seem temporarily profitable.

Should Stabilize Business

"I am not going to dwell at length on this theme, but I do want it to open your gentlemen to look at our side of this question and give us the protection in our business which your protection admit (in theory at least) that our business and interest and our services justify and little as to. You need remember that the scarcity of our publications and the small total amount of advertising annually in the advertising columns of the press.

"Among the publishers of the great city dailies there are many who, if they can, will yield to the temptation to give one cent of the agency commission to the direct or unrecognized advertising agency—and they are not losing money by it. Many newspaper publishers who have followed this policy consistently for years have not lost money by it as you well know.

"And I predict that not a man in your association will lose a red by it because of the simple fact that your goods are in demand and your prices generally reasonable. In other words, the advertiser must talk to your part of the country through your columns if he wants to trade.

"Remember again we are not asking you to refuse to sell your space to direct advertisers, but only to refuse to pay them your commission as well as, our own, that you help us in our efforts to stabilize a business once unstable by declining to give direct the commission which publishers in general say belongs only to us as agencies for our special and very important services, and which you agree is essential to our complete development as creative and perpetuating factors in advertising.

Proposals to Publishers

"I am entitled in speak for the American Association of Advertising Agencies, and I say frankly that we want certain things because we feel the need of them. One is to be in full accord doing bigger things for and with your papers. The first step in that direction on complete support on and giving agency commission to advertising direct no matter how ordered any come disguised. For a starter we ask you now, cordially and officially, to take steps looking toward the refusal of any new business under such conditions.

"Second, we suggest a universal commission of 15 per cent, on gross rates. We want it established by you that are fair to you and just to the advertiser when there is nothing to maintain them against all onslaught and temptation. Equitable relationship between advertiser price and terms are the foundation of permanent business success.

"We desire and require this co-operation from certain newspaper publishers because we are in position more and more in service; because we visualize a constantly improving service, the kind of intelligent analysis and execution of advertising needs and sales which will keep us for you a steady and increasing flow of high grade, profitable business. We don't you want to see us so—but—that will take away all risk and gamble from your investment and from the advertiser's investment and from our own.

"With advertising just beginning to come into its honest own, with the newspapers gaining rewards of a growing and permanent character—with the great advertising agencies developed into substantial business institutions that will be their line as the great engineers and surgeons are in their lines real, constructive and trustworthy in their financial transactions as the big banking houses are in theirs—you can see that our cause is just and honorable and our requests are reasonable and timely.

No Threat of Reprisal

"Remember that in all I have said there is no threat of reprisal. We can't make such threats because our feelings of duty to you are treated must have no bearing on our selection or recommendation of publications for the use of our clients who should tell your part of the public about their goods.

"Does our request interfere with your right to do business as you please? Certainly no more than the fact that everything which limited interests must work in hearty co-operation to accomplish the greatest possible results. The man who runs business just as he fully well pleases doesn't do much business and he fully well pleases is unfriendly to his customers.

"Co-operation makes business. The intelligent use of intelligent help is only every day common sense. Plan for your source of supply is ultimate business suicide. The great industries of our day and their more lasting profits are the worth while agencies for advertising goods and commodities. Some protection and a chance to make a living profit on what we can do for you is all we ask.

"I cannot close without a word of sincere appreciation for your courtesy to me and to my Southland. We who toiled and deal largely in terms of national scope are as proud of the South as the South is of itself. No part of the country—or of the world, I believe—has done as much relative progress in newspaper development and business as has the Southern half of the United States."

"It is because we admire your work and progress, recognize your great importance and future, that we, comprising the American Association of Advertising Agencies, are so keenly alive to the vital need of more complete and harmonious understanding with you and a method of doing business together that is 100 per cent right on both sides."

WANT STATE OWNED PAPER MILL

Minnesota Editorial Association Proceeding with Pulp Wood Survey

ST. PAUL, July 16.—The Minnesota Editorial Association is proceeding to secure a State-owned paper mill in order to insure a market for pulp wood, utilize available water power on State land and guarantee publishers print paper at reasonable prices. A committee consisting of former Lieut.-Gov. Frank A. Day of the Fairmont Daily Sentinel and A. M. Wilcox of the Lake City Daily Graphic is acting, is about to inspect possible sites on Lake Vermilion, the Brule River and the Devil's Tract on the north shore of Lake Superior.

The legislature provided a fund of $800 which the committee will use.

Boston Publicity Bureau

BOSTON, July 14.—The Boston Publicity Bureau has been organized here by Thomas F. O'Brien and Winthrop R. Scudder to conduct a general advertising agency.

HENRY FORD ON STAND AT LIBEL HEARING

Detroit Manufacturer Predicts Another World War at Once if League of Nations Fails—Takes Full Responsibility for Pamphlet

Mr. CLEMENS, Mich., July 16.—Henry Ford and his son, Edsel, were the star witnesses in the former's million dollar libel suit against the Chicago Tribune.

While taking full responsibility for everything appearing in the peace and anti-preparedness pamphlets issued under his name and at his expense, Mr. Ford testified that more often than not he did not read them. They were prepared and sent out by his "peace secretary," Theodore Delavigne, he said.

Mr. Ford testified that his previous opposition had been to "over-preparedness" and not preparedness for defense, but that now he is for preparedness and believes that to end wars if the League of Nations fails," saying at another time, "I want the United States to clean it all up now." He said that he was opposed to recruiting but believed in conscription regardless of the statement to the contrary contained in a pamphlet issued in his name. He testified that he was still skeptical of history and lived in the present, and that there are a great many things that he does not know anything about.

Colonel McCormick on Stand

Mr. Ford recalled having said that he would spend $1,000,000 to educate the people against militarism, but said he could not recall ever having raised his promise of expenditure to $10,000,000. He said that he still believed that "professional soldier who makes a living out of killing is a murderer" but in reply to questions praised General Pershing, General Grant and other leaders and quoted General Sherman as saying "war is murder." He defined aggression as "burglarizing."

Mr. Ford produced in court the famous "world flag," designed in his shop, representing the brotherhood of all mankind.

Counsel for the Tribune offered three editorials printed before the "anarchist" editorial which is the basis of the present suit, which were complimentary to Mr. Ford. He said that the Tribune had drifted apart on the question of national preparedness.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, president and general manager of the Tribune, while on the stand, testified that while the Tribune did not make a practice continuing salaries of men in the service of the country during the war his salary of $20,000 a year was continued. He said that was done at his suggestion after he learned that some of his subordinates were receiving greater pay than he and that the means used to make up that difference for the period that had passed.

Fort Heads Trade Commission

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 15.—John Franklin Fort has been chosen chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, succeeding William B. Colver, whose term expired. Vice-Chairman Hurley, of Wichita (Kan.) Eagle, will be vice-chairman. Chairman Fort is a former governor of New Jersey and a judge of the Supreme Court of that state.

Stockholm Printers Strike

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, July 15.—Newspapers here have suspended publication because of a strike of printers. The union refused to arbitrate differences with the publishers.

COMMITTEE OF FAMOUS ENGLISH JOURNALISTS CONSIDERS STAFF EXCHANGES WITH U. S.

British Newspaper Proprietors' Association Selects Lord Burnham to Head Body of Seventeen to Take Up Ralph D. Blumenfeld's Plan for an Interchange Between British and American Newspapers—Every Literary Branch Will Be Affected

BRITISH newspaper men, awake to the possibilities for good under a system for the exchange of staff members with American newspapers, have appointed a committee to study and work out the details of the proposal made for better understanding between the two countries by Ralph D. Blumenfeld, of the London Daily Express, in an article appearing in the Victory Number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Lord Burnham, proprietor of the London Daily Telegraph, has been chosen by the Newspaper Conference of the British Newspaper Proprietors' Association to head a committee of seventeen of the foremost journalists of the British Empire to study the question from every angle and exchange views and suggestions with American newspaper men.

Noted Men on Committee

Never before have so many famous English journalists been appointed to serve on a single committee to take up any question pertaining to the newspaper business as have been selected to work with Lord Burnham. The committee includes:

Sir George Riddell, News of the World; R. D. Blumenfeld, London Daily Express; Ernest A. Perris, London Daily Chronicle; L. Pearson, London Morning Post; Edward Flynn, London Daily Mirror; G. E. Beer, London Times; A. W. Watson, London Westminster Gazette; E. J. Phillips, London Daily News; J. Hall Richardson, London Daily Telegraph; Sir Andrew Caird, London Daily Mail; J. Heddle, Manchester Daily Dispatch and Daily Sketch; J. Bone, Manchester Guardian; Sir David Duncan, South Wales Daily News; C. Henderson, Edinburgh Scotsman; Frank Birch, the Newspaper Society. The Scottish Newspaper Society has also been invited to name a member to act with the committee.

Mr. Blumenfeld's proposed system by which closer press relations would be assured and a better understanding developed in the handling of news between the United States and England has been a leading topic among men of the newspaper world since it was presented to the readers of the newspapers of the two countries through the columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER on May 22.

Favored by President of A. N. P. A.

The general idea met with the instant approval of some of the leading journalists of Great Britain and in the United States was in many quarters warmly received.

Frank P. Glass, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and editor of the Birmingham News, in a statement to the EDITOR & PUBLISHER has pledged his fullest co-operation in realizing Mr. Blumenfeld's plans. While many American publishers and editors have expressed themselves as heartily in favor of anything tending to bring the English and American press into closer relationship they have refrained from expressing an opinion on the concrete suggestion of Mr. Blumenfeld.

It is believed that as a result of interest being shown in the subject by the English and the naming of the present committee that some action will be taken on this side in an effort to establish a plan for bringing the peoples of the two Anglo-Saxon nations into closer understanding of each other through their spokesman—the press.

In many quarters the carrying out of the suggested plans for the exchange of staff members by English and American newspapers for their mutual benefit is looked upon as the first step in the organization of a League of Newspapers of the free nations of the world and giving the moulders of public opinion an international viewpoint that will make possible a better understanding in the interpretation of news for the readers of each nation.

Would Mean Better Understanding

In his advocacy of an exchange of staff members, Mr. Blumenfeld has pointed out the fallacy of believing that international love and understanding will come with world peace, a League of Nations and a resumption of trade relations. There must be a better understanding, he says, not built on sentimental speeches but a thing enduring, constructed by blotting out ignorance of vital facts pertaining to each of the Anglo-Saxon nations with first-hand knowledge gained by the trained men and women students and observers of the newspaper profession of each country.

The concrete plan as advocated by Mr. Blumenfeld embraces an interchange system in journalism that would include all the literary branches of the calling. He wishes the plan carried out on the largest possible scale with both men and women benefiting.

Trifling Mistakes Would Disappear

Aside from the far-reaching benefits that would result through the newspaper men and women of each country securing an understanding of the policies and ideals of each nation through contact with the men whose profession reflects in all its elements the ambitions of its people, all those ludicrous but trifling mistakes due to natural ignorance, which now disfigures the columns even of the best newspapers on either side would disappear.

The advocates of the interchange system say that for example the mistake of making Illinois a part of the State of Chicago would not again appear in any English journal, and David Lloyd George would become Prime Minister George in all American newspapers and never Premier Lloyd George.

The newspaper men of England have now taken up the question of interchange seriously. Under the general plan advocated by Mr. Blumenfeld, one year is suggested as the period of exchange, with at least one American in each English office participating and one Englishman in each American office.

Englishmen Are Deeply Interested

The purpose of each exchanged writer or executive would not only be to gain a knowledge of the country he was in, but also to instruct his temporary fellow workers in the methods, phrases and ideals of his home craftsmen. Owing to America's isolation from international politics in the past, the venture in interchange will probably be given deeper study by Americans than the English before they enter into it, if then.

It has been the practice of leading newspapers of the important political countries of the Old World for some time to send various members of their staffs into other countries for periods of from a few months to a year to study the people, business, general conditions, ideals and newspaper making. Some few American papers have done this in rare cases also, but they have never made a practice of it.

Wider Knowledge Is Necessary

The Dundee (Scotland) Courier each year sends two members of its staff on an educational trip. Some times these men are gone for six months, and this method is far more expensive than the interchange would be, it has been pointed out.

The deep interest that the newspapers of countries that are older in international politics take in having the men in their editorial departments understand the people of other countries through personal study is typified in the arrival in this country of Ramon Perez de Ayala, novelist, poet, one of the foremost scholars of Spain and one of the leading writers of the El Sol, of Madrid, and La Prensa, of Buenos Ayres. He expects to spend some time here in order that he will be better able to write impressions on current topics, especially in their relation to the United States.

Sun Honors Hero Soldiers

A tablet to the three members of the staff of The New York Evening Sun who gave their lives in France was unveiled in the city room July 10. Those commemorated are: Lieut. Quincy Sharp Mills, Lieut. Conrad Crawford and Lieut. Stuart Emmet Edgar. George M. Smith, managing editor, presided over the simple ceremony and James Luby of the editorial staff, spoke of the men and their work and the manner of their death.

William Allen White Home

EMPORIA, Kan., July 16.—William Allen White, owner and editor of the Gazette, has reached home, after an extended stay in Europe as representative of the Wheeler Syndicate. Mr. White was named by President Wilson as a member of the commission to represent the United States at the conference with the Bolsheviki on Prince's Island, which was never held.

Elect Officers in Bridgeport

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 15.—Officers of the News Press Club were elected for six-month terms today as follows: President, Ernest W. Finley, Sunday Herald; vice-president, Leo M. Pasquin, Post; secretary, Harvey Brown, Telegram; treasurer, Jerome J. Karpf, Telegram, lately of the Times.

Capper Host to Children

TOPEKA, Kan., July 14.—Senator Arthur Capper, head of Capper publications, celebrated his birthday today by giving his annual picnic to the children of Topeka and Kansas in Garfield Park.

SOUTH IS ENJOYING GREAT PROSPERITY

Advertising Volume Comparison of First Six Months of 1919 with Last Year Shows Newspapers Have Made Phenomenal Gains

That the newspapers of the South have been enjoying, during the present year, their period of greatest prosperity is proved by the statistics given here covering their advertising lineage for the first six months of 1919 in comparison with the figures for the same months of 1918.

These statistics show total lineage for the periods named, and also show the amounts of local, foreign and classified separately.

The newspapers listed are members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, and the statistics here presented are from reports made to that association. Substantial gains are recorded by practically all of these newspapers in all classifications, while some of them make remarkable showings. The figures are given in the right hand columns of this page.

League of Nations

Press Association Gets Hearty Welcome in Monroe—Mrs. Susan Elected Honorary Member

Monroe, Ga., July 16.—The Thirty-third Annual Convention of the Georgia Press Association opened here Monday night with public exercises, featured by addresses of welcome by Mayor Gowell and others. President Paul T. Harber presided.

The first business session, yesterday, was marked by strong addresses of particular interest to the newspaper men of the State by A. H. Hardy, editor of the Gainesville Eagle; David Comfort, of the Marietta Journal; Ralph Meeks, of the Carrollton Free Press, and Mr. Brumby, of the Marietta Times.

Mrs. Edith O. Suson, of the Greenville (Tenn.) Democrat, delivered a helpful and inspiring address on "How to Get Advertising from Home Business Enterprises." Mrs. Suson, who is vice-president of the Middle Tennessee Editors League, made such a decided hit she was elected an honorary member of the association. The session was enlivened by a discussion upon a resolution to endorse the League of Nations. The resolution was adopted with only three dissenting votes.

The social features of the meeting have been very much enjoyed. They have included receptions and entertainments, with dances for the younger people. Today will be given over to further discussion, the selection of a meeting place for 1920 and the election of officers. This evening the delegates leave for Athens to visit the State University.

Baby Daughter for the Gersons

Chicago, July 12.—Sam Gerson, formerly connected with the editorial department of the Chicago Daily News and other papers is the father of a baby girl, named Marian Jillian. She will hereafter contest his affections with her five-year-old brother. Mr. Gerson is now western representative for the Shubert theatrical interests.

Reeves Espy, who was sports editor of St. Louis Republic before enlisting in the Navy, has rejoined the staff as copy editor.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS WILL CONSIDER PLANS FOR WORLD-WIDE NEWS SERVICE

Allied Nations and Their Associates Adopt Proposal of United States at Peace Conference that New Means Be Devised for Bringing All Peoples into Better Understanding by Consolidating Control of Telegraph, Cable and Radio

AT the suggestion of the United States, with a view to putting some order into the international telegraph, cable and radio news service of the world—to bring the peoples of all nations into closer harmony and bring about mutual understanding—the Allied nations and their associates have agreed to convene an International Congress to consider the subject in all its aspects.

This statement, which is based on information to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, authoritatively, from abroad, seems on its face to be of greater import to the newspapers of the United States than any other single subject considered at the Peace Conference, at which it appears to have been a matter of lengthy discussion.

With a view to informing its readers on the extent the United States may figure in the proposed new system of international news service, EDITOR & PUBLISHER interviewed Walter S. Rogers, who organized the Foreign News Division of the Committee on Public Information of the United States, and was in charge of it during its existence—that is, up to June 30 of this year. He has just returned from abroad.

WALTER S. ROGERS.

American Press Must Act

Mr. Rogers also acted as advisor to the American Peace Mission on the political aspects of international communication by telegraph, cable and radio. He is now devoting his time to making sure that the proposed "Congress on International Communications" gets properly started. He said:

"It behooves the American press to take an interest in this International Congress and also in any legislation relating to cable and radio that may come up in Congress.

"America needs more cables, and it needs radio facilities. It would be a crime, from which the newspapers would be one of the principal sufferers, were trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific radio to pass into the control of some foreign owned corporation or of some foreign government. Such foreign control would determine the services and rates for the American press and might result in preferential service ur rates to agencies in competition with American agencies and newspapers.

Must Develop Radio

"High-power radio must be developed in such a way that this country is not at the mercy of any outsider, but it must be developed fully and rapidly for the benefit of the American press and of American commerce.

"Exigencies of the war brought about a large development of high-power radio by the Navy. It would be most unfortunate were the great Navy stations not made available for handling press and commercial messages. The outgoing press matter handled would be widely published and would keep the world interested in America and aid in building up American trade and prestige abroad. The incoming service would be of great importance to the American news agencies and the papers keeping correspondents abroad, as it would make possible a better and wider range of foreign news.

"But there is a larger interest than any immediate American interest—the telegraph, cable and radio facilities of the world need to be developed along lines that will provide this entire world with adequate facilities at low rates. All preferential and secret radio should be abolished. A well-worked-out world communication service would be of incalculable value in bringing the world together."

"Explaining" the U. S.

At the time the United States entered the war, Mr. Rogers was in China, looking over the Orient newspapers and familiarizing himself with the activities of the news agencies operating there. He found that virtually no American news was reaching there. The public in the Orient had not the slightest chance in the world to know why the United States entered the war, her purposes, or the extent to which America planned to participate. But it was vital that the Orient should know, not alone for the sake of American prestige, but for the political and military necessity that the Orient should be lined up enthusiastically on the same side as America.

Rogers hurried back to Washington determined to get the powers-that-be interested. Arriving there, he learned that Senator Root, who was then in Russia at the head of an American mission, was urging that American news be sent there.

After a while Rogers got action. In due time he had American news flowing in all directions throughout the world. Telegraph, cable and radio were used. Always he stuck to straight news, refusing to have anything to do with propaganda. Always he cooperated with the press association and the newspapers, not competing with them, but trying to help them. The Associated Press, the United Press, the International News Exchange Telegraph, Havas, Radio, Stefend, Kokusai, and agencies the average American editor never heard of, soon discovered that his was a shop run by people who knew what they were doing and what could be worked with.

Rogers went to France immediately after the signing of the armistice. In Paris he not only kept an eye on news distribution, but he set in as an advisor on telegraph, cable and radio matters, attending two meetings of the "Big Four" with President Wilson when the disposition of the seized German cables was being discussed.

Asked about his work in Paris, Rogers said: "Our New York office sent to Paris about eight thousand words a day by radio. In this was included a general news report which, besides going to the American Peace Commission was given to three papers in Paris printed in English, and such of it as might be usable was translated and given to the French press; twelve or fifteen hundred words of 'home stuff,' local news from all over the United States that might be of interest to the doughboy, was given to the papers and also distributed by the Y. M. C. A., K. of C., etc.; a summary of American headline news for the Peace Commission; a comprehensive digest of American editorial comment, so that the Peace Commission had daily as full a summary of American opinion as it would had were it meeting in Washington.

Owe Radio Dept. Thanks

"The critics of the Treaty and Covenant of the League of Nations owe someone a vote of thanks, for the criticism would never have been known in Paris had not this daily summary been radioed.

"A daily summary of the English press was telegraphed to Paris over the United States Army wires. A summary of the French press was also furnished the commission and, whenever it seemed worth while, summaries were brought in from other places.

"From Paris, American news was sent to various places in Europe; official American material was put into French for the Paris and provincial papers; one thousand words of American news was furnished daily to Le Petit Cironde, being sent from Paris to Bordeaux over that paper's leased wire; for a while a thousand words a day was sent to the School of Journalism of the A. E. F. University; oves 900,000 words were sent from Paris to the American press, nearly all of it being transmitted by radio.

Economy in News Service

"The French government placed certain radio facilities at the disposal of the American government. The trans-Atlantic cables were jammed. Advantage was taken of the French government's kindness to help out the American press. Under the conditions it seemed foolish for each of the press associations and certain of the newspapers to each send the text of critical statements, speeches, etc., so it was arranged that these should be radioed once to New York and there given out with simultaneous release. This scheme worked well, reduced the load on the cables and saved every one money. There still being available radio wordage, 3,000 words a day were placed at the disposal of the American news agencies and 3,000 at the disposal of the American correspondents in Paris, who themselves determined the number of words each should have.

"Altogether, as stated above, over 900,000 words were handled. The correspondents in Paris turned their copy over to the office of the Foreign News Division of the Committee on Public Information. This office saw that it got to the French radio station at Lyons. The messages upon being intercepted in the United States by the Navy were delivered to the New York office of the Foreign News Division for delivery to the proper agency or papers.

No Censorship

Not a single word of these messages was censored. Every correspondent in Paris has praised the service. Sometimes the radio has been faster than the cable. But for the fact that the French station at Lyons handled a vast amount of French government business which frequently overloaded the station, a very fast service could have been provided day and night between Paris and New York by radio.

"Not only did the Paris office of the News Division do the work roughly indicated above, but it cooperated with the American correspondents in every way possible. For instance, it helped in getting American telegraph and telephone wires installed at Versailles for the Peace Congress. For this purpose was signed ten motorcycles and two motorcars were provided for rushing copy from Versailles to Paris, a dispatch rider leaving every fifteen minutes. One of the dispatch riders carrying copy broke all records by going from the palace at Versailles to the central radio bureau, Paris, in 21 minutes.

President—James H. Alliston, Fort Worth (Texas) Record.

First vice-president—Marcellus E. Foster, Houston (Texas) Chronicle.

Second vice-president—W. A. Elliott, Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union.

Secretary and treasurer—Walter C. Johnson, Chattanooga (Tenn.) News.

New Members of Executive Committee

Executive Committee—Mrs. Lois K. Mayes, Pensacola (Fla.) Journal; Victor H. Hanson, Birmingham News; J. L. Mapes, Beaumont (Tex.) Enterprise; C. I. Stewart, Lexington (Ky.) Herald; F. G. Bell, Savannah Morning News; E. B. Jeffries, Greensboro News; M. K. Duerson, Lynchburg News; E. E. Clarke, Little Rock Democrat; D. C. More, Raleigh News & Observer; D. D. Moore, New Orleans Times-Picayune; W. W. Holland, Spartanburg Herald; Col. A. F. Sanford, Knoxville Journal & Tribune.

The election of Mrs. Lois K. Mayes of the Pensacola Journal to membership on the executive committee marks a distinct departure for the association. Mrs. Mayes is the first woman so honored. Proposal of her name was greeted with applause and her election was unanimous. She was the first publisher proposed, her colleagues having chosen after she had been elected. Mrs. Mayes has taken active interest in association affairs for a good many years. Her opinion of her profession is indicated by her enthusiastic approval of the decision of one of her boys to go to Chicago soon to study linotype composition at the Mergenthaler School.

Committees to serve during the ensuing year were announced by President Allison after an enthusiastic meeting of the executive board at which the work for the coming year was canvassed and outlined. They follow:

1920 Committees

News Print Committee—C. I. Stewart, Lexington (Ky.) Herald, Chairman; W. W. Sieuffer, Louisville Post; Curtis Johnson, Knoxville Sentinel; H. G. Giovannoli, Lexington (Ky.) Leader; W. E. Thomas, Roanoke (Va.) Times.

Advertising Committee—W. O. Bryan, Atlanta Georgian Chairman; A. G. Newmyer, New Orleans Item; F. Gladstone, Louisville (Ky.) Herald; Charles Allen, Montgomery Advertiser; Victor H. Hanson, Birmingham News.

Legislative Committee—Major E. B. Stahlman, Nashville Banner, Chairman; Col. Leslie J. Wortham, Fort Worth Star-Telegram; Urey Woodson, Owensboro (Ky.) Messenger; Col. A. F. Sanford, Knoxville Journal & Tribune; Col. W. C. Dowd, Charlotte News.

A. B. C. Committee—P. T. Anderson, Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, Chairman. Mr. Anderson will name his own associates.

Committee to make survey of conditions as relating to establishing a school for linotype operators: W. T. Anderson, Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, Chairman; Urey Woodson, Owensboro (Ky.) Messenger; D. H. Moore, New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Committee on Recognition of Advertising Agencies: Not announced.

The important development of the closing session was the statement that the Federal judges had agreed with former Attorney-General George W. Wickersham, who is now in charge of the news print case for the publishers, to hear the appeal in the absence of action by the Federal Trade Commission. It was also announced that an effort would be made to influence Congress to provide the necessary funds for carrying out the agreement as between the manufacturers, the publishers and the Government.

Want Stahlman Appointed

It developed that George W. McAneny of the New York Times had resigned as chairman of the postal committee of the A. N. P. A., and it was announced that President Frank P. Glass, editor of the Birmingham News, would be asked to name Major E. D. Stahlman of the Nashville Banner as chairman of that important committee of publishers.

President Bell read a letter, at the Wednesday morning session, from Col. W. E. Haskell, vice-president of the International Paper Company, expressing regrets for President P. T. Dodge, who was detained in New York by some important labor development. Col. Haskell presented copies of Mr. Dodge's paper—"Why News Print Paper Is High."

President Bell also spoke to appreciation of the new ink-distributing roller covering of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company, of Akron. He said the Goodrich Company has developed a feeder ink roller that is not subject to atmospheric conditions. It has been in successful operation in the plant of the Cleveland Plain Dealer for a couple of years and is now being tried out by about fifty other publishers.

Profit Sharing Plans

Profit sharing and bonuses provided a lively theme of discussion on Wednesday. C. I. Stewart, Lexington Herald, said it was a difficult matter to arrange profit sharing and at the same time protect and reward the long time faithful employe as he should be rewarded.

W. T. Anderson, Macoo, thought that the profit sharing plan should be scientific and should also provide a loss sharing plan. Such plan he thought should work both ways.

Major Cohen, Atlanta Journal, stated that the Journal had presented every employe with two week's extra pay during the past six months without any promise as to the future. It has also arranged life insurance for all employes, the salary bonus being "a gift without any promises as to the future."

President Bell spoke of insurance for the staff and said that he had been amazed at the small number of men in his plant who were carrying life insurance. He had arranged this for all of his men.

W. T. Anderson, Macon, said that he had 77 employes covered by policies ranging from one thousand to two thousand five hundred dollars at a total annual cost of $1,188.

Foster's and Johnson's Views

Marcellus E. Foster, of Houston, said that his reason for rejecting the profit sharing plan was that the men who were entirely loyal and efficient did only share to the extent that other employes did. He felt that efficiency should be rewarded and remarked that the Kansas City Star's profit sharing plan does not provide a profit share to press men, who were at one time disloyal,—about 10 per cent of the total employes of the Times and Star, according to Mr. Marcellus, do not participate in the profit sharing. Composing room and stereotype employes do.

Secretary-Treasurer W. C. Johnson told of his experience with profit sharing in the Chattanooga News office. The plan has been in operation for eighteen months. Distribution is on a monthly basis and amounts to about 10½ per cent—or 10 per cent of earnings in money—and about 2½ per cent on basis of compensation and service.

W. T. Anderson reiterated that the profit sharing was not practicable unless it shared in losses and recommended the sale of stock at agreed price on easy payment plan, redemption by the office if employe left.

Farm Papers Organize

An outgrowth of the Asheville meeting was the formation of an Association of Southern Farm Journal Publishers. They are not entitled to full membership in the S. N. P. A. but have many interests in common. They also will meet annually at Grove Park Inn. Their first officers are: L. A. Niven, Progressive Farmer, Birmingham, president; Russel Kay, Florida Grower, Tampa, Secretary-treasurer.

There are eight charter members, including the Progressive Farmer, Birmingham; Southern Ruralist, Atlanta, Southern Agriculturist, Nashville; Southern Planter, Richmond; Southern Cultivator, Atlanta; Florida Grower, Tampa; Farm and Ranch, Dallas; Florida Farm and Live Stock Record, Jacksonville.

Six other farm journals are published in the South and will be invited to a meeting during the coming year. A committee will investigate the matter of advertising agencies and will submit a report at the meeting next year.

Paul T. Harber, president of the Georgia Press Association, who attended the meeting, is planning to organize a Southern Association of the Editors of Weekly Newspapers. He hopes to take some action at the meeting at Monroe next week, and call a meeting simultaneously with the next meeting of the S. N. P. A., which will be held on the first Monday after the Fourth of July, 1920, at Asheville.

CONVENTION NOTES

Walter G. Bryan, publisher of the Atlanta Georgian, was always the center of an animated group. He has been in charge of the Georgian now for four years and has it "over the top" in great shape. He told about an increase in circulation of 10,000 per day, and an increase in earnings of $90,000. He was warmly complimented for the successful advertising campaign of the Southern publishers, with which he had had so much to do. Mr. Bryan came over to Asheville in his car from Atlanta; then returned by train owing to the indisposition of Mrs Bryan. He placed his car at the disposal of W. A. Elliott, of the Jacksonville Times-Union; Harry Reynolds of the Benjamin & Kentnor Company, New York; and J. W. Barber, of the J. W. Barber Advertising Company, Boston, who made the trip over the mountains to Atlanta.

Stanley Clague, managing-director of Audit Bureau of Circulations, appeared before the executive board of the A. A. A. upon invitation and was warmly congratulated upon the progress made by A. B. C. during past year. His point of view was sought in regard to several proposed departures in routine and policy. The feeling seems general that A. B. C. "has arrived."

Col. W. C. Dowd caused a near riot at the sessions on Tuesday by outlining labor conditions in his plant. After telling about a strike of mechanical employes ten years ago; about his success in getting through without missing an issue; he told of the working of his press room foreman and his associates. The publishers immediately evinced a desire to go to Charlotte to secure the services of Dowd's experts. But Dowd assured them he would be sitting on the front porch with a shot gun waiting for the first man who came anywhere near with the idea in view of taking any of his men away.

Mrs. Lois K. Mayes motored over to Asheville from Jacksonville with her boys and a party of friends.

W. T. Anderson and P. T. Anderson, their wives and friends, motored from Macon—280 odd miles over the mountains—in twelve hours—"going some."

Periodical Publishers Association Considers Plans for Expansion

At the annual meeting of the Periodical Publishers' Association in New York, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, George E. Cook, Mother's Magazine.

Vice-president and chairman publishing division, Thomas L. Briggs, Collier's.

Vice-president and chairman advertising division, Lee W. Maxwell, Crowell Publishing Company.

Vice-president and chairman circulation division, R. A. Markinson, Pictorial Review Company.

Secretary, C. Henry Hathaway, International Magazine Company.

Treasurer, Thomas A. Barrett, Orange-Judd Company.

Member executive committee-at-large, R. J. Cuddihy, Funk & Wagnalls Company.

Retiring president, member executive committee for ensuing year, Allan H. Richardson, Metcalf Co.

Plans were submitted and referred to the executive committee for a broadening of the scope of the work of the association.

No Sunday Delivery in Macon

MACON, Mo., July 14.—Beginning today no newspapers will be delivered on Sunday by the Macon News Company, the public being notified that patrons must come to the store to get their copies of metropolitan publications. Harry Black, manager of the news company, has taken this action so that his carrier boys may attend Sunday school and church.

A.A.A.A. TO MEET AGAIN IN SOUTH IN 1920

Executive Board of Advertising Agents' National Organization Deeply Impressed by Joint Conference with Southern Publishers

The executive committee of the American Association of Advertising Agencies was so well pleased with its reception by Southern publishers and Southern advertising interests that it decided, at the joint session with the new executive committee of S. N. P. A., that it will meet again next year with the Southern agents and publishers.

"If the A. A. A. A. had accomplished nothing else in the past two years its existence would be fully justified by what it has done to acquaint its members with the South," said Executive Secretary James O'Shaughnessy to EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Tribute to Thomas and Massingale

"We were beginning to form our national body without giving much consideration to the Southern field," Mr. O'Shaughnessy remarked, "when St. Elmo Massingale, of Atlanta, and Jefferson Thomas, of Jacksonville, came into one of our meetings and made effective pleas for the agencies of the South. They succeeded in convincing the rest of us that even then there were seven Southern agencies that fully qualified for membership in the American Association.

"So the Southern Council was formed and these seven agencies, through it, became charter members of the National Association. In my position I am constantly in the closest touch with the work of our various sectional organizations and I must pay my respects to that of the Southern Council for its fine character and pushing nature. In fact every one of our other councils is ready to congratulate the Southern Agencies on what they have accomplished.

"It was a more or less revolutionary proposition to consider a meeting of our executive board away from the recognized advertising centers of the country, but Chairman Thomas, of the Southern Council, made such an effective presentation of the claims of the South and of the charms of Grove Park Inn that the members voted unanimously in favor of it. Now I am sure every member is glad this action was taken."

Mr. O'Shaughnessy's address to the joint meeting of the S. N. P. A., farm papers and Southern Council was highly commended, and one Southern Publisher vowed in a time was well worth the trip to Asheville.

Defines Agency Service

The executive committee, in connection with its meeting, issued the following explanation of "Advertising Agency Service, as defined by A. A. A.":

"Advertising agency service consists of interpreting to the public, or to that part of it which it is desired to reach, the advantages of a product or service, interpreting to the public the extension of a product or service is based upon:

"1. A study of the product or service in order to determine the advantages and disadvantages inherent in the product itself, and to its relation to competition.

"2. An analysis of the present and potential market for which the product or service is adapted:

As to season.

As to territory and amount of competition.

As to trade and economic conditions.

"3. A knowledge of the factors of distribution, sales and their methods of operation.

"4. A knowledge of all the available media and from which can possibly be used to carry out the interpretation of the product or service to the consumer, whether dealer, contractor, or other factor. This knowledge covers:

Character of circulation, physical requirements, rates, quantity, quality, location.

Acting on the study, analysis and knowledge as explained in the preceding paragraphs, recommendations are made and the following procedure ensues:

"5. Formation of a definite plan.

"6. Execution of this plan:

(a) Writing, designing, illustrating of advertisements or other appropriate forms of the message.

(b) Constructing for the space of other means of advertising.

(c) The proper presentation of the message in mechanical form and forwarding it with proper instructions for the fulfillment of the contract.

(d) Checking and verifying of insertion, display or other means used.

(e) The auditing, billing and paying for the service, space and preparations.

"7. Continuing with the same work to insure the greatest effect from advertising. The more clearly the nature of the work is defined, and the more generally it is understood, the more quickly will those who are not disposed to live up to their obligations be forced out of business; the more will we support, encourage and help those who are disposed to live up to their obligations, and the more we can help them to do so."

Next Meeting in Boston

The members of the executive committee are:

William H. Johns, president of the George Batten Company, president.

Paul T. Cherington, Mitchell & Faust, vice-president.

W. B. Hine, Frank Seaman, Inc., treasurer.

Harry Dwight Smith, of Fuller & Smith, Cleveland, secretary.

William H. Rankin, chairman of the newspaper division.

W. C. D'Arcy, of the D'Arcy Advertising Company, St. Louis.

Jefferson Thomas, of the Thomas Advertising Service, Jacksonville, Fla.

W. B. McLain, of McLain-Hadden Simpers Company, Philadelphia.

J. W. Barber, of the J. W. Barber Advertising Agency, Boston.

O. H. Blackman, of the Blackman-Ross Company, New York.

H. E. Charles, of the Charles Advertising Service, New York.

Jesse Neitzman, of the Gundlach Advertising Company, Chicago.

Stanley Resor, of the J. Walter Thompson Company, New York.

M. P. Gould, of M. P. Gould Company, New York.

James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the association, New York.

The Atlantic City (N. J.) Union has advanced its price from one cent to two cents a copy.

PLAN TO FORM UNION OF N. Y. WRITERS

Support of I. T. U. Officials Is Obtained for Project—Publishers' Representative Says Skilled Editorial Workers Prefer Freedom

A movement is under way to form a labor union, as a unit of the International Typographical Union, to be composed exclusively of men employed in the editorial departments of New York City newspapers. The plan is favored by officials of the Typographical Union and it is understood that its organizers will give whatever aid they can toward making the proposed new organization a reality.

The idea of organizing editorial workers on all the New York City papers has developed from conferences between officials of the Typographical Union and certain members of the German Press Club, who desired, at first, to organize a union to be composed only of editorial men on the German language paper.

After conferring with legal counsel, the officials of the Typographical Union suggested that better results, so far as prospective demands for increased salaries, and improved working conditions, were concerned, could be obtained if all local editorial men, including editors, copy readers, rewrite men, and reporters, were admitted to membership.

Explain Plan to Promoters

"That is what we purpose to do," said Arnold Fleischmann, head of the committee from the German Press Club which has in charge the negotiations with officials of the Typographical Union.

"It is not our purpose, of course, henceforth, to dominate such activities as there may be to establish a union of editorial workers on all the New York City papers. We will ask that all editorial men in the editorial departments of the German newspapers be admitted to the union, if it is organized.

L. H. Berry, president of Typographical Union No. 6 ("Big Six"), composed of New York City printers, said that the union was heartily in favor of the plan and would assist in carrying it out. He said:

"The establishment of a minimum wage scale does not bring any member of a union down to the wage-earning capacity of less able men. It simply assures that any man who is considered able enough to do a certain kind of work shall be paid a wage commensurate with the present increased cost of living.

"We now have regularly chartered unions of newspaper writers in Boston, Scranton, Philadelphia, Salt Lake City, Milwaukee and Montreal, and I am informed that they are all strong organizations."

Sees Lessening of Initiative

Lester L. Jones, who recently was appointed business manager of the newspaper Publishers' Association of New York City, and who will be in charge of negotiations hereafter between the association and any of its union employees regarding wages and conditions of employment, said he did not consider a union of newspaper editorial workers to be necessary.

"I believe that such a union has a tendency to lessen initiative and activity and my opinion is that it is not likely to be popular with the better class of editorial workers," he said.

"The skilled newspaper man does not want to be fettered by an arbitrary wage scale. Furthermore, a great many of them regard the newspaper business as only a stepping stone to some other kind of work that pays them much better. A great many of them stay in newspaper work for so short a time that the membership of any union formed among them would be constantly changing."

ALL PEACEFUL IN BOSTON

Union and Publishers' Association Officials Confer on Labor Differences

(BY TELEGRAPH)

BOSTON, July 15.—Threatened trouble between Newspaper Writers Union, No. 1, and publishers of Boston daily newspapers seemingly has been averted for the present. Since the calling off of the threatened strike last week, the wage conference committee of the union, together with officers of the International Typographical Union have been in frequent session with the Publishers Association.

Owing to absence of any statement from either side appears to indicate that the two bodies are at least working in better harmony than ever before. This opinion is further borne out by the report of the wage conference committee to union members that much progress has been made, but that nothing of a definite nature can be made public at this time.

More Ads from Government

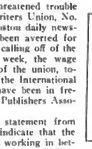
PORTLAND, Oreg., July 15.—National advertising in newspapers will be used by the United States Spruce Corporation, successor to the spruce production division of the army, to sell the remaining properties under its jurisdiction. They have been for sale since the signing of the armistice, but failed to bring a price satisfactory to the Government. By advertising them extensively, Col. C. S. Stearns, president of the Spruce Production Corporation, expects to get their real value. His headquarters is in Portland.

A. N. P. A. Has New Committee

President Frank P. Glass of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association has appointed a "committee of adjustment" to help settle differences arising among competitive members over prices and kindred matters. The committee consists of: A. W. Peterson, Waterloo (Ia.) Courier, president of the Inland Daily Press Association; S. F. Thomason, business manager of the Chicago Tribune; Victor Rosewater, publisher Omaha (Neb.) Bee; and Louis T. Golding, publisher St. Joseph (Mo.) News-Press.

Somerset Heads Canadian Agencies

TORONTO, Ont.—W. B. Somerset, of A. McKim's, Limited, has been elected president of the Association of Canadian Advertising Agencies, with the following associate officers: First vice-president, J. P. Patterson, Norris-Patterson, C. T. Solomon, Advertising Service, Limited, Toronto; second vice-president, Limited, Toronto; secretary-treasurer, A. J. Denne, Smith, Denne & Moore, Limited, Toronto, and A. F. Smith, R. C. Smith & Son, Toronto.



Buckley Moves to Beaumont

BEAUMONT, Tex., July 16.—Norman R. Buckley, connected with the advertising department of the Cleveland Press during the past year, is now advertising manager of the Beaumont Journal, of which C. H. Fentress, for many years business manager of the Cleveland Press, is president and business manager.

BUYS INTEREST IN TRADE MAGAZINE

J. M. Hopkins, for 12 Years With Printers' Ink, Becomes General Manager of Advertising and Selling—Lively Competition Forecast

J. M. Hopkins, who recently resigned from the general management of Printers' Ink, has purchased a half interest in

J. M. HOPKINS

Advertising & Selling magazine, and on August 1 will become president and general manager of that publication.

Mr. Hopkins, it is understood, will be in complete control of Advertising & Selling, and is making plans for the extensive promotion of it as a trade journal devoted to the general field of advertising. His record of 12 years of successful management in that field will stand him in good stead, and his personal popularity and wide acquaintance will be an asset of high value to Advertising & Selling.

Mr. Hopkins is generally considered to be one of the ablest salesmen of trade newspaper advertising in the country. He is an organizer, too, as has been demonstrated through the executive work with Printers' Ink. During his long service to that journal he maintained a staff of advertising salesmen of high efficiency, and the latter enjoyed by Printers' Ink under his management is an indication of the broad and constructive policies he followed.

For "A. P." Good Fellowship

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 12.—The annula meeting of the Good Fellowship Club of the Associated Press was held in the Star Building here last Sunday. Thirty newspaper men, correspondents and representatives of the A. P., were present. Addresses were made by Frederick R. Martin, assistant general manager, and W. S. Seerger, chief superintendent at Chicago. Officers elected are: President, J. C. Quarrier, of Kansas City; vice-president, F. D. Woodworth, Joplin; secretary, W. P. Huff, Kansas City, and treasurer, William Flynn, St. Joseph.

Osborn Joins Barton and Durstine

The firm of Barton, Durstine & Osborn, Inc., will succeed the Barton & Durstine Company, of New York, on August 1, when Alex F. Osborn, until recently in charge of the E. P. Remington Agency, Buffalo, becomes a member. Mr. Osborn will open a Buffalo office for his new connection and continue his residence in that city.

No August Meeting for I. D. P. A.

CLINTON, Ia.— The August meeting of the Inland Daily Press Association probably will be postponed and combined with the October session, which will be held over two or more days in conjunction with gatherings of several other kindred organizations to be held at the time.

Opens Baltimore Office

BALTIMORE, Md., July 15.—An office has been opened here by Wood, Putnam & Wood, Boston advertising agency, in charge of E. J. Bannwart, late advertising manager of McCormick & Co.

THEY MADE QUICK DECISION IN LAUNCHING N. Y.'S NEWEST DAILY

WITHIN the last ten years probably more editors and publishers of newspapers—and some who were only on their way to editorship and ownership—in cities scattered throughout the United States have figured on the possibilities of winning fame and fortune with a new kind of newspaper in New York City than ever before gave a thought to metropolitan journalism.

Their ideas usually ran to the style in size, make-up and picture features of certain successful London dailies, but carried with them the added zest of American "pep" in the word matter and treatment of news.

These dreams were not confined entirely to men and women in the newspaper field outside of New York. Hardly a month went by during the same period that the possibilities of the same adventure did not come up in some form or other in the routine business of the established publishers of the metropolis.

Such papers reached the "nearly-ready-to-start" point several times and were again tucked back into a dark corner. It remained for three men of the West to ride into the East on the Twentieth Century Limited, and push the idea into the realm of reality.

It is understood that Col. Robert R. McCormick, Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson and William H. Field of the Chicago Tribune had the idea of new kind of morning paper for New York under consideration just three months, and in that time they had completed arrangements for the publication of the New York Illustrated News, had in a general way organized their staff and were devoting some attention preparing advertisements to announce its first appearance.

Six weeks later the Illustrated News entered the metropolitan field, the goal of the ambitious, but not a play place for the timid. Probably no newspaper adventure in recent years has attracted so much attention in the American newspaper world.

The Illustrated News is now in its sixth week, and is as lighthearted as it is youthful. It is out satisfied with itself and says so frequently. To date, the owners have been very frank with their readers.

Early in its career they announced that the News was the poorest printed newspaper in New York, but that it was getting better each day and expected to continue to improve until it was the best. Each day their mail bag is filled with letters from the people, and each day the Illustrated News prints an entertainingly large number of them. The letters containing knocks or kicks always head the column in which they appear.

The rapid arrival at a decision after the idea was first presented, the rushing of plans for publication to immediate completion and the frank manner in which the Illustrated News talks about itself with its readers merely reflects the energy, resourcefulness and progressiveness of the three men who actually dove right into the center of the journalistic pool, in which others even feared to wade around.

Colonel McCormick is a lawyer as well as an editor and president of the Tribune Company, Chicago; Captain Patterson is an editor and author as well as chairman of the board of directors of the Tribune Company. Both won their titles in the world war. Mr. Field was connected with the Frank A. Munsey Company for many years and left that organization to become a vice-president and manager of the Chicago Tribune.

The regular activities of the men who have ventured into the New York daily newspaper field, however, are not confined to the Chicago Tribune and the Illustrated News—among other things they also have a successful newspaper in Paris, an edition of the Tribune; a large paper mill at Thorold, Ont., and a million-dollar libel suit in which Henry Ford is the prosecutor up at Mt. Clemens, Mich.

North Carolinas Announce Convention Program

Meeting Will Take Place at Wrightsville, July 31-Aug. 1—31st Year for J. B. Sherrill

CONCORD, N. C., July 14.—Secretary-treasurer J. B. Sherrill announces the following program for the annual meeting of the North Carolina Press Association, to be held at Wrightsville Beach, July 31-August 1:

Thursday, July 31, 1919, 8:00 o'Clock

"The Cash in Advance System."
"Political Advertising."
"What Do Readers Most Prize in a Local Newspaper?"

Incidentally this completes Mr. Sherrill's 31st consecutive year as secretary-treasurer of the association. During this time he has missed only two meetings, both occasions on account of illness.

Starting New Daily in Tulsa

TULSA, Okla., July 16.—Arrangements have practically been completed for launching a new Republican morning paper here. The new paper expects to have the support of the Republican organization and to cut a wide factor in state affairs.

PREVENTS VENUE CHANGES

Missouri Supreme Court Rules on Important Libel Suit Point

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., July 12.—The Missouri Supreme Court has held unconstitutional section 1775 of the Revised Statutes of 1909, which provides that "suit for libel against a corporation shall be brought in the county in which the defendant is located or in the county in which the plaintiff resides." The effect of the decision is that suits for libel can be brought only at the place of the newspaper's publication.

The decision was handed down in the case of D. C. McClung, former warden of the Missouri State Penitentiary, against the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

ADMIT NEW MEMBERS TO PRESS GALLERY

Many Dailies in Smaller Cities, Not Heretofore Represented, Are Listed in the Congressional Directory of the Sixty-sixth Session

WASHINGTON, July 16.—The belated appearance this week of the first Congressional Directory of the Sixty-sixth Congress failed to reveal any appreciable changes in the press gallery list from that published by EDITOR & PUBLISHER in May.

The gallery membership is larger this session, not only in the number of correspondents entitled to admission, but in the papers represented. The latter is especially true with respect to many dailies in the smaller towns which heretofore did not boast of special representatives.

The papers represented, arranged by states, follow:

NEWSPAPER MAKERS AT WORK

JOHN A. DICKSON

JOHN A. DICKSON, advertising manager of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, is one of those unusual individuals who persists in a sincere personal conviction that there is nothing needful to be said about them. However, coming men, like the proverbial events, cast their shadows before, the only difference between them being that some make considerable noise about it, while others simply "go get it" on rubber heels. John Dickson is a believer in the "O'Sullivan" idea. He is perhaps, one of the very few advertising executives of the largest newspapers of this country who attained their present positions without any preliminary experience in the newspaper office itself.

Mr. Dickson was born in the town of Bolivar, Ohio, in 1872. He received his education in the local public high school, and after graduation entered the manufacturing business. In 1896, when twenty-four years old, he first entered the advertising business as one of the publishers of a since-defunct Chicago trade journal called Advertising Experience. Selling his interest in that in 1900, Mr. Dickson joined the soliciting staff of the Western office of the Youth's Companion (Boston), located in Chicago; in January of the following year was appointed western manager of the same and retained that position until September 23, 1918, when he resigned to accept the advertising managership of the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

Mr. Dickson is married and has two children—a boy and a girl. He is a member of the Chicago Athletic Association, the Exmoor Country Club and the Evanston Golf Club.

"And that's all there is to it," he says.

PEACE LEAGUE ISSUES PAPER

First Copies of "The Covenanter" Are Mailed to Congressmen

The first issue of "The Covenanter," a publication that aims to make clear the purposes of the League to Enforce Peace, have been printed on the presses of Doubleday, Page & Co., and the advance copies mailed to members of Congress.

"The Covenanter" is a collection of articles on the League of Nations plan by former President Taft, Henry W. Taft, ex-Attorney General George W. Wickersham and Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University.

Reports Progress on Plan for New Agency Body

(BY TELEGRAPH)

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 10.—The Southeastern Advertising Agents Association, at the closing session of the annual convention, elected new officers as follows: Dillard Jacobs, Atlanta, president; R. S. Freeman, Richmond, first vice-president; C. W. Page, Richmond, second vice-president; William Alden, Atlanta, secretary and treasurer. These four and J. R. Watts, Jr., Atlanta, compose the new executive committee.

In a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, President Jacobs said:

"Discussion of the proposition to organize a national independent association of advertising agencies was favorable and letters and telegrams from northern agencies indicate a appreciation of the desirability for a truly democratic association open to all bona-fide general agencies.

"The secretary was instructed to make further inquiry during the current year on the attitude of northern agencies toward assisting in the formation of a new association. The Southeastern body will merge with such an association if it is formed.

"Our membership was enlarged at Asheville by three new members, making a total of 11 agencies."

NEWSPAPERS TO GET MOST ADVERTISING

They Are the Only Media Elastic Enough to Meet Demands of the New Times, Declares J. W. Barber, A. A. A. A. Officer

(BY TELEGRAPH)

ATLANTA, Ga., July 15.—The Navy Department's plan to launch an extensive advertising campaign for recruits, was announced here today by J. Wesley Barber, of Boston, member of the executive committee of the A. A. A. A., at a formal luncheon given today by W. G. Bryan, publisher of the Atlanta Georgian and Sunday American to advertising and newspaper men.

James O'Shaughnessy, executive secretary of the A. A. A. A., in whose honor the luncheon was to have been given, telegraphed that he was unable to be present because the Navy advertising is to be handled by that association and he was in conference with the Navy committee.

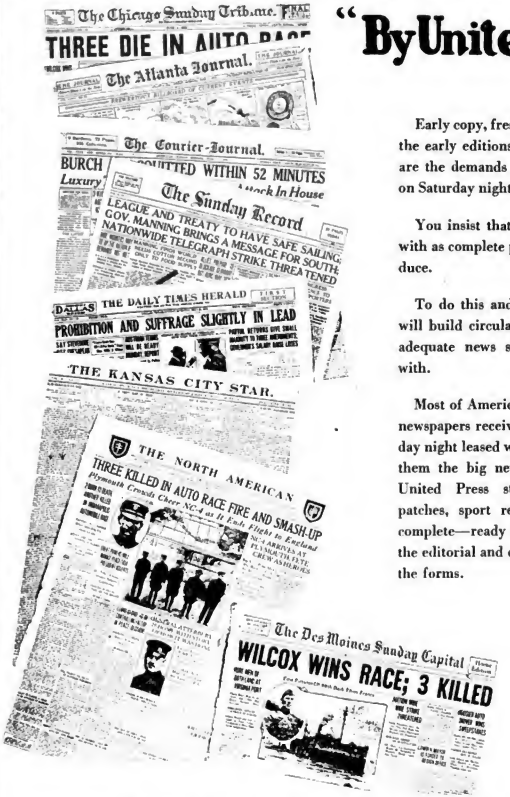
Mr. Barber, who started in the advertising agency line 35 years ago, stated that the present advertising is the most extraordinary the world has ever known and that the overwhelming portion of it will go into the newspapers. "The newspapers," Mr. Barber said, "are the only mediums sufficiently elastic to permit of the tremendous expansion which will be necessary." He declared the A. A. A. A. has elevated the advertising agency business to a degree hoped for by only a few. He said: "The trickster and the rate cutter have been barred forever and the 117 agencies comprising the association now handle 90 per cent of the advertising business of this country."

STEEN ORGANIZING A HOME

Announces Purchase of Site for I. E. A.—Raising $50,000

BEDFORD, Va., July 15.—The International Editorial Association, of which Clare Berger, Warren (Pa.) Mirror, is president, is reported to have purchased land in Bedford, Va., for an International Home for Newspaper Men.

Clyde P. Steen, president of the late National Association of City Editors, is "organizer" of this association and its projects. He announces plans to raise $50,000 by popular subscription to erect the proposed home. The I. E. A. purposes also to have insurance and benefit features.



S. W. Challenger Leaves Bridgeport

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 16.—After spending 31 of his 49 years as employe of the Bridgeport Post Publishing Company, Sidney W. Challenger will become managing editor of the Middletown Press July 21. URGES RIGHTS OF MANUFACTURERS TO ESTABLISH RESALE PRICES

Federal Trade Commission, in Special Report to Congress, Recommends Law Providing for Review of Sales Contracts by Government Board

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The Federal Commission in a special report to Congress today renewed its recommendation made last December that manufacturers be permitted by law to fix and maintain re-sale prices, subject to review by a disinterested agency.

The Commission says that such a law would remove present complexity in the business world, promote the efficiency of manufacturing and commercial institutions and serve the interest of the consuming public.

To Establish a Board of Review

Under the commission recommendation, manufacturers desiring to fix and maintain re-sale prices would file with an agency to be designated by Congress descriptions of their articles, contracts of sale, and the price schedules to be maintained. The disinterested agency would be charged with the duty, "upon complaint of any dealer or consumer or other party at interest," to review the terms of contracts and prices.

The commission's recommendations, it stated, were based on the following conclusions:

(1) That producers of identified goods should be protected in their intangible property right to good-will, created through years of fair dealing and of sustained quality of merchandise.

(2) That the unlimited power both to fix and to enforce and maintain re-sale prices may not be made lawful with safety; and,

(3) That unrestrained price-cutting is not in the public interest, and tends, in the long run, to impair, if not to destroy, the production and distribution of articles desirable to the public.

"There must be a common ground," the commission said, "wherein the rights of producer, purveyor and consumer may each be fully secured and equity done to all. The search for such a ground has been a task of the commission."

Text of Special Report

The text of the commission's special report to Congress follows:

"The Federal Trade Commission under paragraph (f), Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, addresses the Congress by way of a special report designed to direct attention to the subject of control of re-sale prices by the manufacturers of a class of articles in interstate commerce.

"The question is, whether or not a manufacturer of standard articles, identified either by trade-mark or trade practice, should be permitted to fix a contract, express or implied, the price at which the purchaser can re-sell them.

"The question has been continuously before the Commission since its creation. It has been the subject of study, investigation and hearing and constantly recurs in various forms, in complaints filed with the Commission by business concerns.

"The Supreme Court has made it clear that, in the present state of the law, the maintenance of a re-sale price by the producer, is a restraint of trade and is unlawful.

"Such being the judgment of the Supreme Court, the Federal Trade Commission has enforced the law, even though it may have appeared to operate inequitably in some cases. In its enforcement of this rule, the Commission has been mindful that the cutting of a recognized re-sale price on well-established and identified articles has been, at times, indulged in for unfair trade purposes. When so unfairly used, such price-cutting is attempted to be cloaked as lawful competition and justified by the Supreme Court decisions.

To End State of Confusion

"Thus, both price maintenance, and price-cutting under certain conditions, are found to be unfair, and business men are perplexed. It is with the desire that this perplexity may be terminated that the Commission addresses the Congress.

"It is urged, and, the Commission believes, with reason, that it would be unwise to vest with the manufacturers of articles the right, without check or review, both to fix and to compel the maintenance of re-sale prices. It is true that business practice inclines producers to fix the lowest possible retail price in order to secure the greatest possible sale of their product, but in the complex commercial organism functioning between the production of an article and its final sale, for actual consumption, both the wholesale and retail merchant are entitled to just compensation for useful service performed.

"It is similarly urged that manufacturers should be protected in their goodwill created by years of fair dealing and of sustained quality of merchandise.

"The consuming public does not enjoy benefits by unfair price-cutting to compensate it for the injuries following demoralization caused by price-cutting. This for the reason that, in the long run, unrestrained price-cutting tends to impair, if not to destroy, the production and distribution of articles desirable to the public.

Conclusions of the Commission

"There must be a common ground wherein the rights of producer, purveyor and consumer may each be fully secured and equity done to all. The search for such ground has been a task of the Commission and results in the following conclusions:

"(1) That producers of identified goods should be protected in their intangible property right of good-will.

"(2) That the unlimited power both to fix and to enforce and maintain a re-sale price may not be made lawful with safety.

"(3) That unrestrained price-cutting is not in the public interest.

"Bills now pending before Congress may well be made to meet the difficulties of the situation if amended to provide for a review of the terms of resale contracts and a revision of re-sale prices, by a disinterested agency.

"Therefore, it is recommended that it be provided by law that if the manufacturer of an article produced and sold under competitive conditions, desires to fix and maintain re-sale prices, he shall file with an agency designated by the Congress, a description of such article, the contract of sale and the price schedule which he proposes to maintain, and that the agency designated by the Congress be charged with the duty, either upon its own initiative or upon complaint of any dealer or consumer or other party in interest, to review the terms of such contracts and to revise such prices and that any data and information needful for a determination be made available to such agency.

"Such legislation would seem to be in accord with the spirit of the times in that it is designed, by removing this perplexity, to promote the efficiency of manufacturing and commercial institutions and so to serve the interest of the consuming public.

The Colgate Decision Cited

"The Commission respectfully renews its recommendation of December 2, 1918. The conditions surrounding the fixing and enforcement of the maintenance of re-sale prices have not materially changed since this recommendation was made. The recent decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Colgate & Co. has not apparently legalized contracts providing for the maintenance of re-sale prices, as the Court expressly stated that the indictment did not charge the existence of contracts in that case, and distinguished it from the case of Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons on that ground. If the decision be construed to hold it lawful, under the Sherman Law, for manufacturers to fix re-sale prices and to enforce the maintenance of such prices by refusal to sell to those who do not resell at the prices fixed, or by other means, it does not follow that the fixing and enforced maintenance of such prices is not an unfair method of competition within the meaning of Section 5 of the Trade Commission Act, in order to establish a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act a contract, combination or conspiracy must be proven. If many dealers but restrictions in trade be devised which does not fall within the definitions comprehended by these three terms as construed by the courts, it does not constitute a violation of the Act, though restraint of trade may result.

Deprives Public of Benefits

"The enforcement of re-sale prices no doubt in the hands of distributors is identical in its effect upon dealers and the public, whether it be accomplished by contract, combination or conspiracy, or by some other means. An unfair method of competition within the meaning of Section 5 may involve the use of contracts of the formation of combinations or conspiracy, but neither of the three is necessary to establish a method of competition. Indeed, unfair methods of competition do not ordinarily involve such contracts or conspiracies. The effect of price maintenance being the same, however accomplished, it may well be urged that such a method of competition violates Section 5 of the Commission Act since it prevents distributors, wholesale and retail, from engaging in price competition on such goods after they have passed into their hands and deprives the public of the benefits of competition in the distribution of all such goods.

"It might also be urged that when price maintenance is approached from the standpoint of an unfair method of competition, regard must be had to its effect when employed by many manufacturers rather than when employed by one, and that in this view it results in the elimination of that price competition in the distribution of a vital and constantly increasing number of commodities of common necessity.

"On the other hand, if the effect of the Colgate decision is to legalize the fixing and the enforcement of the maintenance of re-sale prices other than by contract, the desirability of the enacting of legislation recommended by the Commission becomes even more apparent. In the Commission's previous report it was stated that the unlimited power both to fix and enforce the maintenance of re-sale prices may not be made lawful with safety in the public. The interest of the consuming public in the enacting of such legislation is therefore more vital at this time than when recommendation was previously made."

—William B. Colver, John Franklin Fort, Victor Murdock, Huston Thompson, Commissioners.

Mr. National Advertiser, when you tell the retailer about your imposing campaign in national mediums and ask him to support it with local advertising, isn't that an admission of weakness?

Why is it the retailer's duty to advertise your business?

If your national campaign were effective, why should it be necessary for the dealer to advertise your product in his newspaper?

When a dealer give you his windows, counters, shelves, distributes your literature, what more can you justly expect?

How does this logic appeal to you: Spend the bulk of your appropriation with newspapers in localities where you or jobbers have induced retailers to handle your product. That is co-operation.

Don't expect the retailer to do your job.

NEWSPAPER SOCIETY CELEBRATES

Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, at 79th Banquet, Defends Official Press Bureau — Representative Gathering of Journalists

By Herbert C. Ridout

(London Editor of Editor & Publisher)

London, July 3.—Editor & Publisher was honored by an official invitation to the Newspaper Press Society banquet at Prince's Restaurant, London, recently, your London editor being present to witness one of the most representative gatherings of British newspaper magnates and makers ever held.

The evening was notable for two important pronouncements. One was by A. Illingworth, M.P., the British Postmaster-General, who, referring to Horatio Bottomley's suggestion in Parliament to impose a tax on advertisements, said that while he had the breath and the power to oppose such a thing, he could assure the company that there never would be a tax on advertisements in this country.

The speech that interested vitally every newspaperman present was that of the Lord High Chancellor (Lord Birkenhead) in his defence of the British Press Bureau. The Lord Chancellor said he was a fellow-student with Allan S. Jeans, the society's reigning president, and indulged in some witty thrusts at the expense of young men (he is but 48 himself) placed in high positions. He proceeded:

Lord Chancellor's Speech

"I specially welcome the opportunity of being present at the first dinner of the society which has taken place since the war broke out. I say quite boldly, and without the slightest note of apology, that I was the first director of the first press bureau that this country ever had.

"I am not sure that a careful analysis will not satisfy you that the part that was played by those who established the press bureau and those who carried it on was the most difficult, the most thankless, the most unwelcome, and almost the most responsible one that was undertaken by any individuals in the course of the war.

"I remember well the day on which I was sent for by Lord Kitchener, the then War Secretary, and Mr. Churchill, the then First Lord of the Admiralty. It came all in a moment, when it was quite certain that war was to come. They asked me if I would undertake to establish and organize a press bureau in this country. That ever other qualities I possessed I was not an expert in so important and delicate living could discharge those functions in a manner which would be acceptable not merely to the press, but to the general body of his countrymen. It was accordingly the first time I assert emptied over a free press, and it had to be done at once.

"Lord Burnham, who was a loyal and helpful friend—I relied on no one more than I did upon him—will bear me out in this, that on the first day I went there I realized that there could not be a press bureau the head of which should be the Minister who sits with the heads of other great government departments, should say: 'This is my decision,' and if it is challenged I go to the Cabinet and argue it out with the heads of other departments.'

A Different Task

"That never was and never could be the position of the press bureau. From the first I realized that in those grave and critical days, in which the fortunes of the whole empire had so decided in five days, you must be the mouthpiece of the War Office on the one hand and of the Admiralty on the other. I do not think there ever was a time when I and those two gifted and adored men so pour with Lord Kitchener and shortly an hour with Lord Churchill; and some day I hope perhaps write a history of those days and those conversations.

"I recall with great pleasure a memorandum I circulated to the Cabinet, in which I ventured to lay down the principle that a war must be entitled to refuse publication of any news unless such news was of a character that it was of value to the enemy, or, second, unless it had been proved by experience that previous pieces had never ceased to press upon those with whom I had the dealing that the only point that mattered was that you must not give information that assists the enemy, because I was certain in those days, as I am still certain, that you never need fear frightening this great and proud people, and that you only had to tell them the worst to get out of them the best.

"Therefore I come back to this, that the only rational basis upon which censorship ought to have been conducted was that nothing should be published between the press and the war but what was useful to the enemy, and which was not otherwise available to him. No one will ever say that the work of the press bureau was in any sense satisfactorily done.

"But it is necessary to ask in relation to what standards was the work will done or badly done. It could never be done satisfactorily to the press, or to the public, or to the army—the army would never have allowed you to have anything from first to last. Of course, you can make amusing stories about the press bureau.

"I myself never believed them. I never believe any stories about anybody. I am told that in the days of my successors—Sir Edward Cook could tell you—all kinds of things were suppressed, including fieldpiece] reels. Those stories may be true or not, but if my epitaph is ever written may it be that I never suppressed one fieldpiece test the whole time I was there. Of course, our decisions were sometimes stupid, and very often indefensible.

"The only defense that can be made for the soldiers who acted imposed those rules upon us is that quite suddenly the empire was projected into the greatest measure that has ever threatened it, and those formed who, after all, were primarily responsible, formed those new armies which saved us, and had a thousand decisions to take in the shortest period, and were not taking any chances."

Allan Jeans, editor of the Liverpool Daily Post, chairman of the Press Association and president of the society, was in the chair and those present included:

Lord Birkenhead, Lord High Chancellor; A. Illingworth, M.P., the British Postmaster-General; Lord Burnham; Sir George Toulmin, Lancashire Daily Post; Capt. A. E. Spender, Western Morning News; Hon. W. H. Triggs, Christchurch Press, of New Zealand; J. S. R. Phillips, Yorkshire Post; Sir Edward Cook, formerly chief of Press Bureau; Sir Edward Russell; Sir David Duncan, South Wales Daily News; Sir Edmund Robbins; Sir Alex G. Jeans; Rear Admiral Sir Reginald Hall, of the British Admiralty, and Frank R. Bird, secretary.

While at Harvard, where he specialized in historical and military subjects, Frank H. Simonds prophesied war with Spain to be inevitable weeks before McKinley declared war. He went with the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment to the scene of action.

After leaving college he came to New York and did splendid work on the Tribune and later on the New York Sun. He familiarized himself with European politics, making many trips to the other side, being fortunate enough to be in Athens when one of the Balkan wars broke out.

When the cloud preceding the present war first settled over Europe, Mr. Simonds wrote THE FIRST EDITORIAL ON THE WAR PUBLISHED IN THE UNITED STATES. It appeared in the Evening Sun, July 25, 1914. It boldly stated that there had been a challenge of Germany to Russia, of the Triple Alliance to the Triple Entente. Conditions developed so exactly in the manner prophesied by Mr. Simonds that the Morning Sun of July 26, instead of commenting on the situation, merely reprinted Mr. Simonds' editorial of the day before.

From that time on Frank H. Simonds has been THE MOST QUOTED AMERICAN IN EUROPE.

Mr. Simonds knows on terms of the closest intimacy and confidence all of the leading statesmen of England and France, including Clemenceau, Briand, Poincare, Lloyd George, Balfour, Asquith, Bryce, Churchill, Bonar Law, Northcliffe, etc.

Mr. Simonds has had published four volumes of his great history of the war. Thirteen thousand each of the three first volumes have been sold at the price of $3.50 per volume. The fourth volume is just out and there have been ordered 45,000 additional copies of the four volumes.

As Mr. Simonds has been for nearly five years the great interpreter of the war, so will he be the great interpreter of AFTER THE WAR, presenting and clarifying the complicated politics of the Old World—ordinarily far beyond the reach of the average newspaper reader.

Millions Are at Stake In Church Litigation

Evidence to Referee Shows Amazing Income of Christian Science Publications—Discord Extends from 1916

(BY TELEGRAPH)

BOSTON, July 14.—Control of a business amounting to millions of dollars is the stake at issue in the litigation between the publishing society trustees and the directors of the Christian Science Church, according to figures presented by John B. Watts, business manager of the Christian Science Publishing Company, at the hearing before Judge Frederick Dodge.

Mr. Watts testified that the gross income of the publishing society's publications last year was $4,173,429, as against a little over $2,000,000 in 1917, and much less in previous years. He admitted that if 90 per cent of the subscriptions fell off the publishing society would be in a condition readily described as "an empty shell," but he thought there would be new readers for any lost.

The hearing marked the closing of the evidence of the trustees of the publishing society, who, by their bill in equity are seeking to enjoin the directors of the Mother Church from interfering with the affairs of the society.

Several letters written by former employes of the publishing society, which Attorney William G. Thompson sought to introduce, were not read. Mr. Thompson stated that one letter, written by John K. Allen, who was advertising manager for the publication, was an able constructive criticism of the conduct of the Monitor, containing valuable suggestions for its improvement.

Letters and extracts from records were read to show friction between the trustees and the directors dating back to 1916.

GREATER PAPER PRODUCTION

Production by United States paper mills during the first six months of 1919 was 32,145 tons, or 6 per cent greater than during the first six months of 1918, according to the July bulletin of the News Print Service Bureau. The 39 reporting companies produced 150,938 tons and shipped 151,741 tons during June. Shipments exceeded production by only 803 tons. Production figures include 715 tons of hanging, of which 305 tons were made in Canada.

The United States mills shipped 1,175 tons less and the Canadian mills 12,063 tons more in the first six months of 1919 than in the corresponding period of 1918. Stocks during June decreased 930 tons at United States mill points and increased 1,454 tons at Canadian mills, making total stocks 525 tons more on June 30, 1919, than on May 31. The total of 35,424 tons on hand at all mills June 30 amounted to about six days' production.

Effingham Sutton Finch Dead

Effingham Sutton Finch, 78 years old, for many years in the advertising business in New York City, is dead in Brooklyn.

Virginia and Maryland each have five papers that were established more than a century ago and Tennessee, Kentucky and South Carolina each have two.

IF you had before you representative copies of each of the three leading Milwaukee newspapers —and you read and studied each one carefully then you'd understand why intelligent, thinking people read The Journal; why most people in Milwaukee read The Journal; why The Journal holds such an enormous lead in circulation, in advertising, in prestige.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat

FIRST ISSUE SUNDAY, AUGUST 10th

YOU Advertising Agents and Advertisers who are placing copy in Gravure Sections will be interested in our forthcoming new Artgravure Section for two reasons:

First—Because it will be the largest and finest Gravure Picture Section issued by any St. Louis newspaper.

Second—Because it will enable you to reach an immense public of the most desirable class in St. Louis and for 150 miles around—a public which heretofore you have been UNABLE to reach with Gravure Advertising.

The mechanical production of our new Artgravure Section is in the hands of Alco-Gravure, Inc., of New York. This is the Gravure process used by the New York Herald, New York Tribune, New York Sun, Washington Star, Baltimore Sun and other high-class newspapers.

The News' total of 6,015,394 lines for six months represents an average of more than a million lines p month—a truly remarkable showing when it is stated that previous to March of this year The News had ne reached a million lines in a single month, although it had long been close to that coveted goal.

The News' total of all lines of advertising for the six months was 67,690 lines in excess of the totals for th period of the other two Birmingham newspapers COMBINED, and its gain was 856,674 LINES IN EXCESS O THE COMBINED GAINS of the other two. Its gain approximated The Ledger's total.

The News' total of Local Display Advertising for the six months' period was 140,363 LINES IN EXCES of the total Local Display Advertising of the other two Birmingham Newspapers COMBINED.

COURT WILL REVIEW NEWSPRINT PRICES

Recognizes A. N. P. A.'s Appeal for Reconsideration of Federal Trade Commission's Findings for Period of May 1 to July 1, 1918

Dissatisfaction of members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association with supplemental findings of the Federal Trade Commission, fixing the maximum prices charged for news print paper as of May 1 and July 1, 1918, is to result in a review of such price fixing, by the U. S. Circuit Court at New York City, October 6.

This action will be taken by the Circuit Court judges on an application made to them by Acting U. S. Attorney General Alex C. King, as trustee under an arbitration agreement, for the publishers. His application to the judges reads as follows:

Terms of Agreement

"Under date of November 20, 1917, an agreement was made between Hon. Thomas W. Gregory, Attorney-General of the United States, and his successor or successors in office as Trustee acting thereunder in behalf of publishers of newspapers using news print paper in the United States and certain manufacturers of news print paper, whereby it was, among other things, provided that after April 1, 1918, the just and reasonable maximum prices and terms of contract for the sale of all or any news print paper should be determined and fixed by the Federal Trade Commission after due hearing and investigation, subject to review by the Circuit Judges of the Second Circuit, who, if of opinion that the prices and terms of contract fixed by the Commission were unjust and unreasonable, should determine what are just and reasonable.

"Such agreement further provides that the maximum prices and terms of contract so determined shall continue during the war and for three months thereafter, with the right to any of the manufacturers, parties of the second part, or to the Department of Justice to ask the Federal Trade Commission for an investigation and determination of new prices or terms of contract whenever, during such period, conditions arise which in the opinion of either make it desirable to ask for any change in prices or terms of contract, subject, however, to the same right of review.

The Court's First Ruling

"Following the making of such agreement and on or about the 18th day of June, 1918, the Federal Trade Commission, after due hearing and investigation, made a report fixing the terms of contract and prices of news print paper as of April 1, 1918. Upon an application by the manufacturers a review of the findings of the Federal Trade Commission was had before you and under date of September 25, 1918, you made an award varying the prices fixed by the Federal Trade Commission and directing that the following be established as the fair and reasonable maximum prices for news print paper effective April 1, 1918, to wit:

	Per Cwt.
Roll news in car lots, f.o.b. mill	$3.50
Roll news in less than car lots, f.o.b. mill	3.62½
Sheet news in car lots, f.o.b. mill	3.90
Sheet news in less than car lots, f.o.b. mill	4.02½

"Pending said review and on July 29th and 30th, 1918, hearings were had before the Federal Trade Commission on an application of the manufacturers to fix new prices as of May 1st, June 1st and July 1st, 1918.

"Under date of October 18, 1918, the Federal Trade Commission made supplemental findings whereby they fixed the following maximum prices effective May 1, 1918:

	Per Cwt.
Roll news in car lots, f.o.b. mill	$3.62½
Roll news in less than car lots, f.o.b. mill	3.75
Sheet news in car lots, f.o.b. mill	4.03½
Sheet news in less than car lots, f.o.b. mill	4.15⅝

and whereby they fixed the following maximum prices effective July 1, 1918, to wit:

	Per Cwt.
Roll news in car lots, f.o.b. mill	$3.75
Roll news in less than car lots, f.o.b. mill	3.87½
Sheet news in car lots, f.o.b. mill	4.15⅝
Sheet news in less than car lots, f.o.b. mill	4.27½

Hearing Was Denied

"Thereafter an application was made to the Federal Trade Commission for a rehearing with respect of the application of the manufacturers regarding new prices as of May 1st, June 1st and July 1st, 1918, which application, together with an application of the Attorney-General on behalf of the publishers for a new investigation and the fixing of new prices as of August 1, 1918, was denied by the Federal Trade Commission March 28, 1919.

"On behalf of newspaper publishers, upwards of four hundred in number, members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, I request that you review said supplemental findings of the Federal Trade Commission of October 18, 1918, and the prices established thereby, and that if upon such review you are of the opinion that the prices fixed by the Commission by said supplemental findings are unjust or unreasonable, you determine what are just and reasonable prices effective as of May 1st and July 1st, 1918.

"All proceedings on the part of the newspaper publishers in connection with the review by you of said supplemental findings will be conducted by their counsel."

Legal Counsel Act

The application of the Attorney-General for a review of the findings of the Federal Trade Commission was transmitted to the Circuit Court judges by George W. Wickersham of the law firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, and Guthrie B. Plante, of the firm of Morris, Plante & Saxe, representing the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Word that the Circuit Court, through its senior member, Judge Henry G. Ward, had granted the application was transmitted formally by the attorneys mentioned to Henry A. Wise, counsel for the group of news print manufacturers who were parties to the arbitration agreement.

History of Appeal

Last December the American Newspaper Publishers Association asked the Federal Trade Commission to reopen the news print hearings, on the ground that it had evidence to show that the price set for July 1 should have been lower because cost of production had decreased.

The Trade Commission refused to undertake reconsideration of the case on the ground that it did not have an appropriation at its disposal large enough to meet the expenses that would be involved.

The publishers then appealed to the Attorney-General, who, under the price-fixing agreement, was their trustee, asking that proper steps be taken to safeguard their interests. The matter has thus been in his hands without action until now.

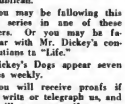
Though the war-time price agreement will have expired by the time the case comes up before the Circuit Court in October, if the publishers' contentions are upheld, they may secure a rebate for the period in question, if nothing more.

L. E. Elbert Marries

NEW ORLEANS, La., July 15.—Louis C. Elbert, managing editor of the Galveston Daily News, and Miss Marie Peters, of Los Angeles, were married here July 5. Mr. and Mrs. Elbert spent a week in New Orleans, after which they visited in California, and will return to Galveston to make their home about July 27.

Newark Ledger Merges Editions

NEWARK, N. J., July 11.—Lucius T. Russell, publisher of the Evening and Morning Ledger, has discontinued the evening edition and merged it with the morning issue "because of the high price of paper, materials and labor." Arthur Brisbane recently denied that he had bought an interest in this paper.



The two accompanying cuts give you an idea of the draughtsmanship of Robert L. Dickey, particularly of his ability in drawing dogs.

These are two of the characters of the humorous six-column strips of Dickey's Dogs, released last week in the New York Globe, the Boston Post, the Philadelphia North American, the Baltimore Evening and Sunday Sun and the Springfield Republican.

You may be following this new series in one of these papers. Or you may be familiar with Mr. Dickey's contributions to "Life."

Dickey's Dogs appear seven times weekly.

SIX MONTHS OF CONTINUED ADVERTISING ACHIEVEMENT!

The St. Louis Star was the only St. Louis newspaper to show gains in total advertising during 1918, and despite this fact, the first six months of 1919 show The Star piling up phenomenal increases in both foreign and local advertising, publishing more advertising, week days, of various classifications, than TWO and sometimes THREE of its contemporaries combined.

The gain in total paid advertising for the first six months of 1919 was

435,471

LINES

The following figures show how The Star, during the first six months of 1919 published more local advertising, week days, of important classifications than the other St. Louis newspapers.

The Star carried 18,591 lines more local advertising week days during the month of June than the Globe-Democrat.

For thirty-five consecutive months The Star has published more local display advertising, week days, than the Globe-Democrat, the Times, or the Republic.

The Star's gain in national advertising for the first six months of 1919 averages more than 93%, which is greater than that of any other St. Louis daily newspaper.

All through the abnormal period of 1918, when the other papers were showing losses, The Star was recording nothing but gains. This year The Star is showing gains made over gains, the other papers gains made over losses.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among non-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines of advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in new business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial in many ways—it has made new advertisers and helped circulation—it has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for twenty weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

Better Advertising Means More Advertising

GOOD WILL born of public confidence makes men and institutions grow and prosper. Men of vision who have toiled step by step for more than a generation to build a place for themselves in the mind and heart of the public know this. Written contracts are unnecessary with them—their word is as good as their bond.

To make the written word—the advertising of all business as good as its bond—in America, in Canada, England, France, Australia—everywhere that the idea has spread, our National Vigilance Committee is working, with the support and active help of sixteen local Better Business Bureaus and eighty volunteer vigilance organizations.

Out of a hundred advertisers not more than one or two intentionally misstate or mislead, and only a few more are dangerously careless. To drive from advertising the out and out crook, to reason stoutly and persistently with the thoughtless few, to add to the number of careful promisers and thus to increase the already high regard of the public for one of the newest and greatest forces of modern business, our Vigilance Committees and Better Business Bureaus are striving and asking for support.

We believe the consumer is entitled to exactly what he is promised and what he pays for.

We believe the careful advertiser should not be compelled to keep company in the mediums he patronizes with the grossly careless or clearly crooked.

The Associated Advertising Clubs is fifteen years old. The marked increase of public confidence in advertising in large measure is due to the rising standard of advertising practice promoted by organized advertising. In the days ahead, more than ever before, better advertising will mean more advertising.

While much has been accomplished there is much yet to do to promote and protect reader confidence in advertising. For the extended plan requiring a budget of $141,000 per year and to which national advertisers are lending splendid support in the way of larger sustaining memberships,

JASON ROGERS WANTS STANDARD ACCOUNTS

Publisher of New York Globe Submits to Confreres Throughout the United States Recommendations Made at His Suggestion by Experts

Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, is sending to newspaper publishers throughout the United States forms for standardizing newspaper accounting, which were prepared at his suggestion by Klein, Hinds & Finks, certified public accountants, the official auditors of the Globe. In a letter accompanying this data, Mr. Rogers says:

"It is unnecessary for me to add anything to this explanation of the sheets, other than to state that I obtained samples of forms used by other newspapers, which I turned over to the accountaots with a request that they work out a single form which would reflect all essential data.

To Fit All Papers

"Out of the resulting comment, we may be able to produce two or three types of forms to fit small newspapers as well as large ones, and yet produce figures which will be of comparative value."

In a letter addressed to Mr. Rogers by the Globe accountants, they state:

"You put your finger on the weakest element in existing newspaper keeping practice when you pointed out that it is impossible, at the present time, for one newspaper publisher to make comparison of his departmental expenses with those of another newspaper, because no uniform method of classification is followed.

"For example, one publisher may charge the press room for depreciation of presses, while another may charge depreciation to general expense or omit it altogether from his calculations. Some publishers prorate over the different departments such items as interest, taxes and insurance, while others charge them to general expense. It must be obvious that under such a wide variety of methods no two editorial, advertising or composition departments can be readily compared. It appears to us that the best interests of newspaper publishers will be served by adopting a uniform accounting system patterned along the lines herein presented.

Simplifying Methods

"The introduction of a uniform accounting system for newspapers does not necessarily entail additional work. It merely requires the general adoption, by publishers of newspapers throughout the country, of an agreed upon scheme of revenue and expense classification; that is, in popular terms, corresponding pigeon holes for similar revenues and expenses. After the uniform system has been adopted, newspaper publishers must be careful not to transpose items from one department to another. For example, if insuraoce is segregated under the heading of 'general expense,' it should not be distributed among the different departments of the enterprise. Wherever two or more possible ways of handliog an expense charge exist, our proposed plan provides the simplest of the methods in order to make the plan as easy to follow as possible.

"One of the fundamental priciples of a good accounting system is that each accounting period, such as a calendar month, should be charged for all of the expenses belonging to it and for no more. It is accordingly necessary that the wages applicable to the editions published during the period should be charged to the period. Thus, if the payrolls for a certain month cover five weeks or thirty editions, and only twenty-five editions fell within the calendar month, the proper plan would be to charge only 25-30 of the payroll disbursements to the month. Another item which is frequently handled incorrectly is that of insurance. The premiums usually run for a year or more. These should be prorated over the periods covered by the premiums in order to obtain the correct amount of expense each month. The same principle also applied to taxes."

MANY "R. F. D." ROUTES RESTORED BY P. O.

Work of Newspaper Publishers Brings Results—Farmers of New York State Were Without Mail for Days at a Time

TROY, N. Y., July 16.—Thanks to the work of Jerome D. Barnum, of the Syracuse Post-Standard, and David B. Plum, of the Troy Record, the Post Office today ordered restored scores of rural free delivery routes in New York State and changed others along the lines suggested by the newspapers.

Several months ago the Postmaster-General ordered many R. F. D. routes abandoned for the sake of economy, thereby causing much delay and inconvenience to the thousands of farmers off the main roads of travel. Many complained that they had to go without mail for days at a time before they could go to the nearest postmaster and get it. In particular newspaper mail delay caused the strong protest.

The Syracuse Post-Standard and the Troy Record took the matter in hand and organized their readers to demand restoration of service. Several trips were made to Washington by delegations gathered by these newspapers, at which conferences were held with Post Office officials. The result is today's order.

Post office investigators are still hearing complaints in the State, the inspectors having maintained headquarters during the past week at Glens Falls, taking note of conditions in Washington County.

San Francisco Examiner
Monarch of the Dailies

A concentrated local circulation and a thick spread of radial circulation covering Northern-Central California is the prime reason for the San Francisco Examiner's popularity with advertisers. The San Francisco Examiner blankets the bay region of San Francisco with an intensive circulation. It reaches out in every direction to the farthest northern, southern and eastern posts of Northern-Central California. It is a signal factor in shaping and directing the buying habits of the larger part of the State. Through its radial circulation it wields large dealer, as well as general consumer, influence.

DOMINATES
the richest and most populous section of the Pacific Coast

No other newspaper in Northern-Central California approaches the San Francisco Examiner in circulation values. Nor is it an ephemeral supremacy. For upwards of thirty years the San Francisco Examiner has maintained circulation priority in its field. The sustained gap between the San Francisco Examiner and its nearest competitor year after year is sufficient demonstration of the favor this newspaper holds with its readers. This favor goes to the bed-rock of editorial superiority and a ready appreciation of it by the public.

The figures which we have tabulated below are worth your careful attention. Read them—study them. They will show you conclusively why the San Francisco Examiner will give you market-command in the largest and richest field on the Pacific Coast.

COURT UPHOLD RIGHTS OF CARTOONISTS

"Bud" Fisher's Four-Year-Old Case Against Star Company Again Decided in His Favor by Appellate Division of New York Court

A new rule at law that is likely to have a wide application in the newspaper field hereafter has been established by the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court in affirming unanimously, without comment, a decision of a lower court in favor of Harry C. ("Bud") Fisher and against the Star Company, publisher of the New York American.

The case has been in the courts ever since August 4, 1915, when Mr. Fisher obtained a temporary injunction against the Star Company, restraining it from using the words "Mutt and Jeff" as a name or trade-mark for any cartoons not drawn by him, and from publishing any cartoons drawn by another artist in imitation of the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoons.

Unfair Competition

The action was brought and tried and the judgment against the Star Company was rendered on the theory of unfair competition, there being no question of copyright involved.

The contention of counsel for Mr. Fisher was that, having left the employ of the New York American, and having contracted to give the Wheeler Syndicate the exclusive right to sell his cartoons for newspaper publication, he had the sole right to dispose of "Mutt and Jeff" thereafter as he thought proper.

"It must be remembered," reads the brief which Mr. Fisher's counsel submitted to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, "that the real purchaser of these cartoons is the whole newspaper reader. It is to the reader that Mr. Fisher really sells his cartoons. If the interest of the reader in them is impaired, Mr. Fisher loses the interest of that reader and ultimately the sale of his cartoons to the newspaper in question.

"Should the Star Company be permitted to publish and sell imitation cartoons, certainly newspaper readers will be confused in knowing the genuine from the imitation and irreparable loss will be suffered by Mr. Fisher.

"There is no dearth of subjects and titles for cartoons. The Star Company's artists are free to choose any one of hundreds of other subjects and titles than 'Mutt and Jeff.' To permit them to publish imitation 'Mutt and Jeff' cartoons would be to permit them deliberately to rob Mr. Fisher of the product of his creative genius and to trade on his established good will and reputation."

Star Company's Views

The Star Company contended that since Mr. Fisher never, himself, published a newspaper, he could never acquire the right to the trade-mark for his cartoons which were first published in newspaper, an argument seemingly based on the "Buster Brown" case of the New York Herald Company against the Star Company.

In this case, the court held that the Herald had exclusive right to the use of the words "Buster Brown," because it had carried for many years those words as a title of a comic section of the newspaper.

Counsel for Mr. Fisher in the case just decided, argued, however, that in the "Buster Brown" case there was a specific article of merchandise, namely, a "comic section of a newspaper," to which the Herald Company had applied, and for which it exclusively had used the words "Buster Brown" as a name and a trade-mark, while the Star Company never had used the words "Mutt and Jeff" as name, title or trade-mark.

The "Mutt and Jeff" cartoons are now being sold to newspapers by the Bell Syndicate, of which John N. Wheeler, formerly of the Wheeler Syndicate, is president.

NAVY DEPT. APPROVES ADVERTISING

"The best plan, we believe, is to pool our interests and handle the advertising in a body. The Bureau of Navigation made it clear to us that they did not care to deal with a group of agencies, but desire to have established a single point of contact."

Mr. Faust emphasized the fact that the men in the various agencies of the country had been active in government advertising during the war and were able to aid greatly in their particular localities in making such advertising a success.

All Agencies Can Help

Secretary Daniels at this point interrupted to ask if agencies outside the A. A. A. A. would participate in the Navy recruiting campaign, and to this Mr. Faust replied that the doors of the association were open to any reputable agency that was able to render service.

"I am familiar with the way the advertising campaign was handled for the Railway Administration," said Frank Presbey, "and there were only six complaints from agencies who hadn't been given advertising."

Secretary Daniels said that this was the first time he had been willing to consider a campaign of this character for recruits because previously the Navy had had more applicants for enlistment than it needed.

"The newspapers of the country have been exceedingly fine in the support they have given the Navy Department," he added. "I may state my conviction here that next to the men who actually participated in the fighting abroad, I believe the newspapers of this country did most to win the war for us."

Fair Play for Papers

He said he was convinced that it was not fair to ask newspaper publishers to contribute paper and ink without fair services to the Government, and that the policy of paid advertising was sound.

In speaking for the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Thomas H. Moore, associate director, said:

"The Bureau of Advertising gave its hearty support and assistance to the advertising campaigns of both the War Department and the Railroad Administration, and both of them were highly successful. We are ready and eager to give the same support to the Navy campaign.

"While I do not want to appear as an advocate of the agencies' plan, it is one that seems to be eminently sound, and it is backed by men whose integrity and responsibility is unquestioned."

Part A. A. A. A. Will Play

James O'Shaughnessy, executive secretary of the A. A. A. A., made the following statement on the request of EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"The new wings about the Navy campaign is that it is to be handled by a great national body forming an advertising agency which embraces all of the members of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

"It was not with a view to direct profits that the composite agency idea was presented to Secretary Daniels. It was done in order that Government advertising might be handled in such a manner as to avoid any possible criticism that could be leveled at the so-called profiteer.

"The heads of the Government departments are responsible to the public for their every act. They are liable to criticism on the slightest pretext. They may be subjected to fault finding from every direction. By combining all of the agencies who form the organized ethical element in the advertising business into a single agency for the purpose of serving the Government, all criticism which could find a willing ear will be avoided at once.

"By making such an agency every publisher in the entire country could feel instantly that he should approve whatever was done by the combined wisdom and skill of all the agencies.

Publishers Assure Co-operation

"The publishers will appreciate that the sacrifice the members of the American Association of Advertising Agencies are making in throwing the potentials of all their organizations into this composite agency is a further understanding for the great and ultimate benefit of business generally.

"We are very happy in the flood of assurances we have received from the press of publishers, however, that they regard our undertaking in this matter as the greatest possible service to advertising and publishing interests.

"It should be, of course, distinctly understood that this composite agency which we have formed is to give service to the United States Government only, and not to any one else."

EMPLOYES SHARE IN PROFITS

Des Moines Owners Give Each Worker Extra Week's Pay

DES MOINES, Ia., July 15.—Following a custom established in 1917, the Register & Tribune Company has again shared with its employes out of its earnings for the fiscal year of 1919 a bonus equal to one week's salary to each. With each present was the following note from Gardner Cowles, president:

"We have had a very successful year, and one been with the company continuously for the past twelve months, shall receive an amount equal to one week's regular salary. Employes who have been with the company less than twelve months will receive an amount equal to the proportionate part of one week's salary.

"Whether similar distributions can be made in the future will necessarily depend upon the success of our business.

"The Register and Tribune Company can have no better asset than the active co-operation and loyalty of its more than three hundred and fifty regular employes. We ask your continued assistance in helping to build wastes and unnecessary expense of every kind.

"We want you to feel that you are a part of this business and to take a personal interest in its success and growth."

ABIDE BY BILL POSTING LAW

President Chennell, of A. O. A. A., Urges Recognition of Chicago Ordinance

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 11.—In his annual address before the annual convention of the American Outdoor Advertising Association here today, George Chennell of Columbus, Ohio, who was re-elected president, urged all organizations represented in the national body to voluntarily make the so-called Chicago ordinance a guide for the future policy of the industry.

The ordinance in question forbids the erection of billboards in any residential district where more than 50 per cent. of the residents object. It has been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court.

C. E. Persons Is Managing Editor

SACRAMENTO, Cal., July 16.—C. Edgar Persons, formerly president of the San Francisco Press Club and news editor of the Western Division of the Associated Press, has been made managing editor of the Sacramento Union, recently acquired by Ben S. Allen, former A. P. man, and John Craig. More recently Mr. Persons was associated with Herbert Hoover in handling publicity for the United States Food Administration.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS FOR WORLD NEWS

"The actual operations of the Paris office have been in charge of Herman Suter, who is well known to American newspaper men, having been managing editor of the Nashville Tennessean and of the Philadelphia Times.

"Personally, I devoted much of my time to the various problems involved in international communication by telegraph, cable and radio. The American press in the future will be getting news from more and more points. There is a demand for American news all over the world. Obviously, news distribution is largely determined by availability of communication facilities and by the rates charged.

Seek News from Here

"Not only have we found a demand for American news, but in many of the countries where is no demand, that a demand can be easily created, but we have been using radio all over the world and know something about its possibilities. For example, a news service not mentioned above of four hundred words was prepared by our Paris office and along with similar services prepared by the French, British and Italians, was broadcasted from Eiffel Tower. This interallied news service was intercepted at Archangle in Northern Russia, Omsk in Siberia, and as far south as Lake Tohad in Africa. Hundreds of radio stations intercepted this news service, so many in fact that, we gave up trying to keep track of it. We found that news radiord by the navy from the Atlantic coast could be readily intercepted by the American receiving station at Constantinople.

"At America's suggestion, with a view to putting some order into the international telegraph, cable, and radio of the world, a conference called and associated powers agreed to convene an international congress to consider the communications problem in all its aspects."

DURING THE WAR CANADIANS DEPRIVED THEMSELVES MANY THINGS THEY ARE BUYING THEM NOW

Food, clothes, house furnishings and other commodities in which economies were effected during the war are now being freely bought regardless of higher prices. All the automobiles that it is possible to secure are being absorbed by Canadian trade and there is a crying need for more.

Vigorous advertising and salesmanship will now win the Canadian market with less effort in most lines than at any other time within fifteen years.

And the following daily newspapers offer the most economical and forceful way to capture that market.

Canadian newspapers have taken ups and downs during the war. Some amalgamations and failures have strengthened those which remained. Circulations, generally speaking, are greater today on a two cent basis than on the one cent basi sof pre-war times.

Already the advance agents of industrialism are on the field. Large business interests are making extensive industrial investments. NOW is the time to get busy.

A growing realization of the wealth and resources of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec where nearly two thirds of Canada's population is centered makes this area the logical starting point to create and promote Canadian sales.

Daily newspaper advertising occupies a new status today. Its development in Canada was even more marked than in the United States. It took up and made good in Canada on every war opportunity and these opportunities concerned everything from raising money to selling bonds, to securing recruits and altering habits of the people.

GAINS IN ADVERTISING VOLUME OVER 1918 SPELL PROSPERITY

Growth Has Been General Throughout Country, Demonstrating the Vital Part Newspaper Advertising Is Playing in the Business Revival.

IN the issue of last week EDITOR AND PUBLISHER printed the record of advertising lineage carried by more than fifty leading newspapers for the first six months of 1918 and for the same period in 1919, with figures showing the net gain made by each newspaper.

The gains shown were so remarkable as to have caused wide comment among newspaper and advertising men. Thirty of these newspapers exhibited gains of more than a million lines each, two of them running above the three million mark; while the smallest gain noted amounted to more than 36,000 lines.

Further reports, received within the last week, indicate that this wonderful growth in volume over last year has been general. In some instances the gains shown over the corresponding period of 1918 would, in themselves, constitute an impressive total volume of business for almost any newspaper.

SEND NEWSPAPERS TO ENGLAND IN 3 DAYS

New York Times and Philadelphia Public Ledger Reach Noted Men by English "Blimp"—Realization of Lord Northcliff's "Aeriport"

LONDON, July 14, 1919.—Photographs taken in the United States and brought to England by the English dirigible, "R-34," on its return trip, were printed in newspapers here this morning. This is looked upon as the first step toward the realization of Viscount Northcliff's recent prophecy that a quick interchange of New York and London newspapers and photographs by aerial post was a possibility of the near future.

King George of Great Britain is said to have been the first Englishman to receive a newspaper from the United States by the "R-34," getting a copy of the New York Times.

Earl Reading, the Lord Chief Justice and ex-Ambassador to the United States, also received a copy of the Times as did General Pershing. Earl Reading wrote in reply to the London correspondent of the Times:

"I hope and believe this to be the brilliant first step toward establishment of a regular service that will enable the daily press of each of our countries to circulate freely and speedily in the other, and so will cement even more closely the bonds that knit the two peoples together."

The same afternoon Cyrus H. K. Curtis, proprietor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, who is now in London, presented Lord Stamfordham with a copy of the Ledger, brought over on the R-34.

The London Times says: "This is a historic mark in transatlantic postal service. A newspaper arrived at Buckingham Palace three days, nine hours and thirty-six minutes after the airship's departure from New York."

WRONG PICTURE CAUSES SUIT

Newspaper, Sued for $50,000, Claims Unintentional Error

MILWAUKEE, Wis., July 15.—The Milwaukee Journal's answer to the $50,000 suit of Alderman Seidel denies that publication of the plaintiff's picture which the action is based, was intentional. "The picture was published by mistake and without intent to harm Mr. Seidel," says the Journal. "Eight thousand papers containing the picture were run off before the mistake was discovered. The press was stopped and the picture removed. All the 53,000 papers were gathered up and destroyed."

The suit is based on the fact that the Journal ran the picture with those of certain Socialists who had been indicted by the grand jury on the charge of violating the Espionage Act. The answer says that throughout the reading matter accompanying the pictures there was no statement that Alderman Seidel had been indicted.

Two Things For Which

New Jersey

Has Been Famous—

"Lightning" and

Mosquitoes

Please put the emphasis on the "has been"— for "Jersey Lightning" has gone the way of all the misused alcoholics, and the mosquito is fast being exterminated.

This much may be said in memoriam—both "Jersey Lightning" and "Jersey 'skeeters'" had PEP.

And there is this to say of the State that grows everything from Presidents down and produces everything from phonorgaph needles to ocean liners—it has a population full of pep, enterprise, initiative—that its people are earning big money and spending a goodly portion of it almost lavishly.

IN THE ISSUE OF JULY 24, 1919

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

WILL PRESENT A COMPLETE LIST OF THE ENGLISH-LANGUAGE

DAILY NEWSPAPERS of the UNITED STATES

TOGETHER WITH DATA AS TO THEIR NET PAID CIRCULATIONS AS OF APRIL 1 AND THEIR AGATE LINE ADVERTISING RATES AS OF JULY 1, 1919.

THIS will constitute an up-to-date revision of the data first and exclusively published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, January 11, 1919.

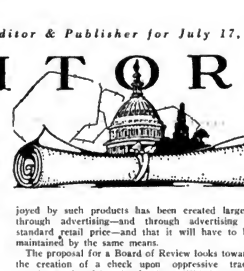
The revisions have been made by Justin F. Barbour, of the Barbour Advertising Rate Sheets, Incorporated, and are accurate and authoritative so far as patient research and vigilance can make them.

This feature supplements the previous tables, which have been in daily use for reference by practically all space buyers in America since their first publication.

Thousands of extra copies of these lists have been purchased in the past few months for the use of agencies and national advertisers. The demand for the revised lists and data will be still greater, and the issue of July 24th will be on file for ready reference in the offices of all worth-while space buyers for the next six months. These figures will be used in estimating the costs of all the big Fall campaigns.

The practical, service value of this information is obvious, and the fact that, until EDITOR & PUBLISHER furnished it to its readers, it had been unobtainable except at great expense—too great to be considered by any but the largest agencies—gives to the feature wholly exceptional interest.

The publisher of a daily newspaper, whose message to national advertisers shall appear in this number, will secure a hearing which will have special and timely force. His sales argument will be before space buyers in the course of their work in planning campaigns and selecting mediums. These advertisements will be CURRENT and TIMELY for half a year after their publication—and that fact should not be lost upon far-seeing publishers!



Make your space reservations at once, by wire, and get copy to us as early as possible!

CONTROL OF RESALE PRICES

IN a special report to the Congress the Federal Trade Commission submits recommendations for price maintenance legislation in line with these conclusions, reached by the commissioners after exhaustive study of this perplexing problem: (1) That producers of identified goods shall be protected in their intangible property right or good will; (2) That the unlimited power both to fix and to enforce and maintain a resale price may not be made lawful with safety; (3) That unrestrained price cutting is not in the public interest.

It is further suggested that "bills now pending before the Congress may be made to meet the difficulties of the situation if amended to provide for a review of the terms of resale contracts and a revision of resale prices by a disinterested agency."
